Hays on Guard

Determined to Keep "Sexy" Books and Titles Off Screen—Excerpts From Addresses

The complete text of the letter read by Col. Jason Joy on behalf of Will H. Hays before the League of American Pen Women in Washington contains an interesting assertion regarding the production of books that have doubtful titles. That portion of the Hays letter read as follows:

"Our Association is determined to do everything possible to prevent the more or less prevalent type of book from making any serious inroad toward becoming the prevalent type of picture; to try to make certain that there is recognition of the fact that that which may be produced in a spoken drama, or written in a book or newspaper, in many instances cannot be made the subject matter of a motion picture; to try to make certain that only books or stories are used which are of the right type for screen presentation; to avoid the picturization of books or plays which can be produced only after such changes as to leave the producer subject to the charge of deception, and to avoid using titles which are indicative of a kind of picture which could not be produced, or by their suggestiveness seek to obtain attendance by deception, a thing equally reprehensible."

Col. Joy read a paper of his own in which he said that a survey had shown that 750 former journalists were now engaged in the production end of the business. Discussing the present trend toward economy, he declared scores of capable women at the moment were without unemployment because of temporary suspensions in production.

Ralph Block, managing editor of the story department of Famous Players said, in part:

"I know that it is generally believed that the producer selects and changes titles arbitrarily out of pure willfulness. As a matter of truth, the producer is artistically much wiser than many of his conscientious critics. The producer alone understands that audiences are not born, but must be created, and that no entertainment exists successfully unless it creates its own audience. It is the motion picture title which performs a very large part of this function. The producer knows that he must have in electric lights names and phrases that will strike at the time-sharpened imagination of his potential audience. He knows that a significant title will create an audience out of an unformed mass of people uniting them in bondage to one idea.

"I am aware that there is a general prophecy that some day the screen writer will occupy the same position as the stage dramatist. In my opinion, this will come true only to a very limited extent. No doubt as motion picture distribution is divided up into its various elements and certain theaters exist for certain kinds of entertainment and certain kinds of audiences, there will then be a sufficient incentive for creative minds of the first order to write directly for the screen, after they have learned the capacities and limitations of the form. But in the end, no visualized drama can ever be actually written, it can only be produced; and when the screen reaches an adult age, its great figures will be creators who embody in themselves all the logical imagination of the writer and the visualizing power of the artist and the director. The great screen figures will always be screen producers, not merely writers, nor merely directors."

WHY?

By DANNY

When the cockles of your heart warm—when your vest is a bit tight—and you feel very good about this business—write column four—don't forget this: that one of the reasons for the big advance at the office—the big interest—is the finer and better picture. No other cause can be attributed the splendid show—the theater has made during the past nine months. Business agencies tell of a slump, of curd buying, etc., but this business has kept merrily on its way. Which is fine.

Don't overlook this: that the business you are having, and you had, can keep up only with a continuance of this type of material. The summer months are in sight. Agencies to buy cheaper product with many, natural. It won't do. The quicker you forget it, Mr. Exhibitor, the better off you will be.

Go after the good pictures. If they cost a few dollars more, don't bother about it. Pay for them and keep your clientele happy. Good showmanship will help a lot, too. Keep the people coming to the box office. Give them no opportunity to go autoing these fine spring days. Make your show so attractive that they will be compelled to come. And your regulars will be with you right along.

"Pick" Rowland and his party are from New Orleans. And happy they are so pepped up it's hard to talk to them without being infected with their contagion. "You know that crowd of franchise holders, don't you?", asked Rowland, "and I tell you that after seeing 'The Hawk'—and they started it after night—this crowd cheered like you'll have an idea of what we are in this picture."

Yes, Dick, we do know those 26 franchise holders. Know them pretty well. Perhaps better than that. And they can cheer anything at 1.30 A. M. It must be good. Because when it comes down to analyzing box of-

Changes

Paul N. Lazarus Resigns from United Artists—Abe C. Berman Quits Foreign Post

Paul N. Lazarus, general sales manager for United Artists and an official of that organization since its inception five years ago has resigned. He declared yesterday there was nothing he could say about his future plans. Hiram Abrams has appointed T. Y. Henry, Lazarus' successor. Henry has been associated with Abrams in various film enterprises for a decade.

Lazarus joined United Artists from Vitagraph and was first placed in charge of advertising and publicity. He later gradually took over sales control until he was finally appointed general sales manager.

Abe C. Berman, likewise an old employee of United has resigned. He was in charge of foreign sales and has been succeeded by Monte Spele, who has been with the company for several years. Berman has been Canadian manager, New York manager and head of Allied Artists (British).

More Changes Reported

It was reported yesterday that additional changes in the United Artist's personnel would develop later in the week, but Hiram Abrams stated he knew nothing about any such report.

1923-24 Theater Business Tops Previous Year's Record By Millions

Month by Month, Admission Taxes for Current Season Show Increase Over 1922-1923—Nine Months' Total Ending in March Reaches $57,767,266 As Compared With $51,171,209 in Corresponding Period

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Washington—Compilation of admission tax returns from July, 1923 and ending with March, 1924 shows a consistent up-trend, month by month during that period. The figures indicate that theater business for that nine months' interval exceeds the corresponding period during 1922-1923 by many millions.

Tax totals from July, 1923 to March, 1924 reached $57,767,266 as compared with $51,171,209 during the same period of the previous year. This is an increase of $6,596,057 and represents millions of additional dollars spent at theater box-offices by the public.

A comparative statement reveals the extremely interesting and important fact that each month during the last half of 1923 and the first quarter of 1924 the Government figures indicate a greater volume of business as compared with the corresponding month of the previous year. In January, 1924, the total was $7,576,991, an increase of $500,000 over December, 1923 and exactly $810,783 more than in January of 1923. Likewise, it is interesting to note that January figures represented the finest business at the box-office since June, 1921, or in about two years and a half.

A comparative table of returns for the nine months ending with March follows:

July	$5,140,506	$4,620,893
August	5,560,748	4,710,470
Sept.	4,932,527	4,789,391

He returned to Europe following an American tour, the papers claim, and there wrote an original story called "The Power of the Dead". This and several others were rejected, it is alleged. Maeterlinck then asserts he attempted to discover what Goldwyn expected from him in the nature of material without avail.

The damages he seeks are based on what he says he would have secured had the Goldwyn contract been carried out or what he would have earned had he been free to carry on other work without being hampered.

Finds Less Unemployment

The Cosmopolitan News Service in its regular survey of business conditions finds that unemployment is decreasing, the main improvement being noticed in the building trades and particularly in skilled lines. In New England, many textile mills have closed but the labor has found employment elsewhere during the shutdown. A spirit of cautious buying, however, seems to be actuating merchants in general.

The Guaranty Survey, published by the Guaranty Trust Co., reports a slight depression in business and maintains that there is no threat of general depression comparable to that of 1920-1921. Normalcy in the future is looked for.

The Federal Reserve Board in Washington, in its usual monthly survey reports a drop in wholesale and retail trade during March and adds that the slight depression is not expected to assume proportions of an alarming nature.

"Messalina" Showing in Rome

Walter Williams in a special dispatch, published in the Sunday Times says:

The new moving picture, 'Messalina,' dealing with the incidents in the life of the Emperor Claudius, and full of thrills, has been produced here and is attracting large crowds. It has been made in Italy at the scenes in the Forum, and the house of Castor and Pollux have been well executed. The chariot race in the Coliseum is probably one of the most realistic and exciting incidents of its kind ever thrown on the screen."

BLIND

By DANNY

Well known exhibitor talking. Feder among New York exhibitors. Sane, sensible man. No has done a tremendous lot of exhibitors in this territory. Commenting on markedly decreased revenue to distributors. Because of buying combines of Greater New York.

"Some men can't see further than the tip of their nose," he said. Right off the bat. Like that. "Some men don't want to see. They don't realize they are heading for destruction. Among these are exhibitors who have gone down the price of film. They don't realize that men cannot stay in business unless they have money to meet their obligations. Producers cannot live without revenue. Cutting revenue arbitrarily simply means in the end that they will be forced to get cheaper pictures and their big heavy investments will go to the dogs.

"They don't seem to realize that their actions will bring about further combinations among the big producers-distributors. It will not be long—the present practice continues—where there will be but four, or at the most, five big producing-distributing combinations. And through their own theaters they will control this entire business. Because no exhibitor of importance can exist on the product which will be left once these big combines are operating."

These combinations will have their own theaters. Famous, Loew. First National have a tremendous start in that direction already. God help the independent exhibitor when this day comes. If he isn't in on the combination somewhere he may as well push buttons as peddle lead pencils. Because he will be out of this business, even though he owns one or two houses. He will be better off than in."

There are a lot of people who are studying this business. The existing evolution is making them think. Where they never thought seriously before. And among these are a large number who agree with the line of reasoning of his exhibitor.

It makes little difference—at the end—who originally caused the Al Aronson of Truett is in charge of the committee which will have charge of the pinochle goofers and J. C. Barnstyn will be in charge of the bridgers.

Jury Coming Over

Likely Metro-Goldwyn English Situation Will Be Clarified Upon His Arrival Here

(By Cable to THE FILM DAILY)

London—Sir William Jury, in charge of Metro distribution in Great Britain, sails for the States shortly. It is expected that the disposition of the distribution of Metro-Goldwyn pictures will be settled upon his arrival in New York.

Those interested in the foreign market are awaiting with interest the settlement of the question of the distribution of the Metro-Goldwyn product abroad. Both Metro and Goldwyn have excellent machines for distribution in Great Britain.

Witchalls, Waturdaw Receiver

Clem's Ocean Trip

Paris nif de Mars. Mon Cher Dannie:

(Rub that French on your bald spot) here's the hot letter. Of course Danny you got to read between the lines for no one is going to put exactly what happens to him in this town, down in print. But if you just shut your eyes for a minute and imagine some of the scenes, boy you'll know Clem Deneker is living.

You remember I told you about B. B. (you remember without my spelling it) well out we blew last night after Mrs. D. is knocking off the morphia sixty miles to the gallon of snores and the first place we gets to

Exhibitors Back up Hays

Various producing offices yesterday received from the M. P. T. O. of Michigan a letter backing up the attitude taken by the Hays organization with reference to preventing the existing tendency of plays and books from becoming screen material. The Michigan letter suggested that this matter be given serious attention in producers' plans for the coming season. Some producers answered the communication, and others decided to take it up with the Hays office.

Editor's Note—The problem of pictures of this type has given producers much concern in their plans for next season. At the suggestion of the Hays office several pictures of this type which were planned for production have been definitely cast aside. The Hays office at the moment, faces no problem of more importance than this. This is due not only to possible productions but the manner in which these are exploited, not only by distributors, but by exhibitors as well.

Removal of Import Duties Doesn't Presage Deluge, Local Opinion Here

Selznick in Radio

In announcing his connection with the General American Radio Mfg. Corp., with which Arthur Friend is identified as treasurer, L. J. Selznick added this:

"Up to this time I have never seen fit to dignify by denial the absurd stories that have been circulated to the effect that I have retired from the picture business. However, it is now reasonable to question me on this matter. In reply, I need only say that I and the immediate members of my family own, always have owned, and always will own over 80 per cent of all the Selznick motion picture interests. As far as active participation goes, Myron Selznick is Vice-President of the Selznick Dist. Corp. I have other picture plans, which, because of the ambitious scope of my radio enterprises, must be held in abeyance for the present. These may also hold a measure of interest for the picture world."

Local Combines

How Prices Have Been Reduced Through Operations in Greater New York

Distributors call them "buying combines."

Exhibitors use the term "interlocking interests."

Both mean the same thing, as applying to the condition in the Greater New York territory, where, as an important distributor says, rentals have been reduced about 40 per cent during the past year, because of the actions of the combined buying groups.

Prominent local exchange managers said yesterday they doubted whether the reduction in income reached 40 per cent. All agreed however, that the income had been cut at least 25 to 30 per cent and declared that for the coming season there was every indication that another cut in income was in sight.

One local manager of a very important company made the prediction that if the buying combines continued in operation for another year that instead of the Greater New York territory being regarded as a 12 per cent territory it would drop to the level of a 7 per cent territory.

Another voiced the belief that a company with a very strong line up taken it will allow every cheap picture from America and other countries to flood Britain.

American exporters do not share the opinion of the trade in London, regarding the effect of the proposed lifting of the duty on films imported into England. They point out that England has already been flooded for many months with films of dubious quality and that only those of more than average box-office pull get bookings.

The most important reaction to the move seems to be the saving that British renters will meet with in no longer finding necessary to pay the import duty. In England, however, exhibitors will benefit in that the tax on sixpenny seats will be eliminated entirely and that on admissions up to 1 s., 3 d. will be cut in half.

About Hollywood

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Hollywood—The Wampas have presented gifts to a number of those responsible for the success of the Frolic in San Francisco.

Fred Niblo, who has been master of ceremonies at the three Frolics, was presented with a handsome silver-mounted megaphone. Bryant Washburn and Wanda Hawley, who gave their time for publicizing the event in advance in 'Frisko, were also the recipients of both hearty thanks and gifts. Hal Roach, who donated the services of Garrett Graham to take charge of the affair, was presented with a set of silver spurs.

The Wampas presented a check for $1000 to the Actors Fund, and also donated the same amount to San Francisco charities.

Sid Grauman last week put on a little celebration upon the two hundred and fiftieth performance of "The Ten Commandments" at the Hollywood Egyptian.

The event was widely advertised, and was used as one of the many stunts to hold local interest in the production. The way business is holding up, it looks like "The Ten Commandments" will run into the summer, with "Thief of Bagdad" following. Weekly gross right now is consistently hitting around $18,000.

When R. A. Rowland planned a visit here last fall, someone connected with First National thought it would be a fine thing to erect a handball court for Rowland's pleasure.

Then plenty of enthusiasm for the game developed among the hired help, and this continued until the departure of Rowland for the east. At which time the game was soon forgotten, and there stands a forlorn handball court on the United studio lot waiting for customers.

Al Kaufman, in charge of the three downtown Grauman houses, recently experimented in turning the Rialto into a second run, following the Metropolitan. Apparently results were not up to the mark, for last week the house returned to the extended run policy of first showings with "Poisoned Paradise".

Hal Roach has one of the consistently busy studios on the coast, and still finds time to play polo, vice president for the producers association, etc. His latest addition to a long list of activities is that of president of Clippinger-Kincaid, Inc., one of the most important Chevrolet distributors in Los Angeles.

The Motion Picture Producers Assn. and the Directors' Association have launched a campaign to have all important pictures produced on the coast open their Los Angeles engagement before being shown in New York or the rest of the country.

Bruce Guerin is no longer under contract to Warner Bros., and will hereafter free-lance.

American Films Lead in Singapore
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Washington—Imports of American films to Singapore for the fiscal year ending March, 1923 amounted to 18,226 ticals or $6,743.62, according to reports of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. Imports from all other countries for the same period amounted to 9,490 ticals or $3511.30. Total imports for the Kingdom of Siam were 281,050 ticals, or $103,988.50. The business is practically monopolized by one firm which operates nine theaters.

To Revise Minneapolis License Fees
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Minneapolis—The license committee of the city council is seeking information relative to a scale of licensing theaters, with a view to revise the present system. It is claimed that the suburban theaters are paying a larger fee, in proportion, to the downtown houses and Alderman C. H. Rudsil urges a readjustment. The new license year begins May 5.

Newspaper Opinions

"The Goldfish"—First Nat'l Circle, Indianapolis

NEWS—The story is amusing, full of laughs, and it would seem, nicely fitted to Miss Talmadge's gifts as a comedienne.

STAR—Constance Talmadge * * * gives a delightful light comedy performance that is more nearly akin to her "Dulcy" than anything else.

"The Great White Way"—Gwyn-Cosmop., Madison, Detroit

NEWS—There are thrills in the spectacular fire; the old melodrama of the track, with the crooked jockey * * * the opening of a new show on Broadway and finally a great prize fight, * * * The fight scenes are exceptionally good.

Anita Stewart is the Follies queen but she is neither enchanting nor convincing.

TIMES—E. Mason Hopper held the megaphone and he has done a far better job than he did with the one or two other Cosmopolitan productions he directed. * * * represents one of the most entertaining works to reach a Detroit screen in a good long time.

"A Lady of Quality"—Universal Karlton, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—But it is a good plot, nevertheless, and entirely interesting throughout. It is unusual, this picture.

RECORD—The picture is well photographed and the backgrounds of England in the time of Good Queen Anne are picturesque.

"The Leavenworth Case"—Vitagraph Broadway, Los Angeles

(Week Ending Apr. 19)

EXPRESS—The story is splendid melodrama and the scenario is well devised so as to sustain interest, but we can't imagine anyone sitting through Paul Doucet's representation of the guilty secretary without believing he is seeing a burlesque.

HERALD—Some laughs, some tears, a thrill, some suspense, all stirred into entertainment called "The Leavenworth Case."

NEWS—"The Leavenworth Case" is lukewarm attempt on the part of the film to steal a little of the stage's thunder.

RECORD—Almost five reels of fast moving scenes are shown before the mystery is solved.

"Let Not Man Put Assunder"—Vitagraph

Miller's, Los Angeles

(Week Ending Apr. 19)

EXAMINER—Pauline Frederick appears to much better advantage than in the film she made immediately prior to her sojourn away from things silver-sheetistical. Tellegen, * * * shows his fine training.

EXPRESS—Miss Frederick * * * looks, intelligence, sensitiveness and the power to put those qualities into effective act. Lou Tellegen was curiously inept, but rather interesting by reason of his good looks.

HERALD—A great story, a wonderful actor and an equally wonderful actress in hard combination to beat. * * * contains the elements that spell an entertaining picture.

NEWS—* * * vividly pictures the intense emotional drama of love, marriage and divorce.

RECORD—While the plot is a bit involved, the action is brisk and the scenes well staged.

TIMES—If, after the picture has been run off once, you know what it was about, you should be entitled to any kind of medal you choose to present yourself.

"Triumph"—F. P.-L. Ohio, Indianapolis

NEWS—* * * Rod LaRocque, Leatrice Joy, Victor Varconi, ZaSu Pitts, Charles Ogle, George Fawcett, Raymond Hatton and Theodore Kosloff are the principal members of the cast. Their acting is as good as a highly conventionalized plot permits.

Well, I got scruples, but I says, go to it Ben, if it's as good as it sounds, tell 'em to do it twice. Well, a hugh looking Guiny comes out, grabs one of the dames and took a hammerlock on her and I was just on the point of jumping up and biffing him, when Ben tells me to sit down. Well, I seen a lot of dances, some of them by Indians but this was the real thing. Hot Petite Marmite. The way that guy slung her around you'd a think they was married. Well after that I'm feeling tuned up and Ben says, now we'll go over to the Rat Mort. Go to it I says but it sounds dirty to me. Well over we went to another place, spelled Rat Mort meaning dead rat so Ben told me maybe that was the name, but I never seen so many live rats in one place, human rats I mean.

Here we see another dance, this time with no throwing around, but feet can't used much (read between the lines here.)

That's all I can write about from here then we went to a place that sounded like Pigs Alleys where we saw Boogies dancing with white girls, and (read between etc.)

Well, we went to two more places (read etc.) and at five o'clock in the morning I sneaks into the room and there's Mrs. Deneker sitting up wide awake. She's heard noises out in the hall and was sceert.

Where you been, she cracks. Seeing a private showing, says I. Of which, she asks. German pictures, I comes back. What was their names, she pulls. They ain't titled yet, says I. Book 'em, says she. Not yet says I. Then I had to watch her all night out of the corner of my eyes. But boy, this is the way. If I can peddle that circuit (read between the lines.)

In the Courts

Supreme Court Justice Leonard A. Geigerich has issued a temporary injunction restraining the Roy Sheldon Prod., from selling stock in New York State. The order was issued upon the application of Attorney General Carl Sherman, after receiving a complaint from Peter Anselmo, who wanted to become an actor by attending the company's school.

Erasmus J. Sigler, president, and Roy Sheldon, secretary, were directed to show cause in Special Term, Part 1, next Friday morning, why the injunction should not be continued.

Eric Von Stroheim and two surety companies named as co-defendants has filed demurrers to suits brought by Selma and Gladys Lewis on account of the novel version of "The Merry-Go-Round," and the Citizens' Print Shop filed an answer denying Von Stroheim's assertions in his suit against it.

Leonard Meets Newspaper Folks

Reputable Pictures, sponsors for the new Benny Leonard series of two reels, gave him a lunch at the Knickbocker Grill yesterday to introduce him to newspaper folks. could successfully beat off the buying combines. All, however, admit the situation is serious. "Where we formerly got $500 for a second run in the Heights (Washington Heights)" he said, "through the buying combines we now get $300 for first run. That is the situation throughout the territory."

It is contended that the Mayer & Schneider circuit on the East Side have an "agent" who arbitrarily fixes a price and allots product for other exhibitors in the same territory covered by M & S. In the Williamsburg section Straseberg controls the situation, and Bach & Landau and Jaffe have the Heights situation in hand.

At the Mayer and Schneider office, it was said both members of the firm were out of town and when the office of William Small of the Small-Straseberg circuit was reached, Small had gone for the day. Efforts made to reach the others for statements proved unavailing.

It is understood, however, that the picture will be of a semi-historical nature; that it will be placed in work to begin during the summer, probably in June or July and that it will be one on a large and impressive scale.

The only modern touch will be the electric lettered signs, and these will be made to harmonize with the structure just as far as a flashing display can be linked up with the facade of an old castle.

Closing In

Under the caption of "The Disappearing Renter", appears an excellent editorial in the current issue of "Kine" of London. In telling of how the industry is becoming centralized the article says, in part.

"One result—perhaps inevitable—of the growth of the Film Industry is the gradual elimination of the small renter. With the increase in the cost of production, the demand for big pictures, the refusal of the public to accept program films, and the need for heavy capitalization to carry the cost of intensive exploitation and high-priced productions, the small man is going to the wall. * * *

"In the recent past three have been washed away by the ever-rising tide of expansion. They have refused to admit that the day of the small program feature, cheaply made and as cheaply acquired, had gone.

"In America the State Right distributor is in fair danger of extinction for similar reasons. He approximates much more closely to the small renter here than he does to the territorial renter, and one by one, the few big concerns who distributed in the States by this method are withdrawing and either selling up their own exchanges or operating through the big National distributors.

"So also here the tendency is for the large American concerns to operate on their own account instead of through British renters. * * *

For the first time in history, a feature plays the New York Strand for three consecutive weeks!

“Girl Shy” has been held over for a third week at New York’s Strand.

Never before has a picture played the Strand for more than two weeks.

It took the screen’s greatest comedian in his greatest picture to do the trick.

A PATHE PICTURE

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

A "Scaramouche" Campaign

Chattanooga—Street banners, specially designed 24-sheets, window displays marquee and lobby decorations, a teaser newspaper advertising campaign, the posting of paper on all available stands and a house to house campaign was the manner in which "Scaramouche" was put over for the Tivoli. The campaign was put on by C. B. Stiff, manager, aided by C. D. Haug, Metro exploiteer.

For the house to house canvass, Haug designed a card clockdial with hours printed in big red letters and the hands pointing to the time of performances. Across the face was written 'Now is the Time to See 'Scaramouche' at the Tivoli. These were hung on thousands of doors, distributed conspicuously in telephone booths, stores, department stores and in every other conceivable and helpful location.

Carroll Scores in Utica

Utica, N. Y.—In planning a campaign for "The White Sister" engagement at the Majestic, Howard G. Carroll, Metro, made a special appeal to Italians.

He had a circular printed in Italian that was widely distributed. An Italian card was also used to advantage. The result was that 30 per cent of the business done was drawn from the Italian population. Carroll also interested all the Catholic organizations of the city. He held a special showing for the Catholic clergy, and on the strength of their endorsement sent letters asking the cooperation of the Catholic Clubs. Complimentary tickets were presented to the club heads, and in exchange for this courtesy, the clubs posted a bulletin on engagement, and in other ways, boosted the picture.

Cathedral Lobby Effective

Haverhill, Mass.—Manager Ed Foley, of the Academy, and Phil Kahn, of American Feature Film worked together to make the presentation of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame", a success. The high light of their campaign was achieved with a lobby reproduction painted on wall board of the Notre Dame as shown in "The Hunchback".

A stained glass effect produced by cutting out spaces in the rose windows and in the window and door arches, filling them with variously colored gelatine paper with a light in the back was enhanced by a steel-blue spot light from the front. The Cathedral was mounted over a motor driven Grafonola playing a church chimes record. A repeat attachment made the playing of the record continuous.

Flint Capitol Bldg Co. Formed

A new theater planned will cost $1,000,000, occupying a site at Harrison, 2nd and Brush Sts. Ground will be broken by May 15 and the house ready by April 1, 1925.

"Strathmore" Started

Bray Returning

J. R. Bray arrives in New York today from the other side. Through Lord Beaverbrook and Col. Bromhead, of Gaumont, Bray contracted with the British Government to make a series of technical pictures for use of the British Army and sold "The Elements of the Automobile" to the latter.

Save TWENTY Dates for the New Warner TWENTY!

Reason
No. 1—

Mr. Exhibitor:

Don't tie up your booking time for 1924-25.

Save TWENTY dates for the new Warner TWENTY.

This year we promised you EIGHTEEN 'Classics'—and delivered TWENTY. For the year 1924-25 we will deliver at least TWENTY, and possibly TWENTY-FOUR.

Each picture is being made with a view toward BIGGER and BETTER box-office returns—real money makers that no showman can afford to miss. Here's the first:

RIN-TIN-TIN

THE WONDER DOG IN

"GET YOUR MAN"

The First of Two Big Box-Office Gems

RIN-TIN-TIN is the canine star in "Where the North Begins." Showmen everywhere and millions of fans remember him. Exhibitor reports describe the production as the greatest audience picture of the year.

In "Get Your Man" RIN-TIN-TIN is even more spectacular than in "Where the North Begins." Instead of a strictly Western atmosphere, typical of practically all dog pictures, "Get Your Man" is a modern, fast moving detective story, a thriller in every true sense of the word, in which this wonder dog performs in a manner that would do credit to the most eminent of our human actors.

This is the FIRST of TWENTY good reasons for not tying up your booking time. Next week we will give you another. In the meantime—

Save TWENTY dates for the new Warner TWENTY!

"The Galloping Fish"

Producer: Thomas H. Ince
Distributor: First National

As a Whole.....PLENTY LAUGHS IN INCE'S LATEST COMEDY THRILLER. STORY NOVEL AND WHOLLY AMUSING. SHOULD GO VERY WELL.

Cast...First rate cast with Ford Sterling, Louise Fazenda and Sidney Chaplin a fine comedy trio. Get laughs over in great style. Chester Conklin also offers good humorous characterization in role of taxi driver. Lucille Rickson has minor part.

Type of Story.....Comedy. This latest Thomas H. Ince attraction is a speedy comedy number that should prove sure-fire entertainment for those who go to pictures to be amused and on the other hand, a fine feature for exhibitors catering to these people. The laughs are continuous and spontaneous and the story wholly novel and unusual, even though it is of a highly farcical nature. Toward the close it gets into bedroom farce, without becoming vulgar however, and ends up in a side-splitting comedy-thrill climax that will have them in roars. In fact it did just that in the combination vaudeville and picture house where it was reviewed. Freddy, a clever trained seal, who gives the picture its title, brings about all the complications which afford splendid situations. Undine, the diving Venus, tries to prevent the sheriff from taking her trained seal in lieu of unpaid debts and drags Freddie, an unhappy newlywed, into her scheme, with plenty of domestic troubles piling on. The plot is too extensive for outline but assuredly amusing all the way through. The climax sequence in which a flood sends the players floating around on roof tops with the ingenious Conklin still trying to collect an enormous taxi fare and Freddie trying to explain matters to his wife and at the same time keep on the right side of a rich uncle, is a series of real laughs.

Box Office Angle....Should be excellent. No one is apt to kick if you can show them a novel comedy thriller and this fills the bill.

Exploitation....If you know you can please them with a sure-fire comedy don't fail to get this one and put it over. The title is novel and could be cleverly advertised by the distribution of small pieces of isinglass cut in the shape of fish, which, when placed on a flat surface, jump about. Stationery or novelty shops might supply these. Play up the name of the all-star comedy cast: Louise Fazenda, Ford Sterling, Sidney Chaplin and Chester Conklin.

"Listen, Lester"

Producer: Sacramento Pict.
Distributor: Principal Pict.

As a Whole....ADAPTATION OF MUSICAL COMEDY OFFERS MILDLY AMUSING STORY. NOT NEARLY ENOUGH TO IT FOR FEATURE PURPOSES AND EXTENSIVE PADDING DOESN'T GET THE LAUGHS.

Cast.....Rather a good cast but handicapped by roles that fail to supply them with enough opportunities. Harry Myers, Louise Fazenda, Alec Francis, Eva Novak, Geo. O'Hara, Lee Moran, Dot Farley and Eugenia Gilbert kept busy moving about but no one has much of a chance to become conspicuous.

Type of Story.....Farce comedy. It is seldom that a musical comedy has much of a plot even in its original form so that in transferring it to the screen it is only to be expected that the story will be slight in substance and, on the whole lacking in situations. "Listen, Lester" is no exception to the rule. There isn't a great deal to the story and it has been necessary to pad it extensively. Unfortunately the padding doesn't round out the plot with a great number of laughs.

Col. Dodge is a gay old dog who is followed to a Florida resort by the persistent Arbutus Quilty. While the Colonel's daughter amuses herself with Jack Griffin, who believes that the Colonel is the girl's sweetie, the Colonel is kept busy dodging Arbutus. At the same time there are two or three people after the Colonel's letters which Arbutus has in her possession and threatens to use against him. The plot resolves into a series of catch-as-catch-can chases and stunts with an elevator worked overtime in the process. Eventually the Colonel decides to make Arbutus his wife and the daughter wins Jack Griffin.

Box Office Angle....Will probably satisfy if they really want to be amused. The picture is not entirely without comedy moments and with a little more editing could be made more consistently amusing. Numerous unnecessary shots of people entering and leaving elevators could be entirely omitted.

Exploitation.....The words of the title were quite in vogue at one time as a popular by-word and you might readily put the title over in teaser fashion. Post the town with the words: "Listen Lester" and distribute throw-aways with catchlines including the title. Mail special announcement to all the "Lesters" on your mailing list. Use the names of Louise Fazenda and Harry Myers in your billing and make use of the score from the musical comedy for the showing.

"$20 a Week"

Producer: Distinctive Prod.
Distributor: Selznick Dist. Corp.

As a Whole.....INTERESTING AND UNUSUAL STORY PLUS EXCELLENT CHARACTERIZATION OFFERED BY GEORGE ARLISS MAKES IT THOROUGHLY ENJOYABLE.

Star....Has an appropriate role and handles it splendidly. Always convincing and makes the most of opportunities that the part offers.

Cast...Taylor Holmes not particularly well suited as millionaire waster. Does far too much gesticulating. Edith Roberts suitable and Ronald Colman, who appeared recently in "The White Sister" in support of Lillian Gish, good but not very important.

Type of Story....Comedy. A year or so ago George Arliss appeared in "The Ruling Passion," a picture with a story not greatly unlike that contained in "$20 a Week." It was a decidedly fine comedy entertainment and very true to life. His current production is equally interesting and from the same standpoint. Arliss decides that too much wealth spoils people. In the previous picture he gave up luxury and secretly engaged in the garage business. This time he foregoes the things that his money could secure for him, and on an allowance of $20 a week starts in to live on what he earns by working as a clerk in a firm carelessly managed by the son of his old friend, now dead. His scheme works wonders with two adolescent young men, his own son and the son of his friend. The plot is cleverly put together and amusingly worked out. Occasionally Director Weight lays too much stress on incidents that don't warrant prominence. This is especially true in connection with the child adopted by a girl who wants to annoy her brother since she knows that he doesn't like children. The story never really drags but some cutting in this unnecessarily long drawn out sequence, would speed it up greatly.

Box Office Angle.....An enjoyable entertainment. The story is novel and should prove interesting to a majority of any audience. Arliss does good work and will please his admirers.

Exploitation....It shouldn't be difficult to get them interested in "$20 a Week" and you can feel sure that they'll go out satisfied. Play up the title and distribute hand bills printed in green with the title of the picture printed on the face and the date of the showing at your theater. Use catchlines: "If you were a millionaire would you take a $20 a week job just to show your son that where there's a will there's a way? See how this amusing situation works out satisfactorily in George Arliss' latest picture '$20 a Week' at the blank theater."

 STING THEME TO BACK IT

 AIN ATMOSPHERE.

Cast..... William Fairbanks and Dorothy Revier featured. Both do good work and are well suited.
 Billy Bennett convincing as the row-beaten wife of the ruffian mountaineer. Other mountain types correctly portrayed by Pat Harson, William Dyer.

Type of Story.... Drama. The theme of "The Martyr Sex" is a somewhat conventional one but probably not as frequently used as some of its rival competitors so there should be no great objection to it on the grounds of the material being too familiar. There is the rough mountain band, men who prey upon other men and treat women as implied through the title. In this case there is Clawson, his son, and Lem, the latter aspiring to the hand of Clawson's daughter, Beulah. There is a local doctor, a city chap, who saves Clawson's life by amputating his arm and thereby incurs the wrath of Clawson who thinks the doctor need not have done so.
 There develops an interest between the doctor and Beulah, the former recognizing that the ill treatment of Clawson and his men have undermined the girl's health. The doctor decides that only a blood transfusion will save her life. He forces her brother to submit to the operation and performs it while under the fire of the elder Claw-son's and Lem's guns. How the young doctor's kindness brings about the reformation of the entire Clawson crowd is not without some thrills and action and is followed by his eventual marriage to Beulah.

Box Office Angle.... Good average film that will do nicely for single day showing and is short enough to serve adequately for a double feature day program.

Exploitation..... William Fairbanks and Dorothy Revier should be gathering the attention of picture patrons. They have appeared in several rather worth while offerings recently that should be winning them a certain amount of popularity. If your folks like action and thrills you can likely satisfy them and you might talk up the title by asking: "Which is 'The Martyr Sex'— Male or Female? What is your opinion? See the picture at the blank theater and be convinced that it is the—sex." Where you have shown pictures with Fairbanks their names and pictures in the lobby.

Star..... Rather a difficult role to make pleasing but she does it fairly well. Not always well photographed and might have presented a better looking wardrobe.

Cast.... Huntly Gordon suitable and handles part capably. Others not important.

Type of Story..... Drama. "Chastity" will likely please an average audience even though it just about makes the average line as entertainment. The story seems to go along in stops and starts at first but finally settles down and runs along smoothly, if not swiftly. The opening reels are very slow and fail to establish a satisfactory premise. Thereafter, while the development is clear and plausible, it doesn't increase the interest nor is there much doubt as to outcome.
 But in spite of story shortcomings there is effective audience appeal in the stage atmosphere, cabaret scenes and the like that will probably help considerably to get the picture by with the average crowd.
 "Chastity" deals with the attempt of an heiress, under an assumed name, to gain fame on the stage without the necessary "sacrifices."
 She becomes famous, to all appearances through the financial backing of a rich man, Roche, a manager, who had warned the girl what success would cost her, meantime falls in love with her but questions her association with her backer. She leads him on and when she finds he refuses to believe in her, leaves the stage and her wealth is reported.
 Sometime later the pair are reunited and Roche learns that her backer was her uncle and that the chaperone is her aunt.

Box Office Angle.... Fair. It's very possible that the stage atmosphere and certain other elements of audience appeal will get this over so if you know your folks are strong for these sort of pictures, you may find that this will satisfy.

Exploitation..... There is always more or less discussion about the personal lives of actresses and people usually like to argue about whether or not they attain popularity through their own ability or through the efforts of their managers, backers, etc. You might play up this angle in presenting "Chastity" and use catchlines saying: "Can a girl attain success on the stage solely through her own ability? See the question argued out in 'Chastity.' A Katherine Mc-Donald Prod."

Direction..... Victor Schertzinger; considerably.

 DIENCE WON'T LIKE BEING BLUFFED TO THIS EXTENT.
 IF THEY DON'T OBJECT
 PROBABLY THEY'LL FIND

 ESTING.

Cast..... Agnes Ayres not especially well suited and doesn't always appear at ease. Antonio Moreno good looking lead but that's about all. His role doesn't get him very far. Others who have little to do—include Clarence Burton, E. H.
 Calvert, Fred Butler, Jack Gardner, Pauline Pagnette, Roscoe Karns, Arthur Hoyt.

Type of Story..... Adventure story.
 Incidentally they've selected a thoroughly appropriate title for this latest Agnes Ayres-Antonio Moreno picture that hasn't been so well directed by Sam Wood. It's just about as much a matter of bluffing the audience into being entertained as it is bluffing the modistes of New York into believing that the ambitious Betty Hallowell is the famous Nina Loring. At least the audience is apt to feel that way about it unless they're quite willing to be bunkoed along with the modistes who flock to Betty's hotel suite where she pays $150 for the week and has 37 cents left for a cheese supper. Movie heroine's have nothing on the bobbed-haired bandit when it comes to nerve. But, of course Betty's bluff doesn't work—that is the way she expected. It does lead her into a very inviting romance and when she comes near going to jail both for securing money under another's name and because, as the other woman, she would be tried for the misappropriation of Red Cross funds, hero steps in, admits that he knew all along that she was spoofing, settles matters "out of court" and ends up by getting ready to put a ring on her finger. There's not a lot to this unintentionally silly little yarn and the picture isn't long enough to bore even with its absurdities.

Box Office Angle..... About a half way choice. The production is good and the development isn't slow regardless of the unreeling improbabilities. It will likely hold the average audience.

Exploitation..... Paramount's press sheet contains a poster suggestion showing a picture of Moreno and Agnes Ayres in the act of going through the final clinch. It's likely to bring in the romance lovers if you will only give it proper promnence. Say that the story deals with the adventures of a small town girl who decided to bluff the New York bluffers and won—but not in the manner she had expected. If the featured players are well liked use their names prominently.

"Flapper Wives"

Producer: Laurence Trimble-Jane Murfin
 Distributor: Selznick Dist. Corp.
 As a Whole... DOESN'T PROMISE TO LIVE UP TO TITLE AT FIRST BUT LATER DEVELOPS INTO "MODERN GIRL" STORY. THIS ANGLE IS NOT HOWEVER THE PRE-DOMINATE FEATURE OF THE STORY.

Cast... Appropriate and capable. May Allison pleasing as the rich man's wife, Rockliffe Fellowes sincere as the modernist minister and Edward Horton suitable as the innocent young rounder.

Type of Story... Drama. It isn't altogether unlikely that the recent church controversies between the fundamentalists and the modernists have suggested, as least in part, the theme of Jane Murfin's story. Whether or not Mrs. Murfin got her idea in this way or not, "Flapper Wives," (a not wholly pertinent title either) contains a situation in its opening sequence rather similar to recent church matters. Rev. Stephen Carey is asked to resign as rector of St. Marks because the vestry does not agree with his radical ideas. The theme is inclined to be episodic. After the minister's resignation there follows his effort to restore a child's eyesight through faith healing. Next comes a sequence devoted to the affairs of a garage man and his flapper wife, incidentally an almost entirely irrelevant episode. The continuity could have been greatly improved upon particularly toward the close where the early situation dealing with the rich man and his wife is left practically unfinished unless you are to assume that she divorces her husband and marries the minister. A little careful reediting would improve the picture immensely and make it far more entertaining. The story is a good one and contains interesting situations that could be brought out to much better advantage.

Box Office Angle... The title will bring them in and even though they may be prepared to be disappointed when it doesn't get into the flapper business right off; they'll very likely go out satisfied. There is a good cast and production to talk about.

Exploitation... The title will stand exploiting and the cast may contain names of players pleasing to your patrons. Appeal to your women folks especially and if you think well of it you might use of the religious discussion angle contained in the story. In the story the carelessness of a woman who tosses away her cigarette causes a fire which is responsible for the loss of a child's eyesight.

Direction... Jane Murfin and Justin McCloskey; should have developed story better.

"Ridgeway of Montana"

Universal

As a Whole... COMBINATION WESTERN AND MODERN GIRL STORY THAT WILL UNDOUBTEDLY PLEASE AUDIENCES EVEN THOUGH THEY MAY NOT BE CONVINCED BY THE FLAPPER'S METHOD OF "BUFFALOING" A WESTERNER.

Star... Fulfills requirements but isn't sufficiently romantic type for a role of this kind. Does too much posing in close-ups of which there are too many.

Cast... Olive Hasbrouck suitable flapper heroine. She's not pretty but rather winsome.

Type of Story... Novelty western. Jack Hoxie hasn't a particularly well suited vehicle in "Ridgeway of Montana" but there is a certain appeal about the story that will likely make it suitable entertainment for a majority of screen patrons, the general "fan" crowd especially. They'll like the flapper angle and you can count on your bobbed-haired patrons being thoroughly thrilled with the young heroine's man round-up. The picture is decidedly more suitable to youthful audiences. Grown-ups and so-called "hard boiled customers" will probably be bored by the flapper's attacks and hero's surrender. Aline Hanley picks the rough westerner, "Buck Ridgeway" as her next victim but Buck doesn't surrender to her first attacks. In fact he even leaves her father's house without saying good-bye to her. Aline decides upon pursuit. She follows Buck to his mountain cabin and when a storm prevents them from getting back to civilization that night, Aline informs him that such a compromising position can only be satisfied by his marrying her. Buck agrees and after a little excitement in which Aline is captured while trying to escape from Buck, there follows the happy reunion.

Box Office Angle... Average entertainment but will probably prove even better than average if you cater largely to young folks.

Exploitation... Get your flapper delegation interested in the picture by playing it up with catchlines such as: "Girls, Attention! Don't miss 'Ridgeway of Montana.' It contains the very latest method of capturing a husband. It's very simple and worth trying. If you don't believe it, see Jack Hoxie's latest picture at the blank theater and learn how he was lured into a marriage ceremony by a bobbed-haired heroine." The title will need explanation. Use stills and the conventional trailer of the more exciting bits. Promise glorious thrills for the flappers.

"Pagan Passions"

Producer: Rollimeo Film Syndicate
 Distributor: Selznick Dist. Corp.

As a Whole... RATHER TENSE DRAMA WITH EXCELLENT ORIENTAL ATMOSPHERE AND GOOD ACTING TO RECOMMEND IT. COINCIDENCE PROMINENT IN DEVELOPMENT BUT USUALLY CONVINCING AT THAT.

Cast... Very good. Several interesting performances contributed by Wyndham Standing, Rosemary Theby, Tully Marshall, Raymond McKee and June Elvidge, who carry principal roles through very well. Sam DeGrasse and Barbara Bedford have less important parts.

Type of Story... Drama. There is a certain element of audience appeal in Grace Sanderson Michie's story, "Pagan Passions", that is a popular favorite with a majority of picture goers and that is the Oriental atmosphere which predominates in this. Besides there are effective dramatic situations and some rather tense moments that should make it particularly attractive where they favor entertainment of a heavier variety. The production is good and there are several very worth while performances, notably those of Rosemary Theby, Wyndham Standing and Raymond McKee. The theme deals to some extent on the effect of the tropics on Americans living there and later develops into an interesting, even though somewhat conventional, story of a supposedly half-cast hero in love with a white girl. But the interest is splendidly sustained throughout and regardless of some rather flagrant bits of coincidence in the development, director Campbell has handled them carefully and in a manner that makes the incidents seem not so illogical as they might have under less skillful treatment. The story principally concerns a woman who deserts her babe in China, steals another woman's husband and then pays dearly for all her ill deeds both through physical and mental torture. Her last minute regeneration and death brings about happiness to those whom she had wronged.

Box Office Angle... Give particular attention to exploiting the atmosphere. Decorate your lobby with lanterns and trimmings of the Orient. Have your announcements printed in Chinese style and display stills liberally in the lobby. Capitalize on the names of the prominent players in the cast. There are those of Tully Marshall, Wyndham Standing, June Elvidge, Rosemary Theby, Raymond McKee and Barbara Bedford. The title should attract those who pick their pictures by titles and should be well advertised.

Short Subjects

"Trailing Trouble"—Century—Univ.
Contains Some Laughs

Type of production 2 reel comedy
A good deal of stuff is included in this one that doesn't mean much but will get laughs from the average audience. Buddy Messinger is a would-be detective studying under Sherlock Holmes, who, in this case, has a young daughter and a designing sister who plans to get his home away from him. There is much trick stuff—electric wires and finally for no apparent reason a man in a monkey-skin and a frightened colored butler enter into the action. This has been done times without number, but it's always good for a few snickers.

"Near Dublin"—Hal Roach—Pathe
Laughs in Novelty Setting

Type of production...2 reel comedy
Regardless of the laughs in this—which are of average number—it has a novelty of setting to recommend it. As the title indicates, the scene is "near Dublin." Stan Laurel, the star, is seen as a postman in a small village in the Emerald Isle. James Finlayson is the stoney-hearted landlord who orders the girl and her old father out of their home unless either the rent or the girl is forthcoming. Heavy stress is laid on the love of the Irish for brick-throwing. There is a barn dance that ends in a free-for-all battle, and murder trial that is quite funny.

"The Lone Round-Up"—Universal
Should Go Where They Like Westerns

Type of production 2 reel drama
"The Lone Round-Up" is just another average western drama, not particularly good and not particularly bad. During a party, Gorwin, a bank cashier asks Norma, Buck's girl, to leave the dance and see the new vault. She goes and Buck follows. They are held up in the bank by bandits who escape. Norma follows them and leaves a trail of confetti—no mention is made of where she got it—Buck escapes and follows the trail and it all ends happily with the bandits being cleverly and literally "bagged" by Buck, who catches them as they slide down a mine shaft.

"The Junior Partner"—Juvenile
Educational
Good Average Comedy

Type of production...2 reel comedy
Here's a Juvenile comedy with Johnnie Fox, Jr., heading the cast, but not as a Boy Scout as usual. He works in his father's general store and before the two reels are over has managed to mess the place up generally. There are numerous incidents that will amuse—the little fat boy who loves bananas and eats a whole bunch at one sitting; the lady who sits on the fly-paper; the cat that gets its nose into everything; and others. Arvid Gillstrom directed and the cast includes little Peggy Cartwright, Jack McHugh, Roger Keene, Bobby Gordon and others.

"North of 50-50"—Dippy-Doo-Dad
Pathe
Thoroughly Delightful

Type of production...1 reel comedy
This is the best of the Dippy-Doo-Dad series seen so far. It has much more plot and holds the interest until the last flicker. And besides, it is amusing, clever and as always, excellently directed. The little story of the Northwest mounted policeman who is told to "get his man" and who tracks him to his sweetheart's shack where dripping blood betrays his hiding place contains all the tricks familiar to the usual run of Northwest mounted dramas. The monkeys are marvellously human, and with the exception of a few ducks and a dog, complete the cast.

"The Bonehead"—Tuxedo-Educ'l
Certain to Please

Type of production...2 reel comedy
"Poodles" Hannaford is the star of this Tuxedo comedy and is seen in the title role. As the new property man of a country theater where a traveling troupe of vaudeville performers are striving to please, he manages to do the wrong thing invariably and besides becomes the chief entertainer in every act, though entirely unaware of the hit he is making. To add to the excitement there is a thieving manager who steals the box-office receipts and is brought to justice at the finish by "Poodles." "The Bonehead" is sure to be liked by any type of audience. Hannaford's type of humor is different and enjoyable.

POISONED PARADISE

And Look What the Reviewers Say

TED TAYLOR in the Los Angeles Record

"Here is a romantic kaleidoscope. Many characters, quaint, crafty and sympathetic, falling into new patterns. Interesting, at moments fascinating. An array of actors that could hardly be bettered."

GRACE KINGSLEY in the Los Angeles Times

"POISONED PARADISE is a peach of a title. Brilliant touches introduced by Waldemar Young and Gasnier seem truly inspired. Clara Bow, that marvelous child, is a joy every minute. Carmel Myers' siren is endlessly alluring."

GUY PRICE in the Los Angeles Herald

"Filling all expectations, it is a picture only too true of the comedy, tragedy and drama that is to be found in any gambling centre. The whole affair is excellent and the action never lulls."

CHARLES GOSS in the Los Angeles Express

"POISONED PARADISE is interesting. The cast is composed of well known players and they give a good account of themselves. Clara Bow is an excellent choice. Kenneth Harlan plays with a nice distinction of light and shade."

Closing In

"And so the period is coming when there is little or no product save the small stuff of the in-and-out product available for the independent renter. * * * side by side with the disappearance of the independent renter is happening the disappearance of the independent producer as such. * * *

"Is there a solution? We believe there is a partial one: for the small renters to pool their resources, to eliminate thereby the multiplication of overheads, to expand their methods and their outlook, and to handle, in this combination, only the independent product that is really worth while. * * *

Every now and then we disagree with "Kine's" ideas. Privilege. But here is one in which we heartily concur. Watch the way this business is closing in. It's worth watching.

JULIUS IN THE LION'S DEN

Julius Stern is mighty proud of his Century Comedies. He never overlooks an opportunity to push them. Of this there have been innumerable stories. Here's the latest. Col. Fred Levy of Louisville was visiting Hollywood. Of course, he stopped in to see Julius. And, of course, Julius took him all over the Century lot. Incidentally, they visited the zoo and Julius, trying to show the Colonel all his tricks, boldly entered the cage of a mangy lion. When he left the cage of the toothless, slow moving beast and returned to the Colonel, he was out of breath. The Colonel was naturally sympathetic. "Julius," he said, "you shouldn't take such chances."

"Oh," said Julius nonchalantly, "that's the chances we have to take in the motion picture business."

EDDIE'S PLAY

While Eddie Goulding postcards blithely from Italy—where he is working on a picture—his play "Dancing Mothers" opened, under the Selwyn management, in Washington. Newspaper reports promise much. Perhaps a real hit. Still you never can tell. His friends—who attended the opening—say we all should be proud of Eddie, a motion picture boy, putting over such a success. Righto; if he has, we are.

Don't be surprised if, upon Goulding's return, you hear of him directing a picture. Fox wanted him to direct for his organization some months ago.

THE RECORD

"The Covered Wagon" closes its Broadway run today. Just think—59 weeks on Broadway. In one house. There are mighty few plays—and there are fewer pictures still—which can hope to touch this record. One picture a season like this and you have established something for which every one connected with pictures may well be proud.

IT'S A BUSINESS

Once upon a time Marcus Loew lived a sort of secluded business life. But that was when he was just an exhibitor. Now that he's producer, distributor, exhibitor and has his name listed on the Stock Exchange. So it's different. And to make matters worse, they are going to install a telegraph wire direct from the studio to the home office. Once that's in if Marcus Loew ever gets a chance to do any of the things he likes—well—he's given up hope.

Meanwhile Bob Ruben receives something like 90 wires a day from the Coast. He is still optimistic. He is willing to wager that some day he gets over 100.

PERSONALITY

What a tremendous asset it is. In a business such as this. For instance: Sol Lesser, who is a West Coast theater man; a producer, a state rights distributor, and a First National president. Yes; he's young. Perhaps in a few years he will do a few more things.

Everyone knows of the difficulties the distributors are having—and have had—with West Coast. It's an old story. Yet, under the spell of Lesser's personality listen to what a prominent tributor says: "If Lesser lived in New York, and did the business of the West Coast from here he would be able to buy lower than the West Coast does today; and would have friends among the tributors instead of enemies."

That might easily prove true.

"BOO!"

When F. E. Adams wrote in "Cinema" of London about the invasion by American concerns of England, and of taking over a lot of theaters we characterized the idea by saying "Boo!"

Now Adams writes an open letter in "Cinema" addressing it to the editor of THE FILM DAILY and says in part:

"My Dear Danny,—

"Many Britons were told in July, 1914, that an immediate war with Germany was threatening, and they answered "Boo."

"British film men have recently been told that an American invasion of British exhibiting interests was threatening, and they have not answered "Boo." That has been left for you to do, Dear Danny, sitting 3,000 miles away in complete ignorance of the facts. We have a saying that he who rushes into print is a fool; this is equally true of laymen or journalist when either lack precise knowledge of the subject on which they write. Marshall Foch and Sir Douglas Haig did not give the details of their plan of campaign to journalists, but they did take into their confidence the people who might be expected to help to put them over. Similarly the leaders of the threatened new movement in British film land have not given you their confidence. They may have pretended to do so, but that is purely their little piece of bluff, and you should have recognized it as such. * * *

"No! Danny dear, you are out of your depth for once—see to it they don't 'cod' you' again, and whatever you do don't 'Boo,' it is so childish."

To which might be added this: We have never set up the idea that we have the complete confidence of the leaders of the industry. Perhaps Mr. Adams has. Perhaps he knows more of their intentions regarding England than we do. He says he is anyway. Then, too, he chides us for being "childish" when we say "boo!" Oh, Mr. Adams, thanks for the compliment. I'll say "boo!" once again. And close this.

SOME BOOKOO BOOK

The American pronunciation for a French word describing elegance is (phonetically) "bookoo." Nothing better describes the magnificent book issued by Famous regarding its output for the coming season, copies of which were issued several days ago. It is one of the finest things of its kind ever appeared. I don't know where the credit for its make-up and contents belongs. But if it isn't the best piece of selling copy to an exhibitor made-up in the picture business we would like to see that which has it beat. Hats off to A. M. Botsford. Members of the AMPA take a look! And learn something!

PUTTING IT OVER ON MORRIE

Morrie Gest is considered a great showman. Even "Doc" Fairbanks uses his ability. And Gest has brought in some grand grosses. But how does he feel knowing that the opening of the grand opera "Nero" in Milan brought a $45,000 house?

Newspaper Opinions

"The Arizona Express"—Fox
Loew's, Montreal
STAR—Thrills galore; express trains carrying to destruction from high embankment. * * * hair-raising races in which human life is the stake, and a realistic light-storm form but a few of the features of "The Arizona Express," * * *

"A Boy of Flanders"—Metro
Chicago, Chicago

AMERICAN—You will find as much to smile as ever in Jackie * * * Without Jackie quite likely the film would tend to apall. NEWS—It is Jackie as the public wants dragged, forlorn, mischievous. It is a classic for children, "A Dog of Flanders," and it suits the boy star down to ground with one possible exception in that doesn't give him as many chances as funny as have his preceding pictures. JOURNAL—The fact that anyone is apt to come sentimental about Jackie serves as a warning from being maudlin. POST—"Triumph" is not sensational in any way, but it is a very good, wholesome, reliable play.

POST—As for Jackie himself, he is as alluring a marvel and a delight. The play of compassion over his child face, the heart-breaking sadness his dark eyes can mirror, quick change from grief to mirth, all the tricks find opportunity here.

TRIBUNE—Little Jackie Coogan and Ted. Sennett dog, carry away the honors. For the most part, the tiny star is an adorable natural self.

Warfield, San Francisco
(Week Ending Apr. 26)

BULLETIN—It is a story adaptable to the present age and having dramatic production, human interest appeal, with a personal touch of comedy, it gives the actor his best screen play for several years.

CALL & POST—Indeed, Jackie acts so well in "A Boy of Flanders" that many stars of today might well take lessons from him in sincere pantomime.

CHRONICLE—These would-be actors do down enormous salaries, * * * talk of "the profession" and "art"—and treat a little child not yet 10, play rings and them.

A funny part about it is that Jackie doesn't really act.

EXAMINER—"The Dog of Flanders"; Jackie does the cleverest acting of his career as Nello, the orphaned boy of Anthony Terry, the Great Dane star of many film successes, plays Petrasche. * * * HERALD—It is a remarkably fine feature.

after having been flooded with mawkish sentimental drivel, this production is as a distinct relief, * * *

NEWS—Jackie Coogan comes thoroughly into his own in "A Boy of Flanders." Since "The Kid" he has done nothing so true and so natural.

"Boy of Mine"—1st Nat'l
Regent, Rochester

DEMOCRAT AND CHRONICLE—"Boy of Mine," the photoplay which opened a new engagement at the Regent Theater today, is a screen story which every child, teacher and lover of children should see.

JOURNAL—With a Booth Tarkington excellent direction, Ben Alexander as boy hero, and an altogether splendid cast as the ingredients of "Boy of Mine," it goes without saying that it is a highly enjoyable play.

MOVIES-UNION—One must be very hard-as-to sensibilities if one's throat does not tighten in some of the moments * * *

"Broadway After Dark"—Warners'
Granada, San Francisco
(Week Ending Apr. 26)

BULLETIN—The story is an honest attempt to reveal, via the screen, the soul of the world's greatest city, and to show that with the outward glare and glamor of the White Way human hearts and impulses are the same as on "Main Street."

CHRONICLE—A certain gentleman by the name of Monta Bell has taken this skeleton and made of it a shrewdly intelligent photoplay.

HERALD—There are two strikingly noticeable things about this picture. One is the splendid direction of Monta Bell, * * * and the other is the impressively fine work done by Norma Sheares * * *

NEWS—"Broadway After Dark" is one of those antique melodramas which has been revamped in its setting and the style of clothes worn by the woman, but is still musty in its sentiment.

"The Confidence Man"—F. P.-L
State, Cleveland

PLAIN DEALER—The typical Thomas Meighan fan is going to like "The Confidence Man," the State's new picture a lot. Because the genial Mr. Meighan here does all over again so many of the things he has done well in previous instances.

State, Minneapolis
TRIBUNE—* * * offers Meighan * * * the type of role which he portrayed in "The Miracle Man," and which * * * gained for him filmdom recognition.

Palace, Washington
HERALD—Here is where Thomas Meighan offers one of the strongest and most convincing pieces of acting he has ever contributed to the silversheet.

POST—Thomas Meighan, although his vehicle is weak, pleases again at Loew's Palace.

STAR—To Thomas Meighan fans that star's latest picture, "The Confidence Man," * * * will be a joy and delight. * * *

"Daddies"—Warners'
Karlton, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—A film adaptation of the delightful comedy, "Daddies" * * * afforded pleasant entertainment for the audience.

NORTH AMERICAN—That Whimsy of David Belasco's stage production has been done over in terms of mild farce, sometimes uproarious to those that know it.

PUBLIC LEDGER—Mae Marsh has returned in "Daddies," and, although it sounds trite, one way to express our joy is to say that she is "the same old Mae."

RECORD—The film has the sentimental charm of the stage version, is very pleasant entertainment and contains abundant and wholesome humor.

"Daughters of Today"—Selznick
Strand, Milwaukee

SENTINEL—* * * another story of the modern girl and an obvious preachment against the speed of the jazz age.

"Don't Doubt Your Husband"—
Metro
Garden, Milwaukee

SENTINEL—Viola Dana frolics through frivolous farce in "Don't Doubt Your Husband" and by sheer force of her dynamic personalities saves the familiar plot of the suspicious from monotony.

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall"—
United Artists
Imperial, San Francisco
(Week Ending Apr. 26)

BULLETIN—* * * Miss Pickford brings all her old charm to the screen and she is more like the Mary as we remember her a few years back.

CALL AND POST—The romantic story has much to please an audience. The flash of swords, as well as temper and wit, daring rescues, thrilling rides and, withal, a delightful love tale, make it a picture of universal appeal.

CHRONICLE—If you like romance—and what human being doesn't?—you will have a hard time finding it served in more palatable form * * *

EXAMINER—Miss Pickford is completely satisfying in her interpretation, combining a deal of old Pickford hoydenishness with a new dignity of technique that seems to be this star's principal aim nowadays.

HERALD—* * * It is a splendid production.

The little star and her supporting cast are at their best in this sparkling romance of England in the days of Elizabeth, * * *

NEWS—The picture has more than setting, however. The story is full of action and gives Mary every opportunity to do well all the things she can do better than anybody else on the screen, * * *

"The Enchanted Cottage"—1st Nat'l
Strand, Cincinnati

COMMERCIAL TRIBUNE—This situation furnishes Miss McAvoy and Mr. Barthelmess superb opportunity to show that love is the alchemy that turns all things into beauty.

POST—"The Enchanted Cottage," * * * converts this reviewer to the cause of applause in motion picture theaters, which has been opposed in this column.

TIMES-STAR—Certainly nothing finer has been seen in many a day than the acting of Richard Barthelmess and May McAvoy in the leading roles.

Park & Mall, Cleveland

PLAIN DEALER—To the few who sided with me in favor of "Peter Ibbetson" (or "Forever" as it came to the screen), I warmly recommend "The Enchanted Cottage," a plot entirely different from "Forever," however.

"The Extra Girl"—Asso. Exhib.
Fox, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—The comedy, written by Mack Sennett, combines slapstick with sentiment without achieving particularly interesting results.

NORTH AMERICAN—The comedy runs from mere clowning, in which Mabel Normand is at home, to uproarious comedy. There is some exquisite fun * * *

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—The tale is short but exciting adventure in "movie town," and its outcome is the plot of the picture, which ends quite happily.

RECORD—In the picture, "The Extra Girl," Miss Normand appears in a set of false curls and exhibits her ability to be natural on the screen.

Stanley, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—It is a satire on the Southern chivalry of three generations ago, and provides a series of chuckles from beginning to end.

NORTH AMERICAN—Turned upon the outer rather than the inner event, direction has made "The Fighting Coward" broad comedy rather than the homely drama of Tarkington brew. However, this picture has plenty of interest and amusement.

"Flaming Barriers"—F. P.-L. New Lyric, Minneapolis

STAR—A drama of rural life, with a fine cast led by Antonio Moreno and Jacqueline Logan. * * * The picture * * * is one of thrills and an admixture of comedy. * * *

"Forty Horse Hawkins"—Universal Grand, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE—As a rustic jack-of-all-trades, Hoot Gibson evokes a deal of comedy from his latest film vehicle. * * *

"Girl Shy"—Pathe Walnut, Cincinnati

COMMERCIAL TRIBUNE—After having seen Harold Lloyd in his latest feature, "Girl Shy," we have come to the conclusion that he is just about the most versatile star we have in motion pictures today.

POST—You have heard of numerous comedies being "a cure for the blues," but when you see Harold Lloyd in "Girl Shy," at the Walnut Theater this week, you will agree that he is the leading manufacturer of laughs.

TIMES-STAR—Critically analyzed, it may not equal "Why Worry?," but it is a corking good comedy and will amply satisfy the Harold Lloyd fans or anyone else who enjoys wholesome, harmless fun.

Apollo, Indianapolis

NEWS—There are numerous comical devices that are nothing short of side-splitting. Lloyd is one of the best entertainers in screenland, and "Girl Shy," while it is not one of the best pictures, is more than amusing enough for laughing purposes.

STAR—Another winning farce.

Wisconsin, Milwaukee

JOURNAL—"Girl Shy" is brim full of good clean humor, with a delicate thrust here and there to tickle the funny bone of the fastidious and a touch of slapstick comedy now and then to please the phlegmatic.

LEADER—The picture is a sure success; funnier, faster and more thrilling than anything Harold has been seen in before.

SENTINEL—"Girl Shy" is not as novel as "Safety First," and is slow in getting a start, but once it's going its regular Lloyd sure fire go get there piece of film.

"The Mail Man"—F. B. O. Gifts, Cincinnati

POST—Most of the thrills in the picture, of which there are plenty, are of such improbability that they become more boresome than entertaining.

TIMES-STAR—What justification exists for attributing all the amiable qualities in a human being to a postman, rather than to an individual in any other walk of life, is not explained * * *

"M'lle, Midnight"—Metro Colonial, Indianapolis

NEWS—Mae Murray's restless feet flash through the measures of Mexican folk dances. For Mae Murray fans this probably is all that need be said about the picture.

STAR—It is a well-costumed and beautifully-produced romance.

"Montmartre"—F. P.-L. California, San Francisco

(Week Ending Apr. 26)

BULLETIN—It is a new Pola Negri, in hoop skirts and feather-covered hats, the prevalent styles of the times, that flashes on the screen. She gives the role finish and vivacity.

CALL & POST—Miss Negri, presenting her most recent accomplishment, "Montmartre," amply demonstrates her finished artistry * * *

CHRONICLE—In all fairness to "Montmartre," it must be admitted that the picture turned out to be vastly better than one expected.

EXAMINER—The vivacious Pola is in hoop-skirts of course, and there is a generous amount of old-fashioned hoop-skirted, night life atmosphere of old Montmartre throughout the story.

HERALD—It is a well done story of the famous French district laid in the eighties.

NEWS—To Pola Negri we doff our chapeaux for the success of "Montmartre," the love story of a girl of Paris cafes, * * *

"Name the Man"—Gold. Cosmop. Palace, Montreal

STAR—Scenically, the film is more than good. In fact, its faults are singularly few, from whatever viewpoint it may be judged.

"Nellie The Beautiful Cloak Model"—Gold.-Cosmop. Ohio, Indianapolis

STAR—Goldwyn and Emmett Flynn have done pre-eminently right by our Nell, the harassed, but fastidious heroine of Owen Davis's ancient shocker.

"No Mother To Guide Her"—Fox Washington, Detroit

FREE PRESS—The picture is brightened by many touches of homely humor and quaint bits of character drawing. It also contains a sensational train wreck that is used for a high power thrill.

"Rosita"—United Artists New Astor, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE—Against a picturesque background of old Spain, Mary Pickford gives a delightful subtle portrayal of a piquant young street singer. * * *

"Shadows of Paris"—F. P.-L. Piccadilly, Rochester

DEMOCRAT and CHRONICLE—"Shadows of Paris" will, we think, please the public more generally than any other of Miss Negri's American made pictures.

JOURNAL * * * Pola Negri has found a part which suits her, perhaps, better than any she has had in her other American made pictures.

TIMES-UNION—Pola Negri acts with her old vividness and fire and seems much more at ease with herself than in other of her recent pictures.

"A Son of the Sahara"—1st Nat'l. Capitol, Detroit

FREE PRESS—"The Son of the Sahara" depicts a colorful romance, with two of America's best known screen stars, in the feature roles.

NEWS—"A Son of the Sahara" is the feature picture this week and its title is a dead give-away. It is a film story laid in those great open spaces of Arabia where men are sheiks.

TIMES—"A Son of The Sahara" is a "knockout" of a picture * * * "mussy" ending * * * spoiled a masterpiece * * *

Circle, Indianapolis

NEWS—Though there is hardly anything in the picture to distinguish it from the typical one of its classification, it at least boasts the virtue of having been filmed in the native heath instead of on the home grounds—the imitation deserts of California.

STAR—To Algiers itself Edwin Carewe went for the scenes in his de luxe edition, "Sheik." * * * a desert picture with almost not a tent in sight, an accomplishment of no little distinction in itself * * *

Metropolitan, Washington

HERALD—Many of the ensembles are lent added vigor by the employment of thousands of Arabs, hundreds of camels and horses and other contributing factors.

POST—Torrid desert wastes, Arabs, harem, charging horses, a handsome young sheik, and a beautiful girl—of such stuff is "A Son of the Sahara" composed.

STAR—Photographed in Africa, with great herds of camels, dusky Arabs, spirited Arabian horses, a harem and miles upon miles of sandy desert space, "A Son of the Sahara" is a gorgeous picture * * *

"Three Weeks"—Gold.-Cosmop. Alhambra, Milwaukee

JOURNAL—* * * if you're looking for the significance of the "tiger skin," * * * and the "lips red as wine," prick the balloon of your hopes * * *

If, however, you are looking for an artistically staged and rather well-acted picture, "Three Weeks" will undoubtedly fill the bill. * * *

SENTINEL—* * * the present generation, * * * will feel no palpitations of the heart in viewing the screen version of "Three Weeks."

"Through The Dark"—Gold.-Cosmo. Strand, San Francisco

(Week Ending Apr. 26)

CALL & POST—"Through the Dark" is an outstanding example of his genius carried into picture form by a director who is apparently adept in handling the sort of lurid and fast moving situations * * *

CHRONICLE—Crook play—fast action stuff, with not a single one of the time-honored attributes missing—* * *

EXAMINER—Colleen Moore's work as Mary is very fine. For some years the hero of the Alcazar stage and more recently prominent in various Cosmopolitan pictures, Forrest Stanley gives a realistic portrayal of Boston Blackie.

NEWS—"Through the Dark," is one of those fables that teach us a man is straight if his nose is straight when seen in profile.

"Thy Name Is Woman"—Metro New, Baltimore

AMERICAN—Here then, is almost everything the moviegoer desires. Here is sex, excitement and scenery; the lovely Barbara La Marr, the handsome Ramon Navarro.

Arcadia, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—Moralists witnessing this screen version of Karl Schoenherr's stage success have a very tough crust to chew.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—Though the ending of Fred Niblo's picture, "Thy Name Is Woman," is marred by being too abrupt (or too much censored) the tale nevertheless is an interesting one well set forth.

RECORD—The picture is one of the best that has been presented at the Arcadia this season. The work of Ramon Navarro as the young soldier, and Barbara La Marr as the young wife is always irreproachable.

"Tiger Rose"—Warner Bros. Capitol, Cincinnati

COMMERCIAL TRIBUNE—* * * Miss Ulric arises to great heights in her picture acting.

POST—"Tiger Rose," * * * could easily be just another picture. It is melodrama of not a particularly novel kind, and it is enacted with a background of the great Northwest and Royal Mounted Police, * * *

TIMES-STAR—"Tiger Rose" is a melodrama raised to the dignity of art. * * * is far superior to the play from which it was adapted, as we remember it.

"Triumph"—Paramount Century, Baltimore

SUN—"Triumph" is made of the stuff that keeps a long line in front of the box office. Starring in it are Leatrice Joy and Rod La Rocque.

McVicker's, Chicago

AMERICAN—* * * a product which reflects, throughout, in its gorgeousness, splendor, novel effects and entertaining qualities the Midas touch of these collaborators.

HERALD AND EXAMINER—* * * has De Mille written all over it. But for "The Ten Commandments," it is De Mille at his best.

TRIBUNE—Miss Joy is pretty and clever as usual. The support—well, watch 'em act! "Triumph" is well staged, photographed, and directed with a flourish. The subtitles for the most part are worth reading.

Allen, Cleveland

PLAIN DEALER—Here is another who has all the earmarks of another success never goes very deeply or accurately life as it is lived, but it hits at the viewpoint of these things, giving the what it wants to believe rather than is the truth.

Eastman, Rochester

DEMOCRAT AND CHRONICLE for the story, it is simple melodrama simple melodrama so well interpreted, d ed, and appropriately presented against istic backgrounds that it is redeemed the class merely negligible tales of wh is unquestionably a type.

JOURNAL—It has an effective story and is well acted by the cast asser for it, but within a couple of weeks seeing it, one will be unable to tell much about it.

TIMES-UNION—* * * is an outstanding example of the attempt to exalt the theme by means of technical adequacy a group of noted names.

Columbia, Washington

HERALD—Aside from its gripping d "Triumph" is literally an eye-filling spec dazzling in the beauty of its costume el lavish to the last degree in settings fascinating in its entertainment possibi

POST—While it lacks the spectacularities of the "Ten Commandments," the man interest in the photoplay makes the sentation exceedingly interesting.

STAR—Picture fans have a real treasure at Loew's Columbia this week in De Mille's "Triumph." It is a good well directed, capably acted and artist photograph.

"Under the Red Robe"—Gol Cosmop.

Merrill, Milwaukee

LEADER—It is a charming love and an historical narrative worthy of greatest praise.

SENTINEL—Cosmopolitan * * * has done itself in producing "Under the Robe." * * * It is a thing of gorgeous and scenery, * * * beyond being a spe it has little to offer, unless it is the footage of film history so far.

"Why Men Leave Home"—1st Olympia, Boston

TRANSCRIPT—* * * Lewis Stone's ing is consistently good throughout * He never makes one of those false ver that so thoroughly and completely ru lusions. He stays within the bounds of characterization and gives it a clear ar cusive quality. * * * Avery Hopwood, wrote the play for the stage, has done ter, but has certainly also done worse. play is very amusing in spots, and so the original lines are retained in the titles. They are refreshingly amusing.

HOGS

By DANNY

Two footed kind. Described by Elmer Pearson. In his letter found elsewhere in this issue. And he is speaking of the kind of exhibitor "who is not satisfied with his fair share of such a great gross as the public paid into the nation's box offices in 1923."

And he goes on. And describes the actions of "cliques of exhibitors" who form buying bodies "for the sole purpose of securing service for less than they should and can afford to pay" as "plain stealing."

Harsh words? Not a bit. Not harsh enough. And that is where the great trouble lies. Not among the average big circuit operators—but among some small ones.

There are several large important circuits whose ideas on prices are regarded by many distributors as unfair and unlivable. Fortunately these larger circuits are in the minority as compared to the operation of the usual large circuit. Usually the buyer for these larger circuits realizes just how far he can go. And he dares't go any further. He needs too many pictures. His needs call for all the good pictures he can get—regardless of the source.

The small independent distributor, of course, gets his licking from the large circuits. The reason: usually the small distributor, or independent operator hasn't sufficient important product to make the circuit buyer "sit up and take notice."

But the "cliques of exhibitors" the small buying combinations—these are the boys who put over deals on the distributor—large and small (the smaller the worse the break) and use methods little short of criminal, that should make decent, self respecting people refuse to do business with them.

We need a lot of ethics for this type of animal particularly. Perhaps if they were made to shift for themselves, without important decent pictures of the better type, they would soon be brought to realize the criminal tendencies of their methods. For if they are not criminal they are dangerously close to it.

Seeks New Blood

I. M. P. P. D. A. Hopes Closed Territories Will Open Up—Bad Spots West of Mississippi

Members of the I. M. P. P. D. A. have been discussing the exchange situation in key cities, west of the Mississippi for some little time. The territory, with the exception of those sections served by Dallas, Los Angeles and San Francisco has been practically closed to new distribution, either because of inadequate exchange service or because of the present grip held by existing state right exchanges.

As a matter of fact, members of the organization have been seriously considering financing their own exchanges in a number of those Far Western cities. The plan is temporarily held in abeyance, only because the association hopes to be successful in persuading new blood to enter the exchange field or make what it deems suitable and equitable arrangements with exchanges now operating.

Coast Reports Melford Out

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—It is again reported here that George Melford is out of Famous Players.

It may be that Melford is taking a leave of absence, but it is not believed here that he will leave Famous Players. Melford is scheduled to make two pictures in the group of forty for fall and winter release, "Empty Hands" and "The Crimson Alibi."

Four Theaters Leased

Haring and Blumenthal's Bronx Houses to Go Over to J. Jolson for 21 Years

It is understood that the Crescent, Belmont and Melrose, owned and operated by Haring and Blumenthal in the Bronx, are about to be leased to J. Jolson for a period of twenty-one years. The McKinley Square, now housing a Jewish stock company, is also included, in the event the present tenants fail to exercise an option. About $2,000,000 in leases is involved.

The deal will temporarily eliminate Haring and Blumenthal as a theater factor in Greater New York, but it is understood they are considering taking over several local theaters as soon as this deal is set. Jolson owns the Parthenon in Brooklyn and formerly held the Academy and Liberty, Jersey City. Sofferman's and Dave Berk are said to have acted as agents.

Pearson On Ethics

Uses Some Plain Language—Says Illegitimate Consolidations Are a "Weak Confession of Inefficiency"

The following communication has been received by the Editor of THE FILM DAILY from Elmer L. Pearson, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange:

As usual your watchful eye and ear has detected a great need, and I only hope you will continue the devotion of your paper to further discussion of "Ethics" and "Fair Play," because the more our industry familiarizes itself with these two great business fundamentals, the greater application they will find with great moral and financial benefits to everybody.

Every member of the industry now knows enough about every other member's problem to know to a near exactness what really constitutes fairness in dealings with such other member.

New First Run Plan

1st Nat'l Inaugurating Special Sales and Exploitation Service With "Secrets" and "Sea Hawk"

First National has formed a new department to handle special key city runs for its more important releases. The special service will be inaugurated with "Secrets" and "The Sea Hawk."

The general thought that prompted the step was a desire to do business with motion picture theaters throughout the country, rather than have dealings with legitimate theaters. At the same time, it is the intention to see that important box-office attractions get the fullest sort of attention, so far as exploitation and advertising are concerned. Andrew H. Smith, who has been assisting E. A. Eschmann in the department of distribution has been placed in charge of the new work.

The force will, in effect, be an auxiliary to the present First National sales and exploitation staff. It will naturally work with the representatives in the field but will, at the same time, be largely independent. A certain number of special runs in each key center will be decided upon. They will be controlled completely from the First National home office.

Combine Results in New Company

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Albany—Small's Queen Theaters of Brooklyn have been formed, listing 200 shares of common stock, no par value. Incorporators are S. Straseberg, William Small and M. Lerner.

The Small-Straseberg interests, as noted, have taken over the seven theaters operated by Charles Suozzo in Queens.

Friese-Greene Process to be Shown

(Special Cable to THE FILM DAILY)

London—Claude Friese-Greene, inventor of the color process bearing his name, together with S. M. Johnson in charge of exploitation, and a member of the technical staff sail for New York early in May. They will demonstrate this new color process in New York, showing, incidentally, some shots of Hope Hampton taken in London.

Returning to Coast

Sol Lesser expects to return to the Coast tomorrow.

Ben Schulberg of Preferred is in hopes of completing plans for next season early this week, so he can return to the Coast and may leave any day.

Newspaper Opinions

"Thief of Bagdad"—Fairbanks Forrest, Philadelphia

NORTH AMERICAN—The gasps of sheer wonder it provokes drives one to a preliminary shake of the bromide bottle. You hate to see it to believe it! It is a "Pilgrim's Progress" turned into Oriental jazz.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—"The Thief of Bagdad" is not comparable to other pictures for the simple reason that it achieves a goal that those others have never even attempted to reach.

RECORD—Those wonders are beyond the extravagances of any word picture and in "The Thief of Bagdad," * * * there is attained ideal and supreme entertainment.

"Triumph"—F. P. L. Grauman's, Los Angeles

(Run starting April 23)

EXAMINER—Rod La Rocque is the outstanding feature * * * Mr. De Mille is entitled to applause for his earnest endeavor to portray one of the most gripping themes in the world on the screen. * * *

However we must have dramatic license, and obviously that covers these little illogical moments in this picture.

EXPRESS—No, this is a surprisingly good meaty and entertaining film, satirical, a little overdrawn, as any clever cartoon is, but full of food for good, healthy thought. The audiences yesterday responded enthusiastically to its temper and its skillful touches of fun.

HERALD—With a cast that would assure any picture director an actual triumph in his endeavors, photography that is superb and titles so human, their sharp points of truth dart from the screen, like so many points of lightning. Cecil DeMille has added more laurels to his fame.

RECORD—The story is typically DeMille material, with its dexterous promotions from dinner pails to silk hats, and breath-catching descents from mahogany desks to park benches.

TIMES—"Triumph" is perfectly good entertainment. At least, it is something different. But it is not a big feature, with throngs of extras. Its claim to interest is on a basis of intimacy. There's really a lot of charm in the telling of the story of "Triumph." There's a splendid even quality too about the acting and direction.

Pearson On Ethics

also knows that unfairness can only selfish temporary advantage with certain retribution come soon.

One Great Federation

entire industry is one great federation making the greatest form of entertainment ever devised and lives and thrives upon money paid to it by the public.

public has demonstrated a willingness to continue to pay more and more in proportion that we furnish better and better entertainment.

we of this favored federation should live in disastrous quarrels over a division of money is the height of folly.

either the producer, distributor or exhibitor faction should attempt to devise means of cheating the other factions of the wherewithal to carry on with a share of proper progress is simply business suicide for the perpetrators.

Plain Words

any one exhibitor or clique of exhibitors should form themselves into buying for the sole purpose of securing service less than they should and can afford to pay is just plain stealing from the federation of which they (unfortunately the industry) are members.

one who is not satisfied with his fair share of such a great gross as the public into the nation's box offices in 1923 is plain "Hog" and certainly does not deserve membership in this or any other club of human beings.

any movement or organization large or small for the purpose of controlling prices up or down is a selfish, hoggish, egotistic effort to damage some other part of the industry and thereby hope to do something for themselves to which they and common law ethics do not entitle them.

have been in this business 14 years and have been my observation that the great changes of economics eventually overwhelms consolidation is a weak confession of inefficiency and either efficient competition or drives them out of business or monopolies swallow or destroy the weaker ones and eventually the government intervenes and dissolves the survivor.

meantime, the public wonders why they cannot have better pictures.

The Exhibitor, the Retailer

other retailer in the world finds it difficult to sell merchandise for a dollar that cost him but 25 cents.

then to think that many of our exhibitors are trying to buy it for even less.

can they expect the producing end of the business to survive, much less prosper stead of spending so much time and money in effort in trying to buy for less, they should try the much more profitable system of seeing how a larger per cent of the price can be paid for merchandise? I, for one, am sure the public will be only too glad to respond with enough more money to further increase profits for all.

Mind you, I have no quarrel with circuits merely because they are circuits and for the most part the large circuits are controlled by capable business men whose actual desire seems to be to help the producer and distributor and who recognizing the producer's problems know how to help; likewise such business men have complete knowledge of the value of fair play and good ethics

Big Circuits Play Fair

Unfortunately, I am not permitted to relate details but our exchanges have had experiences with some of these larger circuits involving voluntary fair play, the like of which rarely, if ever, occurred before men of such high calibre came into the industry.

Circuits and theater chains are coming more and more to be a constructive force in that they standardize operation on an economic, yet more efficient basis. While most of them may have been originally formed with the idea of reducing rental prices, it is indeed gratifying to observe that most of them have abandoned that idea for purposes more noble and constructive.

The time will come when such circuits will welcome an independent theater owner in each of their theater localities, and we will see those independent owners showing a nice profit and receive the fair play of everybody including their competitors, because by then the circuit owners will have fully realized the stimulus value of competition and safe in their more efficient administration will show more profit than their independent competitor.

Summer Pictures

Boosting good pictures, keeping big attractions in the Kunsky houses in Detroit has proven successful with George W. Trendle, and he proposes to carry on in this manner this summer.

Trendle's ideas were printed in a recent issue. To ascertain how other important exhibitors viewed this idea THE FILM DAILY sought opinions. Here are a few from some of the leading first run operators in the larger cities:

Philadelphia

The Stanley Co. of America advises that it has always made an effort to get the best pictures possible for the summer. Frank W. Buhler says:

Out in Kokomo, Indiana, when the city council voted 5 to 5 on the question of Sunday closing, the Mayor cast the deciding vote and closed theaters. Frank Hiller, president of the Indiana M. P. T. O. took the case to court; claiming the Mayor had no right to decide such matters. And the court upheld Hiller, declaring that the Mayor is an executive officer only. Now the Kokomo theaters are open Sundays.

Remember this when the Mayor wants to step in and vote on your problems.

immediately following "The White Sister." "The Thief of Bagdad" will follow the Pickford film.

The principal item of news in England this week is the decision of the Kinematograph Trades Council to hold a big garden party at the Royal Botanical Gardens in June, the proceeds to form the nucleus of the new National Benevolent and Provident Funds.

When Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks arrived here there was nothing like the scenes on their previous visit. Both Mary and Douglas took the earliest opportunity of visiting Haddon Hall to see the original of Mary's picture and later journeyed to Nottingham where Fairbanks viewed the locale of "Robin Hood." Whilst they are here they are being entertained by Lord and Lady Louis Mountbatten.

J. D. Williams is here. It is reported there is trouble with H. W. Thompson over the Ritz Carlton contract. Thompson is reported to be wanting his money back and it is extremely probable that Williams will come to other arrangements while he is over here.

Summer Pictures

"If you will look over our record for the past three or four years, you will find that this idea originated with the Stanley Company. We are now laying our plans for the summer along the same lines."

Louisville

Col. Fred Levey, whose Lafayette Amusement Co., operates a large and important chain in Kentucky and Indiana declares that all the houses in which he is interested are following out the idea advanced by Trendle. In other words he says he is a firm believer of playing the best pictures obtainable both during the summer and winter.

Chicago

Max Balaban of Balaban and Katz writes:

"I agree with Mr. Trendle wholeheartedly on the idea of running big pictures during the summer months.

"We do our biggest business during June, July and August, due to the fact that we give them big pictures and keep our theaters cool. While it is true we have a cooling plant, still I believe, every exhibitor can do the same thing in a smaller way in making his theater appear cool during the summer months by keeping his theater well ventilated, seats covered, ushers dressed in white uniforms and fronts decorated in greens, and by letting the public know three or four weeks in advance just what he is doing, also letting them know what pictures he has for the summer months, I am sure it will increase his attendance.

"Indirectly we are connected with several small theaters that have no cooling plants and we have tried this method for the last two years and have made a profit during the summer months. I am sure that if every exhibitor will use this same method he will accomplish the same results."

In Balaban's list appeared "The Hunchback," "Monsieur Beaucaire," "The Covered Wagon," "The Sea Hawk," "Secrets," "Cytherea," "The White Sister" and a number of others, which in the main were First National's.

Atlanta

Sig Samuels, of the Metropolitan, Atlanta, says:

"It is a great idea. We have considered doing this in our house but we would never get big pictures. By all means lets have some big ones to stimulate business during the Summer. The Fall and Winter will take care of itself. Trendle is right. There are so many pictures out after Labor Day the exhibitor cannot play them promptly."

Indianapolis

E. H. Bingham of the Colonial, Indianapolis, writes:

"The Trendle idea might be alright for a 'summer' town like Detroit, but Indianapolis is affected by the exodus to the great out-doors in the summer months.

"The automobile, golf and the summer sports have the picture patrons 'hog-tied' in this section during the heated term. Our endeavors are to give good pictures to keep the real 'fans' in the habit but it would be folly to attempt to pay the price for the big ones as the producer could not stand the gaff any more than the exhibitor.

"Pictures are no longer novelties—they have taken the place of so-called legitimate attractions and are fall, winter and spring diversions in entertainment."

St. Louis

Spyros Skouras, head of the circuit bearing his name, says:

"I am heartily in sympathy with Mr. Trendle's plan of releasing big productions commencing July 10, and we are gratified with this opportunity of impressing upon the producers the advisability of so doing.

"If this system is generally adopted in the centers where long run theaters are in existence it will prove beneficial to both producer and exhibitor. Why select one particular time in the year to release product, thus congesting the market and causing the annual scramble for dates and the subsequent dissatisfaction on the part of everyone who doesn't get what he's after?

"Furthermore, why spoil the public in one or two particular months. Why not give them a consistent supply of good pictures the year around instead of throwing up the sponge and giving them poor pictures in July and August followed by a flood of good pictures that come so fast people haven't time to see them all and appreciate their merits.

"Then too, if producers see fit to release big pictures starting July 10, it means that when September rolls around the neighborhood and outlying theaters will have strong programs. Under the present plan they are short of good product until the middle of October, and the newspapers will give the proper comments when big pictures are released singularly instead of a number of them together."

New East Side House

Solomon Sufrin has purchased the premises of 181, 183, 185 and 185½ Forsyth Street, from Darfel Realty Co., Inc., for Samuel Breiman. Plans are now being prepared for an up-to-date house with a seating capacity of 1500.

IN BLOCKS

By DANNY

Block booking is in sight for the coming season stronger than ever before. At least that is the report at hand. And it is causing much concern on the part of small exhibitors. Several important out of town exhibitors, men of importance in their various communities, men like Al Steffes of Minnesota and Joe Dennison of Michigan, view the tactics of the larger sales organizations with alarm.

How the small exhibitor can absorb anything like 30 or 40 pictures from any one company is beyond their comprehension. "I know in one small town in my section" said Steffes, "when the exhibitor could not get together with Famous on 'The Covered Wagon' the picture was sold to the American Legion. In another town a distributor is trying to make a deal with a man who isn't an exhibitor at present, trying to get him to take their 40 to be shown at the ball park.

"Meanwhile we exhibitors are having a terrible time to keep our theaters open. Business has gone to smash. Crops are terrible. I know a lot of exhibitors, small fellows true, who will do anything to keep their houses open. And with this condition existing how on Earth is any exhibitor going to absorb 20 or 30 or 40 pictures from any one company?"

Dennison argued just as vigorously. He related some of his own experiences in trying to book certain pictures with well known stars in them. "But I can't do it," he said, "and stay in business. I'm willing to break even on some pictures, but I can't afford to book a lot I know I can't make money on, just to get the few that may show me a profit. How is the small exhibitor going to keep afloat? How can he live?"

Meanwhile Billy Brandt has an idea that block booking isn't the worst thing that can happen. We're going to print a thought or two on this in tomorrow's issue. Certainly block booking is big enough as a problem to make a lot of people think.

Changes In Contract

To Come Out of Exhibitor Meetings With Hays—Many Suggestions Made

There was another series of conferences held yesterday at the Hays office with exhibitor leaders from the Middle West. Additional meetings are scheduled for today.

Out of the deliberations, it is expected there will come some changes in the uniform contract, Charles C. Pettijohn who is general counsel for the various F. I. L. M. Boards of Trade has received innumerable communications from the Boards, making suggestions about revisions in the contract, in order to meet new situations. All of them have been carefully filed away and are now receiving proper attention. It is the intention of those discussing arbitration and the uniform contract not to overlook any suggestion that might prove advantageous.

So far as distributors are concerned, the impression is one of satisfaction with the F. I. L. M. Boards. By united action of all exchanges through the clubs, duplication in expense has been eliminated, in a number of ways.

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—Will Rogers leaves in about two weeks for New York to join the new edition of Ziegfeld Follies.

Not Interested

Allied State Organizations Not Concerned With Boston Convention—Little Hope For Truce

Naturally there was much interest in the arrival here of Steffes, Dennison, Richey and others of the "Allied States Organizations" as to what action they intended to take, if any, with regard to the forthcoming annual convention of the M. P. T. O. of A.

Although none of these executives cared to talk for publication regarding the Boston meeting, it can be stated authoritatively that the states involved in the "Allied" organization will neither be present, nor interested in the operations of the Boston gathering.

In the "Allied" group are approximately 10 important state units, including Michigan, Minnesota, Maryland, Texas, Kansas, North and South Dakota, North Carolina, Virginia, Missouri and Illinois. It may be that the M. P. T. O. of A. will also have representatives from these states present at the convention. If, however, these states are not represented, the gap will be conspicuous.

Historical Features in Work

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—If present plans are carried out, there will be a number of historical productions ready for the fall. First National will then release "Abraham Lincoln". Alf Goulding definitely promises "The Life of Theodore Roosevelt". Rowland V. Lee declares he will film the famous "Message to Garcia"; Vitagraph is reported making a picture based on the life of Alexander Hamilton; and Fox is making "The Man Without a Country".

First National Drops "Associated"

Notice has been filed with the Secretary of State in Albany that the corporate name of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has been changed to First National Pictures, Inc.

Pollak Sails Saturday

Joseph Pollak, President of the National Screen Service, Inc. sails on Saturday on the Columbus for a vacation in Europe.

"Sea Hawk" At Astor in June

"The Sea Hawk" will open at the Astor theater in June, replacing "Secrets."

T. O. C. C. In 30 Cities

Is Plan to Perfect a Working Exhibitor Ass'n—To Suggest It in Boston

T. O. C. C. leaders, meeting in executive session for several weeks past have discussed and formulated a plan to perfect a nationally effective exhibitor organization. The details are these:

Theater Owners Chambers of Commerce would be formed in every exchange center. This would mean about thirty distinct units. The general plan to be followed would be the one under which the New York T. O. C. C. works. Rather than have a general convention every year, such as the one planned for Boston, the presidents of the T. O. C. C. would meet, each representative to be empowered to act on behalf of his entire organization.

Whether or not, an outsider would be engaged to exercise a supervisory control would be a matter to be determined by the general meeting of the various presidents.

It is understood that, when the local exhibitor group goes to Boston, it will carry this plan along and merely offer it as an effective means to an end of exhibitor organization dissensions.

Two Units on "Today" Series

Robert Thornby left for the Coast yesterday to start work on the famous editorials of Arthur Brisbane. Production will be at the Ince studio but another unit will work in the East simultaneously.

It is understood that an arrangement is pending whereby important stars will appear in flashes in the reel in return for which Brisbane will occasionally give them editorial mention.

Governor Vetoes Murphy Bill

(By Long Distance Phone)

Albany—Governor Smith yesterday vetoed the Murphy bill which was designed to remove restrictions on the sale and exhibition of non-hazardous films. The measure was favored by non-theatrical organizations.

Schulberg Leaves Shortly

B. P. Schulberg leaves for the Coast in a few days to start work on "The First Year." Preferred will maintain one producing unit, with Gasnier probably in charge.

Franklin Due Thursday

Harold B. Franklin is due back from Los Angeles tomorrow.

In the Courts

Supreme Court Justice Gavegan has dismissed a suit for $25,000 brought by Albert Fortuol against the Empire City Film Laboratories, Inc., on the ground that the negatives of the film, "It May Be Your Daughter" were delivered to the defendant, and that the defendant later gave notice that one of the reels had been lost, which made the whole photoplay valueless.

William I. Rosenfeld has filed suit in the Supreme Court against the Selznick Distributing Corp., for $27,500 on a guaranty that a note of Finis Fox and Finis Fox, Inc., given to the plaintiff for a loan of that sum would be paid. The Fox corporation was making the film "Bag and Baggage," and the defendant had a contract to distribute it. Selznick applied to make the Fox company a defendant on the ground that the guaranty was without consideration, and that the plaintiff got a bonus of $5,000 for making the loan, and should collect from Fox and not from it.

Small Optimistic

Eddie Small who operates agency both on the Coast as well as in New York, said yesterday that he was very optimistic over producing conditions on the Coast. "I think there will be marked activity during the summer," he said, "and while I think there will be more pictures produced in the East than heretofore, Hollywood will continue to produce the bulk of pictures for the coming season at least."

There is a marked demand, said Small, for American players to work abroad. The latest to secure a foreign contract is Lionel Barrymore who will shortly go to England.

SELLING

By DANNY

about this block booking. Selling which the small exhibitor—let's say the average exhibitor—had his say yesterday. Plans like his fears are justified. Plans for the coming season—except in a few instances—being held officially under Here is the line-up:

Famous—Selling 40 in a block.

First National—Sales department has nothing to say of plans for next season.

Metro—Selling plans not set, selling everything at one time season.

Goldwyn—Plans not set. Product selling this season in various ways except Cosmo-can productions which have been sold individually.

Universal—Plans not set. Product sold this season in various ways.

United Artists—Selling pictures as heretofore.

Block booking does not affect the exhibitor with several or more pictures. He needs a lot of product. He isn't anxious to have the picture of the larger distributor. But the smaller exhibitor it is another story. If he starts block booking it is hog-tied before the season starts. Once tied in with his booker he is unable to take advantage of anything coming along excepting the companies he is working with. It is an old, old story that the exhibitor ties in with one company that he wants to get out from another concern. And he cannot afford to shelve the picture contracted for and run what he wants. Or what he thinks he wants. Or if a hit unexpectedly develops what time has he open for on the other hand the large distributor has his argument: not only must he have play dates, but the expense of ending these play dates by another visit of the salesman cannot be eliminated. Any distributor will tell you that it is far too much to operate profitably to do business with

Dear Danny:

Maybe you wont be surprised to read that I am one of the best known men in Paris today and all because the head waiter at Parakeets took a fancy to me and named a cocktail in my honor. And this morning my telephone bell rang and who was on the other end but Ben Blumenthal who just got here from some place in Austria and who made a date to take me out tonight.

Yep—on the menu at Parakeets is cocktail Clem Deneker and in honor of the damn thing, I drank so many of them last night I even forgot to fight with the taxi driver for holding me up. Well, Danny, the first good break I got since I been here was today. Yesterday I went into a store and bought some shirts for 100 Frs.

Famous' Earnings Off

First Quarter Total To Be About $800,000—Fewer Pictures Blamed

"The Wall Street Journal" said yesterday:

"Forecast of earnings of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., for the first quarter of this year is approximately $800,000, equal to about $3.10 a share on 235 931 shares of common against $1,018,100 or $3.66 a share, earned in first quarter of 1923. First quarter this year reflected effects of the shut down last summer since fewer pictures were ready to be released this spring. Benefits from the shut down began to be shown in March and April, when the lower cost of production was first in evidence. Returns from 'Covered Wagon' and 'The Ten Commandments' are fully up to expectations and another important picture, 'Monsieur Beaucaire,' has just been released. The return of Rudolph Valentino to the screen will also help earnings."

Broadway Playhouses Present Programs of Special Prologues, Orchestral and Vocal Selections

Music Week is being celebrated this week with special programs of fine orchestral and vocal selections presented by Broadway theaters. Hugo Riesenfeld arranged as the overture for the Rialto the famous tone poem of Franz Liszt, "Les Preludes"; the Rialto String Quartette is playing Tchaikowsky's "Andante Cantabile", while the Riesenfeld "Classical Jazz" number is "Somebody Loves You After All."

The overture at the Rialto consists of selections from Gounod's "Faust"; Ruth Urban, soprano, sings Woodman's "An Open Secret", Albert Vete's "Oh, You Don't Know What You're Missin'", and Ray Goetz' "So, This Is Love". Lerelei Kendler and Nella Hillhouse offer a dance divertissement, "Nola".

An unusual composition, played for the first time in New York, is Preston W. Orem's "American Indian Rhapsody", rendered by the Strand orchestra. The themes for the rhapsody were gathered by Orem during a period of twelve years from melodies sung and played by Indians among whom the composer lived.

The Capitol orchestra is playing an elaborate overture "Wagneriana", arranged by Herman Hand, first horn player, which consists of principal themes from Richard Wagner's operas in symphonic form. Another consists of impressions from Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pirates of Penzance", with Herbert Waterous, Sarah Edwards, J. Hunbird Duffy, Frederick Wheeler, and Helen Brett, in the principal roles. The ballet corps contributes a pirate dance.

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall"
United Artists
Criterion

AMERICAN—* * * Last night at the Criterion theater there were some dissenting voices, a few of Miss Pickford's friends maintaining that "Rosita" still held precedence. * * * must stand by my guns, however, and say that in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" Mary Pickford has never had a vehicle better suited to her talents and never so she given a more satisfactory account of herself. * * * an historical romance laid in the sixteenth century, possesses many of the qualifications that made "When Knighthood Was in Flower" such a delightful picture.

DAILY NEWS—* * * a brisk and romantic story. Sunlight filters through old beautiful trees on the grounds of Haddon Hall; knights and ladies canter excitedly down the magical paths; * * * Mary herself wears lovely looks in the addresses and stiff silks of the period. There may be an actress who could do more credit to Dorothy Vernon, but I do know who she is.

EVENING JOURNAL—* * * The photography is a spectacular one, gorgeously produced and exquisitely presented. Miss Pickford, * * * is appealingly beautiful. * * * The settings are very impressive, and Mary, * * * has a remarkably effective background.

Clare Eames, as Queen Elizabeth, is perfectly * * *

EVENING WORLD—* * * is most decidedly not the best thing Miss Pickford has ever done; and, just as decidedly—it is not the worst. But it strikes a middling average: that will, we think, rather please those who are still Pickford fans.

In many ways this latest picture does not compare with "Rosita," * * * but Mary is as dainty and vivacious * * *

A great deal of credit should be given Marshall Neilan, who directed, and in spots there is some of the most beautiful photography we have seen for a long time. * * * HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * never in all her long screen career has she looked so perfectly beautiful.

Next to the star comes Clare Eames in the role of Queen Elizabeth. There is one of the finest pieces of acting we ever have seen.

* * * The settings and the photography are superb, no anachronisms occur to spoil the illusion, and Waldemar Young, * * * never lets the story sag for a moment. We almost forgot to give credit for the direction to Marshall Neilan. Good work, say we.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * in several respects is the most ambitious spectacle of the star's career, * * *

The consensus seemed to be that Miss Pickford had done an uncommonly fine bit of acting and that not at any time had she allowed herself to be submerged as it were by the big scenes. Her wide range of talents had been successfully invoked * * * there is splendid photography and some spirited mass scenes.

POST—* * * on the whole it's a pretty picture, * * * Miss Pickford is delightful always and is convincing and appealing in the latter half of the film. She is prettier than she has ever been before, in spite of the uninteresting costumes * * *

* * * is a good, satisfactory picture on the whole, provided—however, go and take a look at it and then you can decide how much you disagree with us one way or another.

SUN—* * * "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" is a stunning thing to look at, * * * Quite the biggest thrills in this * * * are furnished by Clare Eames as Elizabeth, * * * well worth seeing for its physical beauty and its general excellence of production. Marshall Neilan the director, may well be proud of his output. In fact, everyone owes his and her share of the work unusually well. * * *

TELEGRAM—* * * It was the same Mary of film fandom has learned to love, but different from the Mary of Rosita. And it is as a Mary with added histrionic ability * * *

Yet Mary does not enjoy the spotlight one. Marshall Neilan, who directed the production, has placed her in the center of a past that is excellent and beyond. * * *

TIMES—* * * As Dorothy Vernon, Miss Pickford has a part which suits her as well as any in which she has appeared. It gives her a chance to become coy, impulsive, saucy, angry, vivacious and perfectly lovely. Even the costumes of the day look well on her dainty, small figure. In some of the scenes Miss Pickford appears more charming than ever. To many it will seem as if she had stepped from the covers of the romance to delight those who found pleasure in the story. * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * It isn't in the full sense of the word a box office picture for the legitimate theaters and as a run-show it does not appear to have that which will get it over.

But as a picture for the regular price of admission in the picture houses it is certain to be a clean up. * * *

* * * The cast supporting Miss Pickford gives everything that could be desired and a not-to-be-forgotten performance is that of Clare Eames as "Queen Elizabeth." * * *

Mary Pickford, however, as the wilful and temperamental Dorothy is the picture. It is Mary Pickford, first, last and always * * *

WORLD—* * * has all the charm and delicacy of Charles Major's vivid romance. It is a truly beautiful photoplay pictorially. It has a substantial plot. It is well acted. If the picture lacks anything, it is pace.

Still, if the picture starts slowly, it gains in acceleration until it reaches exciting heights. * * *

Allan Forest makes a personable hero, and a valiant one. And little more could be desired than Marc MacDermott as the villain. The others were good. And their direction throughout was splendid. * * *

EVENING JOURNAL—* * * The story moves melodramatically * * *

EVENING WORLD—* * * in our estimation one of the most insane pictures we ever saw and as a result will probably be one of the biggest money makers. The story is in itself absurd and even the expert hand of Director Al Parker could not lift it above its mediocrity. * * *

There is everything in this picture that has ever been used before and nothing that is new or startling.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—What we cannot understand is why Distinctive ever let "The Rejected Woman" go out to meet the world fitted up with such a set of titles. They are so intrusively bad that they nearly spoiled the picture for us. * * *

Alma Rubens does the best work she ever has done in her life. Conrad Nagel is as good as he always is. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * typical motion picture hokum, with the attendant incongruities both of plot and of action. John Lynch has a surprising method of whisking his characters about from continent to continent with barely so much as a title or so foreshadowing the events. But it is so well acted and so well directed that you almost forget the jumpiness of the scenario. * * *

POST—* * * Alma Rubens and Conrad Nagel are aided by a good cast * * * This film starts out well, but sags in the end. For all of that, however, it is sufficiently dramatic and exciting to keep you interested, and while it quaffs large gulps from the old hokum hocket, the other things about it outside of story itself—direction, acting, photography and sets—are very good. * * *

TELEGRAM—* * * There are more stars in "The Rejected Woman." * * * than can be counted by the most enthusiastic film fan during the rapid projection of this absorbing story. * * *

TIMES—* * * is not an especially brilliant production * * * It is a rambling story with weird sub-titles, beginning with life in the Canadian village of San Michel, and culminating in a cathedral-like mansion in New York. * * *

There are some effective blizzard scenes in the first portion * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * "The Rejected Woman" can boast most of its title as a box office attraction. * * *

* * * The first few minutes at the opening and the first part of the last reel contains the most punch. * * *

WORLD—* * * It is a picture set in silks and satins. But its story is all cotton and less than 35 inches wide.

Alma Rubens is quite lovely at various times in the course of the picture. Conrad Nagel is likeable. It would be unfair to them to say much of their acting because the film's story requires such absurdities of them. * * * old franc hit the bottom for a row of no more cash while here, I'm a de-

Well I went to a show with Ben Blumenthal and if you think it wasnt mostly body with not much head to it. I cant write you about it for I know too many exhibitors wives who read your paper, in fact more than ex-

Mr. Blumenthal said he owed me a good time for he read in one of my former letters where I paid a good price for Mistress of The World and as he was responsible for it, he felt it his duty to sort of do something for me.

Boy, I wouldn't have on my mind what he's got if he made that one.

This afternoon Jake Shubert and Irving Marks took me and Mrs. Den-eker to Claridges restaurant to tea and the place was full of swell mamas, hut Mrs. Deneker made 'em look like mummies with her new dress. She's set me back a years profit with the three new dresses and say, maybe I aint glad she hought them before she found out they aint wearing much in back. If ever she'd wear clothes like that in Pneumonia or my new town, Hives, Cal., they'd raid her.

At the present rate of exchange here the Alps will soon be nothing but foothills. But then it's an ill wind that blows nobody's nose, says
I, talking about how cheap the francs are.

Adolph Osso, the Famous Players agent here wants to take me for a ride if he ever gets his new Spanish-squeezer going. He's had it two weeks now and it's only done two miles, which is the distance his house is from the garage.

Mr. Blumenthal wants to know if you're coming over this year and when, so he can arrange another trip for you. Hot dog Danny, this is the place. Its looking up. The hot letter will follow soon, as I cool off.

Adios toots suite.

Listen to me a minute, Mr. Exhibitor

*This is Gene Stratton-Porter
speaking ~*

The tremendous sale of my books throughout the country by Doubleday Page & Co., and Grossett & Dunlap & Co. has a direct bearing on your box office.

Where the sale of 20,000 copies of a book is considered successful in the marketing of a popular edition, there have been sold 1,644,557 copies of "A GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST."

These books have been sold not alone to individuals but to libraries and the average number of readers to a popular book has been estimated at eight readers, thus more than 13,000,000 people have read "A GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST."

So—you are buying a great deal more than "just a picture" when you buy "A GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST."

You are buying your share of a ready made audience of more than 13,000,000 people who want to see the picture after having been entertained by reading the book.

Many exhibitors have been prone to overlook such a potential power—have ignored, so to speak, the direct bearing such wide spread reading has on their box offices.

I have written many popular "best sellers." Upon investigation I believe you will find that more of my books have been sold and read throughout this country than those of any other writer of popular fiction.

This means prospective picture patrons for your theatre. As a test, you can quickly find out how many possible picture patrons you have for "A GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST" by inquiring of your local librarian (in your public library) of the estimated number of readers this story has had in your own town. Also inquire about the wide circulation of my other stories.

Nearly every girl who has grown to womanhood has read "A GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST." Thus your appeal is not alone to the present generation but to older generations.

"A GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST" is a fine, clean, inspiring story. It is an example of how entertaining pictures can be made and be censorproof.

I commend this story to you. You will be surprised at the response at your box office when you announce "A GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST." You will be pleased at the results.

It is being distributed throughout the country for me by FILM BOOKING OFFICES Of America, Inc., who will serve you most efficiently.

Very sincerely yours,

Gene Stratton Porter

FAME

By DANNY

Associated Press carries this. Copenhagen—"When Douglas Burkan's press agent informed a newspaper that Fairbanks and Pickford were ready to visit New York if the newspapers could arrange an audience for Douglas and with the King, the editor of the paper rang up the King's Chamberlain and asked whether this would be possible."

Who are Fairbanks and Pickford? asked the Chamberlain."

In the Chamberlain was told what they were and in return they must apply for an audience through the American Embassy."

What's a bet: if that Chamberlain selected by the common people, what odds would you give against his selection?

Small Town Stuff

What Eddie Bonns has to say to the exhibitor in the small town is how he regards exploitation. It's a reading. Also thinking about, far too much attention is paid to exploiting the picture in the big city. Much of that exploitation is done for the purpose of selling the exhibitor in the nearby towns. It would help a lot if he was aided in exploitation ideas. Why not try?

Film men of prominence commenting on the attack made on the industry in Washington Wednesday by Nathan Burkan were inclined to deplore the happening. One pointed out that Burkan had many strong friends in the industry; was counsel for many exhibitors; and, regardless of the happenings which led up to the attack they felt he should have ignored them as trivial, rather than make a move of this kind.

No Changes at Pathe

Stockholders Hold Annual Meeting—Last Year's Directors and Officers Are Re-elected

The annual meetings of stockholders and directors of Pathe were held Tuesday. The stockholders re-elected the same board, as follows: Edmund C. Lynch, Paul Fuller, Jr., Elmer Pearson, William Fellowes Morgan, Charles Pathe, Bernhard Benson, Gaston Chanier, Jansen Noyes, and Lewis Innerarity.

The directors then convened and re-elected last year's officers as follows: Edmund C. Lynch, chairman of the board; Paul Fuller, Jr., president; Elmer Pearson, vice-president and general manager; Bernhard Benson, vice-president; Lewis Innerarity, secretary; and John Humm, treasurer.

Pathe's plans for the coming season were discussed in details. Officials declared it to be their opinion that Pathe's feature and short-subject output during 1924 will win a volume of business surpassing by 35 per cent or 40 per cent that done in 1923.

Small Towners Want Important Films With Lots of Exploitation, Bonns Found

Exhibitors, particularly in the small towns, are keenly interested in exploitation suggestions and accessories and are eager for big pictures which are worth while exploiting, is the report brought back by Eddie Bonns, just returned from a nine weeks' trip on behalf of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan among exhibitors in New York State, Missouri and Kansas.

Attacks Industry

Nathan Burkan Calls It Parasitic in Hearing on Music Tax Bill in Washington

Special to THE FILM DAILY

Washington—At the closing session of the hearing on the Newton bill which would amend the copyright law and exempt picture theaters and radio broadcasting stations from paying license fees to composers whose works they reproduce, Nathan Burkan, counsel for the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers launched an attack on films and the radio.

Speaking of the industry, Burkan said:

"The pending bill is promoted by purely selfish interests who are seeking to secure, for the purpose of profit, the works of American composers without any return. The moving picture owners have amassed tremendous fortunes. The principal part of their programs consist of musical features. This industry began as a parasitic industry taking novels, stories and plays for reproduction in pictures without leave or license until it was stopped by the Supreme Court in the 'Ben Hur' case.

"This bill is unconstitutional, because it seeks to take from the authors exclusive rights in their writings."

Commission for Sales

Associated Exhibitors Place Selling Force on New Basis—No More Salaries

Two months ago, Associated Exhibitors engaged a special force to push the sales of pictures, not in general distribution. The salesmen were placed on a commission basis but the experiment proved so successful that some of the current pictures were then included.

Officials of the company later decided to place the entire national sales staff on a commission basis. The

Italy Not a Factor

D. W. Griffith Not Impressed with Producing Facilities There—Health Improved

D. W. Griffith returned from Italy yesterday on the Homeric, having spent a few days in Rome investigating facilities looking toward the production of a picture for a coterie of Italian financiers interested in reviving their country as a factor in production.

Griffith apparently was not impressed with what he saw in Rome. He stated that the chief difficulty that Italy had to face was a sad lack of proper studio facilities.

"The present Italian studios", he declared, "are on par with what existed in this country before the war and those familiar with the history of production know what that means. There doesn't exist a studio in Rome equipped with sufficient electrical power to shoot a large set. Production under such handicaps is out of the question.

"Before I left New York, it was my impression that pictures could be made in Italy at one third of the American cost. In Rome, they main-

In the Courts

A transcript of judgment for $5,734 filed at Ithaca, N. Y., by Howard Cobb against the Cayuga Pictures, Inc., has been filed in the Supreme Court in New York. The cause of the judgment was not stated.

An application has been filed in the Supreme Court by the Standard Film Service Corp., of Cleveland, for permission to file a new complaint in the suit against the Alexander Film Corp., Stoll Film Corp., Ltd., and others over the "Sherlock" Holmes films. The plaintiff alleges that it obtained the rights to its territory from Alexander and that although the contract returned contained a blank space for the period of the contract, the term of five years was written in with the consent of the defendant. The plaintiff states that this fact was partly responsible for the decision of the Appellate Division in favor of the defendants. The suit is for $100,000 damages and an accounting.

four weeks until August. Starting with the issue of August 23, and every four weeks thereafter, the space will be increased to two pages, each page being printed in a different two-color combination, giving the unique effect of a four-color spread. In the Ladies Home Journal, Paramount announcements will appear regularly in the second black and white advertising page, following reading matter. Space will be used in the new weekly published in roto by the Chicago Tribune.

Advertising in leading fan magazines and these publications already listed will give Paramount national advertising a total reader circulation of approximately 30,000,000.

On or about August 1 advertisements of 1,500 lines each, or nearly a full page, will be run in the leading newspapers in the exchange cities and other important cities. These flashes will announce the forty pictures scheduled for the Fall and Winter. A month later there will be the usual Paramount Week newspaper campaign.

Arkansas All Muddled Up
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Little Rock.—Arkansas is badly split up in film deliveries. The state is now served from no less than seven cities. Pathe and Famous serve from Memphis; F. B. O. from Little Rock, where First National is preparing to open a sub-office; Specialty handles the state from Little Rock; Universal from Oklahoma City and Memphis. This has resulted in chaos as far as Film Boards of Trade are concerned and is not satisfactory to exhibitors. It is understood that Fox will put an office in Memphis and handle the state from there. It is understood that national distributors, through the Hays office, are making a survey to determine a solution.

Sunday Shows Lose in Spencer

Spencer, Ia.—The referendum to determine to status of Sunday shows, resulted in the reform element winning by a vote of 1,092 to 988. The contest was a bitter fight, both parties using newspaper space, posters, and even carrying the voters to the polls in automobiles.

Eager For Big Films

He met and talked with managers of the houses in all of the towns visited in regard to the kind of pictures they want and how producers and distributors can aid in exploiting them so that they can derive every possible bit of revenue. Everybody visited was enthusiastic about the agricultural condition and outlook, and because of this exhibitors generally expect a prosperous summer and fall.

He says there is a vast improvement in the small towns in their projection machines, screens and other equipment; that they have learned that they must give the public the same kind of an entertainment, in projection and other features that make for their comfort and entertainment, as is given in the big towns.

"I learned a number of unusual things," said Bonns. "One is the keenness of the interest of the small-town merchants in the theaters. This is especially true in towns so small that the picture house is open but two nights a week. Often the theater is run by a merchant. The business men of these towns want something to attract the people from the surrounding territory into town so that they may sell their goods. The stores remain open on the nights when a picture is being screened, for the people come from miles around to see the picture and while in town do a lot of shopping.

"I found very few exhibitors even entertaining the idea of closing for the summer. Instead of booking reissues and old pictures, as they formerly did, they are booking the most up to date product they can get".

Commission for Sales

A new order of things is now rounding out its first week. All salaries have been eliminated and no drawing accounts are allowed. The pictures are placed on a percentage arrangement and against this, salesmen draw commissions. Aaron Sacks, a member of the local force earned $655 in commissions up to Wednesday of this week and the average for five New York salesmen on the week thus far was $385.

The company is perfecting a new system of handling publicity and exploitation on its more important releases. Each picture will be handled by a special representative who will do nothing but devote all of his time to that particular picture. There will be six such representatives.

Newspaper Opinions

"Men"—Famous Players Rialto

AMERICAN—* * * "Men" is by no means a conventional drama. Pola Negri seems to realize this and rises to heights that she has not yet achieved in her American-made pictures. She gives the same colorful performance that first attracted the American public to her and made her seem the most desirable of the foreign stars.

DAILY NEWS—* * * The picture is most charmingly and subtly directed, being extravagant in its details and thrifty in its subtitles, the touches we have come to regard as foreign. Pola, too, seems to have gained in color from this direction.

EVENING JOURNAL—* * * All the fire and magnetic spontaneity of her former foreign-made productions is apparent in this picture, written and directed by Dimitri Buchowetzki. Whether it is that Buchowetzki understands the Polish nature better, or that she can work only with some one possessing a Continental comprehension, Pola has happily given up the stereotyped posing of her last two pictures and really acts. And when she acts she's worth seeing. * * *

EVENING WORLD—"Men," Pola Negri's latest, and by far her best since she came to this country, * * * Miss Negri shows many flashes of her old time fire * * *

The costume ball scene is really gorgeous * * *

Pola Negri fans, and they are legion, will enjoy her latest picture immensely.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—"Men" is a mad, mad story which drags a little in the beginning and then suddenly realizing that something has to be done about it some one speeded up the story considerably. Only that some one mistook action for plot, and so the story, which is too frail to hold up under the riot of an artist's carnival in Paris, just naturally comes to a happy end—happy for all of us. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—Pola Negri has been freed of her fetters. Her star is again ascendent, and she takes her rightful place as the greatest emotional actress we have in the world of pictured life. After a series of lukewarm stories, a mist amazing transformation has been worked and the credit for revealing the obscured flame must be given to her new director, Dimitri Buchowetzki, who wrote, as well as directed, "Men." * * *

POST—Pola Negri has staged a real comeback, and incidentally it looks as if a new director has burst forth and threatens to crowd some of the present megaphone celebrities out of the sun arcs. * * *

SUN—* * * Personally the writer thought "Men" very interesting, but around him he heard expressions from paying patrons to the effect that it wasn't half as good as most of Pola's past performances, speaking in terms of the turf.

Be that as it may, however, Pola's personality and acting ability make all her films worth while, and "Men" is no exception. * * * "Men" is worth seeing, if you like Miss Negri.

TELEGRAM—* * * Men and women should see "Men," if for no other reason than that Pola Negri is in it. * * *

TIMES—* * * is filled with deft touches and original ideas. It is a splendid entertainment in which once more the importance of the directorial control over the players is pronounced. The types in this photoplay have been aptly chosen, and they show a pleasing spontaneity in their respective roles. The lighting is a dream of delight, and the important stretches with large crowds are as realistic as anything ever thrown upon the screen.

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * The picture is going to get a lot of money. Negri has been developed into a box office card now * * *

It's the story that Pola shines in and she certainly plays the part as though she loved it. In the matter of scenes the director has had them build a number of corking sets, some used only for brief shots. * * *

WORLD—The new motion picture with Pola Negri as star is worked out by strictly mathematical formula. A lie, a sigh and a close-up. Its story is of the dirty variety, bunked sufficiently with moral uplift sop to kid the censors along. Its general get-up is rickety. It exhibits for twenty minutes a French carnival scene. Its photography is excellent, and its views of the star intimate and often.

"The Lone Wolf"—Asso.-Exhibitors Rivoli

AMERICAN—* * * Those of our friends who prefer less intrigue and more down to earth stuff may find "The Lone Wolf" old-fashioned and too much crockery for 1924 entertainment. * * *

It has its good points and is, as film entertainment goes, a very fair crook melodrama.

DAILY NEWS—* * * The direction is jerky, and the production in toto falls short of expectations.

The airplane scenes at the end of The Lone Wolf's career, however, have an element of excitement not to be disdained.

EVENING WORLD—* * * it gives both Holt and Miss Dalton ample opportunities. * * *

It is in our estimation exciting enough for any afternoon or evening and is well directed and is worth a trip to the Rivoli. * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—If "The Lone Wolf" was as confusing to the police as he was to us, no wonder they never could apprehend him. Not only could we not apprehend—we could not even comprehend * * * we certainly could not follow this story.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * should find plenty of company, for it belongs to that type of crook drama so dear to the heart of every audience. * * * there is no doubt that "The Lone Wolf" will clean up wherever he goes.

POST—Dorothy Dalton can put more action into a crook picture just by being in it than any other three queens can by acting all over the lot.

Her latest film, * * * is a most satisfying picture. It's a regular satisfying crook melodrama, but it does manage to keep you guessing for a reel or two, * * * action is so swift and Miss Dalton is so sure in her technique that you enjoy the rest of the picture anyhow.

TELEGRAM—* * * the most up-to-date screen play of the season * * * many thrills in a picture that was contrived for that purpose—afford thrills. * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—An extremely unsuitable yet live and exciting French crook film * * *

The names and a certain melodramatic appeal, phoney but still somewhat effective, will save "The Lone Wolf" from being a bust, but it will never be an important screen contribution either at the box office or in the hall of fame.

WORLD—* * * entertaining melodrama spoiled by a climax of fake photography.

There is action of all kinds. * * * all mingle to make what would like to be called a thriller. But only lead up to the big punch, * * * * * The cast generally is high grade.

Hodkinson Film Booked

A CONTRACT has been arranged by both the Loew and Fox circuits in the Metropolitan district for an early showing of Hodkinson's new picture, "Not One to Spare". This production was recently put on by Hodkinson for a two weeks' run at the Cameo Theatre under the title of "Which Shall It Be?" since changed and although in no way a pretentious offering, received what is probably the most unanimous praise accorded a recent picture on Broadway. The Fox and Loew showings will be in the nature of a semi-prerelease run before general distribution.

Signs for Two Years

Barthelme Contract Calls for 12 Pictures for First National Release

A statement issued Friday by L. Malevinsky of O'Brien, Malevinsky and Driscoll on behalf of Richard Barthelme, it was official that the differences between the latter and Inspiration had been settled. A new contract has been made to run for a period of two years during which Barthelme will make eight pictures for First National.

It is understood the agreement provides that John S. Robertson will continue as director and that the pictures will be made in the East. As Walter Camp will handle the production of the Barthelme unit, the terms of Barthelme's former contract were such, that were they carried out to the letter, it would have meant that the major portion of his picture life would be spent in making productions for Inspiration.

$10,000 Award in Fall

Zukor Prize for Best Picture to Be Announced by Christmas—No Committee Yet

Along about Christmas, a special committee to be named by the Author's League of America will announce the winner of the competition for the best-produced picture of the year. The award will be a $10,000 cash prize offered by Adolph Zukor.

The prize is to be offered as an outgrowth of the Authors' Congress held last year at the Waldorf at the termination of which Zukor volunteered to add a stimulant to the production of higher grade pictures by giving the $10,000 prize to the producer turning out the best picture between Sept. 1, 1923 and Sept. 1, 1924. The decision will rest with a group of men, composed of a dramatist, an author, a motion picture producer, a critic and several others.

Check Up on Prints

Hays Office Has Inspectors in Several Bad Territories, Seeking Remedies

As a result of a number of strong complaints about prints by exhibitors in several territories, particularly those served out of Atlanta, Detroit and Minneapolis, the Hays office has dispatched inspectors to look into the trouble.

It is hoped the investigations will result in a practical method of improving the situation which is said to be aggravated in Michigan and Minnesota. The question of prints was discussed earlier in the week when W. A. Steffes, H. M. Rickey and other Mid-West exhibitor leaders conferred with officials of the Hays association. In Detroit, the M. P. T. O. and the local Film Board of Trade have decided to conduct a check-up that will cover six months. Here as in other points, the Hays inspectors will trace the life of prints from the time they leave the exchanges until their return from the theaters. The difficulty exists partially because many exhibitors—and this is especially true in the smaller towns—have not kept their equipment up-to-date. It is also quite likely that the prints are not gone over as carefully as they might be before leaving the exchanges.

New Warner Deals

Two new deals on Warner product have been closed, one with Specialty Film of Dallas, for Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma and the second with Independent Film, Philadelphia for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern Jersey, Virginia, Maryland and the District.

Beaumont Signs

Harry Beaumont has signed a long term contract with the Warners and will make "Deburau" as the first picture under the arrangement. Willard Louis has also been signed for a number of years.

"This Woman" by Howard Rockey has been purchased.

Educ'l Acquires "The Chase"

Educational will distribute "The Chase," made in the Swiss Alps and imported by the Fabians. It was the feature of a special short reel program at the Capitol last summer.

Jury and Bromhead Arrive

Sir William Jury, Jury's Imperial Pictures and Col. Bromhead, Gaiety, of England arrived Friday night on the Berengaria.

Infrequently there arrives in the amusement world a story, play or motion picture which might truthfully be described as "different." By different we mean a piece that departs from the hackneyed in theme, from the commonplace in construction, from the ordinary in purpose.

Two years ago blase New York suddenly found itself shaken to its theatrical foundation by the appearance of a play utterly "different" from the ordinary. Powerful in dramatic plot, novel in theme, with a background of quaint European beauty, this play, presented by America's wizard of stagecraft, at once became the sensation of Broadway. Such was the success of

David Belasco's
"DEBURAU"

Foremost among the TWENTY big stories chosen by Warner Bros. for its 1924-25 output of "Screen Classics" is this great Belasco stage production. Written by Sacha Guitry, peer of European playwrights, "DEBURAU," with its wealth of dramatic strength, fine comedy, touching pathos and colorful setting, is the ideal story for the screen.

In producing "DEBURAU" for the screen Warner Bros., in association with Mr. Belasco, is bringing into play the full strength of its powerful production force. Perfect direction, skillful acting and artistic arrangement combine to make of it a production that sets a new high standard in entertainment values. HARRY BEAUMONT, who made "Beau Brummel" for the screen, will personally direct "DEBURAU."

That's a second good reason why you should—

Summer Showmanship

By E. W. Hammons, President Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

Every year just about this time there is a great hue and cry about the quality of feature pictures being released for showing during the warm summer months. Exhibitors everywhere wear furrowed brows, and their talk is sad and gloomy.

Undoubtedly where there is so much smoke, there must be some fire, and it is reasonable to credit a certain amount of this talk. But it is not my desire to discuss the quality, or lack of quality, in current feature releases. Instead, I would like to point out that this is the time of year, above all others, for Real Showmanship. Instead of spending all his energy worrying about the quality of feature pictures he is going to get during the next three months or so, the exhibitor will be building up a much better foundation for his Summer business by calling into play all his Showmanship qualities, so that his warm weather programs will make up in novelty and variety whatever they may lack in feature quality.

Summer, of all times in the year, is the time for the Variety Program. And the Variety Program means more Short Subjects, carefully selected and properly presented.

Fortunately for the exhibitor who is striving to offer his patrons Real Summer Entertainment in the form of a Well Balanced Program, the feature pictures being released now are of a more reasonable length than the average six months ago, and it is not nearly so baffling a problem for him to build up a diversified program. He can now offer his public not only a feature picture, but a good comedy, a novelty subject and a news reel.

But the exhibitor must not leave it to his patrons to guess what he is doing when he prepares programs of greater novelty for the warm Summer evenings. The Short Subjects which he puts on his programs for their entertainment value have also a big box-office value, and every unit on the Summer program should be made to count in drawing the crowds by proper mention in the exhibitor's advertising.

No vaudeville manager would think of building up a fine balanced program and then advertising only the headliner. No more should a motion picture theater owner build up a diversified program with several Short Subjects, and then mention only the feature in his advertising.

One of the biggest vaudeville houses in the world—a popular New York theater—carries in its program a special statement to the public calling attention to the entertainment value of the program as a whole. Every item on the bill, the statement explains, is carefully selected and presented so as to contribute to a well-rounded program. No one act makes all the appeal, or even a lion's share of the appeal. Each unit helps build up a Whole Evening's Entertainment. And this theater is filled at every show.

Here is a lesson worthy of consideration by every motion picture exhibitor.

Brevity

By DANNY

"The quality of being brief"—is a standard definition. In pictures the definition would mean—the quality of being entertaining.

And this, after all, is the task, imposed by a willing and anxious public, upon every producer making pictures.

Vanity—in pictures—consists of trying to absorb more and more film, without excuse, to outshine someone else. What joy; what rapture to some director in his personal projection room? But what of the countless throngs who, bored to distraction, wonder what it's all about?

The short subject—the life of any program—cannot find its place—and it is a valuable and noteworthy place—unless the producers of features realize that length alone is not the answer to a fine audience—value picture. It is true that some subjects—notably "The Thief of Bagdad," "The Covered Wagon," "The Ten Commandments" and other great triumphs of this type—need footage. Lots of it. But these pictures are limited in number. The rest—so called super features and specials, hardly worth being dignified by that name except in the ravings of the publicity shark, could easily be cut; and cut to great advantage.

Vaudeville has found its great momentum in that there is a collection of short acts. Some good, others passable, others poor. But no one act is so distractingly long that the audience will not tolerate it. Publications such as "The Saturday Evening Post," owe their popularity to the diversification of contents.

When will the producer realize that concentration of interest; enthusiasm and enjoyment of an audience has a certain stopping point, beyond which the audience tires? The legitimate stage producer has worked this out satisfactorily. The usual act runs between 35—and at the most—45 minutes. Trust the legitimate producer not to take a chance on boring his audience. He wants their attention too much to take a chance on tiring them. He wants them to come back to see his next show. Why doesn't Mr. Producer figure that way when he starts making a picture?

Elsewhere in this issue will be found some interesting ideas of men who operate big first-run houses or chains. E. V. Richards of New Orleans frankly admits that in the handling of short subjects in his territory his organization is in a rut. This question was put up to the big first-run men frankly. Some have answered just as frankly. Others—well, read what they say. One thing is positive; the first-run operator can influence the producer to make his pictures with more brevity—and therefore more wit—and no one else can. And this is where the influence must come from. Whether Mr. Producer gets a few more or less bookings at $25 or $7.50 doesn't concern him very much. But let him lose a half dozen $2,500 bookings in first-runs because of his unnecessary vanity footage and he will sing another song—and make shorter—and better—pictures.

Out on the Coast they have a nifty applied to Sol Lesser of Principal Pictures. They say his slogan is "better and Lesser pictures." It's a great pity that more producers weren't named Lesser at birth. They might live up to their names in producing.

A Reason

Short subject distributors contend that one of the chief reasons for the failures of wider distribution of these entertaining features of the program is that feature subjects are so long that the short subject "doesn't get a chance."

Here are some figures to demonstrate the correctness of their attitude. The figures are based on features shown to the New York State Censor Board from Jan. 1 to April 15, a period of 15 weeks.

Diversity for Diversity in Program Building

By John E. Storey, Pathe

The taste of the American public especially that portion which we justifiably term "entertainment-seekers," runs largely to brevity, compactness and diversity.

In literature they do not turn long drawn out stories in book form requiring anywhere from two to ten volumes in the telling. Our parents and our grandparents enjoyed that because such was the taste of that time. We of today seek our literary relaxation in a volume of short stories or through a popular magazine that specializes in that form of reading matter. Serials, too, claim our attention for they are in reality stories broken up into short periods. In the legitimate theatricals this tendency is fully marked.

Our so-called legitimate home may or may not hold crowds every night, but a nightly "sell-out" vaudeville houses is the rule rather than the exception. No longer is the musical comedy of the style prevalent from 1900 to 1910 offer an appeal. The "revue" has taken its place—the "revue" which is in reality a sort of glorified vaudeville strung along together on the thinnest of more or less disconnected narrative.

It is the spirit of the day, an upward manifestation of the demand for much in little time, or for brevity and diversity. We are so busy we cannot take our entertainment in large doses so we must make up for it by taking a large number of small ones.

It is my firm conviction, however, that the day of the short subject in the short subject program is at hand. The producer who turns his gaze to the making of one and two-reel pictures, the distributor who evangelizes the field in their behalf, and the exhibitor who takes into account the undeniable popular taste for diversity of program are the coming leaders of the motion picture industry.

Nation—Wide Canvass of Exhibitors' Treatment of Short Subjects

CALIFORNIA
Branch manager of Educational Northern California, I consider fortunate in having as our first-run account the Herklotchild Entertainments, covering the Granada, California, Imperial and Portola.

Partington, managing director, may well be ranked as one of the progressive exhibitors in this territory, and that undoubtedly means the world. Being the first exhibitors in this territory to stage elaborate features of feature pictures, he also takes the lead when he not infrequently staged effective prologues in connection with the showing of some of short subjects.

Partington, unlike so many exhibitors, large and small in this territory, does not consider short subjects as "just fillers" is best borne out by the fact that two-reel comedies are often being advertised on one-sheet boards in the form of newspaper clippings or by placing a one-sheet in the corner of the board. Short subjects of importance are also given general space in the newspaper advertisements; on the especially advertised motion picture trailers as well as in the lobby and the mar-

Heralded "Plastigrams"
Coming "Plastigrams," our dimension film, to the screen of Granada, was heralded by the showing throughout the city of three-sheets of a particularly interesting design and phrasing. Other means of curiosity-arousing advertisements were resorted to with the result that "Plastigrams" must be heralded with drawing a large percentage of the crowds now thronging Granada daily.

Needless to say that such exploitation of short subjects is bound to result to the benefit of our subsequent patrons. There are in the territory being covered out of San Francisco, a great many real live showmen who overlook the opportunities to boost short subjects and who conscientiously endeavor to offer their patrons well balanced screen entertainment.

Alas, equally true that a too small percentage entirely pay little attention to the building of screen programs, considering as they do all short subjects as merely "conveniently produced for the sole purpose of "killing time" while the patrons are being seated to the screening of the "feature picture. Regardless of merit and production cost, all two-reel subjects are worth just so much per cent and in many cases it is very little.

For example: Albert Huntley, Sebastopol, a town boasting a population of 1,500 inhabitants and located in a thickly settled region, has a fixed price of $1.00 per reel for either one-reel or two-reel subjects, irrespective of quality. What surprises one is that he seems to have but little difficulty in securing sufficient short subjects at such rentals. That such an economy policy is entirely unsound in principle and in practice is best proven by the fact that two of the churches in Sebastopol as well as the high school and grammar school have recently seen fit to install projection equipment.—G. C. BLUMENTHAL, San Francisco Manager, Educational.

Novel Exploitation Campaign

An unusual exploitation campaign was organized by the American, Oakland, Cal., for the Pathe Review No. 12, which showed the process of manufacturing ball bearings. The film was played on the same program with Bill Hart's "Singer Jim McKee."

A guessing contest was organized with $25 in prizes to those guessing most correctly the number of ball bearings in a bottle placed on display in the American lobby. Dodgers printed in heavy type and calculated to arouse curiosity as to the manufacture of bearings were distributed in machine shops, factories and garages. Tack cards supplementing these dodgers were placed in these factories and plants.

In addition to this, a special letter was sent to every garage in the city announcing the showing of the ball bearing film. Novelty heralds consisting of small envelopes enclosing small ball bearings which were wrapped in an announcement of the film, were distributed far and wide. These heralds and dodgers were passed out at union meetings of auto mechanics and other machinists.

To top it all, considerable space was devoted in the regular newspaper advertising to the ball bearing picture as well as on the one sheets, three sheets, and window cards. The field was thoroughly covered and the result was capacity business.

CONNECTICUT

The majority of exhibitors throughout the New Haven territory do not appreciate the full value of short subjects. They treat them as fillers. In so doing one of the best features of a moving picture program is sadly neglected.

A few of the wise ones get the best results from the exhibition of short subjects by properly exploiting them. They realize the fullest possibilities of the short feature as well as the long one. These exhibitors can see the value of handling short subjects as feature units of their programs instead of mere fillers.

Sad to say there are too few of these wide awake show men. However, each day exhibitors everywhere throughout the territory are profiting by the success of the few that are getting results with their short features. This is attested to by the prominent display of advertising material in theater lobbies and news papers.

A. P. ARCHER, New Haven Manager, Educational.

GEORGIA

Exhibitors in this territory, almost without exception, supplement their features with comedies or other short subjects. Comparatively few of the exhibitors reap as large a benefit from their diversified programs as they would if they realized the advantage that would come from wider and more consistent advertising of their short subjects.

It is frequently the case, and exhibitors will admit, that their programs have been redeemed from utter failure solely through a good comedy, and yet this good comedy may never have been advertised. Now, if a good comedy, unadvertised, can be the salvation of a show, why would not this same good comedy, well advertised, have tended to the financial salvation of exhibitors by increasing the number of people who would see it?

Educational advertise their comedies extensively in nationally read publications. Yet many exhibitors miss this very patent opportunity to tie up either on the screen or in front or in the newspapers with what the distributing company has done in expending printer's ink for their benefit.

In this day the merchant cannot sell his wares without advertising them nor can the exhibitors sell admissions to his theater without advertising what he is going to show.

J. H. BUTNER, Atlanta Manager Educational.

ILLINOIS

Short subjects as a rule are given secondary consideration so far as publicity and exploitation is concerned, as most theaters in Chicago give the feature prominence in advertising and in some instances in newspaper advertising they mention the comedy in small type and in the lobby of the theater, ordinarily use a one sheet.

INDIANA

We find that the majority of our accounts are giving our product space in their newspaper ads and also a goodly portion in their lobbies.

Exhibitors in this territory are progressive and realize that the day of the long drawn out feature is about over. They are endeavoring to give their audiences diversified entertainment which is without a doubt a stimulant to the box office. The above applies particularly to the Circle, Indianapolis, which very seldom omits the two-reel comedy from its program. In addition to this comedy it always offers a novelty reel of some sort and a news reel.—H. C. DRESSENDORFER, Indianapolis Manager, Educational.

IOWA

Leo Moore of the Majestic, Centerville, uses a COMEDY CARNIVAL PROGRAM on one night each week. In this program he uses 3 two-reel comedies. Moore advises that this plan is very successful and something that goes over big in his theater. The exhibitor showed excellent judgment in putting this program on Saturdays. As a rule the patronage being mostly transients, they were not attracted by big multiple reel features, but with the opportunity of seeing at least, two of their favorite comedies that especially appealed to them. The box office results proved that the COMEDY CARNIVAL PROGRAM has a triple drawing power in any theater.

Sam Westcott of the Strand, Cedar Rapids, has found he is very successful with the "CHRONICLES OF AMERICA" releases. Westcott used, as long as releases would permit, one of the "CHRONICLES OF AMERICA" subjects each week. His patrons are very enthusiastic about these subjects. Westcott recently arranged a campaign with the schools, which included the distribution of 9,400 special students' tickets. The gratifying results impelled Westcott to arrange for CHRONICLES one each week, until he caught up with release date.—R. S. BALLANTYNE, Des Moines Manager, Pathe.

KENTUCKY AND TENNESSEE

In Louisville, Lexington, Chattanooga, Memphis and Nashville, which are the key points in our two states, Kentucky and Tennessee, the first run theaters, using our Educational short subjects, are controlled by such well-known interests as the B. F. Keith's, Famous Players, Loews, Crescent Amusement Company and Lafayette Amusement Company. The writer thinks that just another tribute to the expert showmanship possessed by the heads of these companies, is that they recognize the fact that no program is complete without a good and varied number of short subjects. With very few exceptions, these big theaters are at least including a comedy and news reel on every program, regardless of the excessive length of the feature.

It took the Chinese hundreds of years to build the Great Wall of China, but it took an American Army aviator, Lieutenant Deteraux Meyers and Chemist Hartnett, of the chemical warfare service of the Army, only a few minutes to build a wall, seven hundred feet high that completely shut New York's famous skyline from an imaginary fleet of hostile battleships lying in New York Bay.

The Short Subject on Broadway

Speaking of Short Subjects

Hugo Riesenfeld, Famous Players' Broadway Theaters

Short subjects are today the sine qua non of the program. Translated into Americanese, that means "Without them, there ain't nothin'". I am speaking, of course, not about the kind of house which has to play two pictures to get one patron, but of the ordinary motion picture theater. An exhibitor in a standard theater who tries to get along without short subjects would be in the same position as a man who tried to get along without vitamins—he would become an invalid.

Through the gradual experimenting which has gone on since the nickelodeon days, we have evolved a definite form of entertainment. Or rather I should say we have arrived definitely at so much the form—for there is still plenty of room for originality in devising a program—but at least a certain amount of time that makes an entertainment psychologically satisfactory.

At present, roughly, two hours is the show that lasts much longer is considered too rich for our tastes; a show that lasts much less is an unsatisfactory as a baseball game that is interrupted by rain in the fifth inning. The latter remains technically a game; but the spectator remains uninterested.

What we may take for granted is the fact that the two-hour show is psychologically right, then we may consider the program itself from the standpoint of the psychology of the American people. Nor will the difficulties be difficult to find. For, in all, whether the films are the eighth part—as we think—not, the indisputable fact is that they are one of the main sources of entertainment. If we look to another source of entertainment, and analyze the points of appeal, we may be able to see whether or not we are on the right track.

Let us consider then the popular magazines, certainly one of the prime sources of entertainment. And, just as sure, let's take the most popular of them all, the Saturday Evening Post. What's the main attraction? A story by Tarkington or Zane Grey or Julian Street or Harry Leon Wilson. Very well, that's our feature, too: a Tarkington story for Meighan, or Grey's "Call of the Canyon" or Street's "Don't Call It Love" or "Merton of the Movies".

But there's more—much more. Here's a funny yarn by Sam Hellman. What's it all about? A prizefighter. And before Hellman Lardner was writing about the bushier. And there's Witwer. All right, let's have a comedy on our program, preferably about sports. Say one of the "Leather Pushers".

Here's an article by Sam Blythe about who's doing whom at Washington. Short, snappy, picturesque and illuminative close-ups of people in the limelight. Boy, put the news reel on in a good spot.

Here's a cartoon or two on the humorous page, with no political significance attached. So we'll put in an "Out-of-the-Inkwell" Cartoon.

And here's a bit of serious verse. Serious verse in the Saturday Evening Post? Let's look at it again. Yes, you're right. A poem by Alfred Noyes. Well, if they want that, we're glad to give it to them. Let's have a Tschaiakowsky overture. And if there's room, let's put a charming scenic in.

And what's this? Light verses by Arthur Guiterman, F. P. A., Berton Braley. Well, let's have a classical jazz. Let's take something light and delicate and do it with all the craftsmanship that Guiterman and Adams put into their verse.

And—wait a minute. Here's an article on H. G. Wells on education, and here's one on gland treatment by Voronoff. So let's slip in an interesting "educational".

So there briefly is the basis of the popular magazine and of the modern form of picture presentation. And if that modern form of picture presentation resembles to a startling degree the Rialto and Rivoli form of presentation—why, you're right. We're giving them what they want to the best of our ability.

But let me here point out what I consider a dark cloud on the horizon. That is the tendency of the director to consider a picture of less than seven reels as inferior product. That tendency—one that disregards the public psychology—is a definite menace to the man who spends his time, money and ingenuity in devising short subjects. If something is not done either by exhibitor, demand, or the directors themselves, many short subject producers may be forced out of business, and our programs will have large gaps that we will be unable to replace. For it is only when many men are creating diversified products that we can get good and diversified products.

But someone is going to interject "What about the good long feature?" And he will be right. The great picture can run two hours and break all rules. But very few pictures are great. They don't make a "Covered Wagon" or "Ten Commandments" or "Hunchback" or "Thief of Bagdad" every day. Those pictures may run for years. But you can put it down as a fairly good rule that 99 per cent of seven-reelers will never run a year; they simply run the hour and a half that they consume.

The Short Subject

By S. L. Rothafel ("Roxy") Capitol Theater, New York

Of all the phases in this continually developing motion picture industry, perhaps no feature has developed more rapidly or strongly than the short subject. Our particular interest in this part of motion picture presentation is not recent. We have long advocated the program value of the short subject. We have even experimented on entire programs made up of this type of feature. We have written and spoken about the value of the short feature before.

It is quite true that the past year has not seen the short subject as frequently in its accustomed place in the program. This has been due principally to the increased output of two hour pictures which has eliminated the possibility of any accompanying features other than a special musical presentation. Nevertheless the short subject has lost none of its popularity and it cannot help but increase in value as greater care and thought is given to its production.

The possibilities of the short subject is so unlimited that it offers any number of new fields to the producer with imagination. Travel, scenic studies, cartoon series—each supplies a different need. The variety of such films place at the disposal of the exhibitor material with which he can build up atmosphere in a program, strike a timely note on any particular subject, or create a complementary entertainment to his principal feature. Furthermore, the musical possibilities which are contained in the intelligent and imaginative scoring of such short subjects, provide an additional feature in successful program building.

More Short Subjects

By Joseph Plunkett, Managing Director Mark Strand, New York City.

The short subject on Broadway! That's easy—there's but one answer. It is simply this: Give them more and more short subjects.

The more short subjects in a program, the more diversified the program and, of course, the wider the appeal to patrons. Some of the audience like a scenic; others favor the news reels, and, if they are not pleased with the feature picture, they are at least given some entertainment by the diversified program.

All showmen surely remember the late President Wilson's oft-quoted statement about vaudeville. As I recall it, he regularly attended the Keith house in Washington during and after his White House days because, he said, he was sure to find entertainment in some of the acts, even though the others might not appeal to him.

More short subjects for Broadway moving picture theaters, means more acts which appeal to a cosmopolitan audience. You can't please them all, I'm sure, but with a varied program of short subjects you stand a better chance of making them feel that they've got their money's worth.

I've been building and presenting programs of the Mark Strand theater for just five years, and my experience dates back many more years, but I am not yet vain or foolish enough to believe I know just what the public wants. For me to say that short subjects must be on every program would, I believe, be folly.

But I do say that from my own experience, the more diversified the program is (particularly with the idea of setting off your feature picture) the more interesting and entertaining your program will be to patrons.

How do I know that my programs please the patrons? The infallible proof is the box office. Our patronage is steady and gaining; we see the same familiar faces every week, and during the Tenth Anniversary we had letters from hundreds of patrons saying they had missed but one or two weeks in the entire time the Mark Strand was open. Others wrote they had attended every show. And, quite needless for me to say, the folk who took the trouble to write to me in congratulation on our Tenth Anniversary took the trouble to tell us that our programs had been a genuine entertainment.

Another interesting method we have of learning just what the Mark Strand patrons think of the programs is through the "comment slips." Ushers make out a memorandum giving as nearly as possible the exact phrases they have overheard from patrons leaving the theater. O. yes; we get criticisms as well as good words. The idea is to get a frank unbiased slant from the patrons on just what they think of the program. The ushers have been instructed not to dope the comment slips; we want to hear the "knocks" if any, just as we want to hear the boost. Then we can correct our own faults.

When I say, "more short subjects," I speak from experience of five years in the Mark Strand as managing director; I speak with the supreme authority of steadily increasing box office figures, and the backing of the comment slips.

The short subject is essential to a program.

More of them are needed on Broadway—and elsewhere!

Praise

May I not avail myself of this opportunity to compliment you on the splendid fight which you waged in behalf of short subject motion pictures during the last twelve months?

The results cannot be accurately gauged at this time, but, as soon as the shortened feature pictures have had a wider distribution subjects will assume their right position of importance on every well balanced theater program.

What the Public Wants in Short Subjects As Voiced by the Committee on Public Relations

Improve Quality

By Horace McFarland, President American Civic Association, Harrisburg, Pa.

I have noticed the serious condition complained of. Short films are not only short in length but short in wit, and sometimes short in decency.

If they are properly handled they can be to the main feature of the performance just what the anthem and the prayer are to the preacher's sermon—properly introductive.

Items of a witty nature will of course always be suitable for these films. Short travel incidents ought to be very much in point. The occasional presentation of the motive of a book among the best sellers would fit. A short showing of some great city, particularly of Washington, would count. I could see an interesting short film relating to the rest hour of a great school, showing the kiddies pouring out of the door and getting at their sports.

But I think your producers ought to have no difficulty in finding the subjects.

Health Subjects

By James A. Tobey, Administrative Sec'y., National Health Council, Washington, D. C.

I wish to state that it is my opinion that more short subjects dealing in a proper manner with Public Health would be of great value in the motion picture industry. Such films could be produced so that they are interesting as well as instructive, and they need not be merely pictures on the expression of dry, tiresome facts. Health can be made interesting, and it is of course obvious that the subject is one of the most important that any individual in this country has to deal with.

Children's Subjects

By C. J. Atkinson, Executive Sec'y., Boys' Club Federation, N. Y.

I agree with the general statement that the present type of material provided through the "short subject" reel, is very frequently open to objection and should be improved. My suggestions for improvement are:

(1) The use of children subjects—this is a theme universally popular and always appealing. It lends itself to the sentimental, pathetic and humorous, (often to all three at once). Such subjects are equally popular with children and adults. Care should be taken to avoid any children's pranks that are vicious or destructive. There is plenty of material without this. (2) Here is an opportunity of working in scientific subjects that must of necessity be dealt with briefly. This applies particularly to studies in Natural History but can be carried into any branch of science.

Through the Committee on Public Relations the Hays organization is in constant touch with the demands of the public as to pictures through 62 civic, welfare, and other organizations. In an effort to determine the wants of the public as to short subjects, the editor of THE FILM DAILY sent to Col. Jason S. Joy, executive secretary of this committee the following letter:

The Letter

Upon the development and the improvement of the short subject I believe much that concerns the motion picture business in a vital manner depends.

If the short subject is allowed to deteriorate—and unless something is done in a manner of support—this branch of our business threatens to ease off and in time to drop into the hands of a very limited number of people. The reason for this is that the exhibitor believing that his public is not very much interested in short subjects refuses to pay a price sufficient to allow the operation of this branch of the industry to a degree sufficiently successful financially.

Will you, I wonder, bring up before your Committee on Public Relations the question of what they desire in short subjects. Whether they think the present type of material could be improved and how, and any other questions along this line which occur to you.

Replies received come from various parts of the country; they represent every class of the public and every shade of opinion, forming an opinion in short subjects.

Discussion Necessary

By Hugh Frayne, General Organizer American Federation of Labor

It is my opinion that the subject which he mentions should be brought before the Committee on Public Relations at its next meeting, for discussion and action. In the meantime, it might be a good idea if you and Colonel Joy would prepare an opinion for the benefit of the Committee at that time.

Appoint Committee

By Estelle M. Sternberger, The National Council of Jewish Women

I feel that if a committee were appointed to work out a list of short subjects, it will be possible to obtain a better reaction on the whole question. Do you not think it would be advisable to appoint a special committee with this question in mind?

Geographical Films

By John F. Moore, The International Committee, Y. M. C. A.

The question asked is difficult to answer, although it is interesting to note that both in the large theaters and the small family picture houses the audiences respond surprisingly to short films of a semi educational character, especially those showing the habits and lives of animals, birds and flowers. I think that while the slapstick will always have some followers their number is rapidly lessening and that the short picture of the old order is nearing the end of its day.

I wonder whether a series of short pictures told in story form showing the great cities of the world might not have a public appeal. To merely show moving pictures of the great cities does not get very far. I saw a fine motion picture of London but it left the audience cold. If, however, there had been some little thread of story to carry it along the response of the audience I am sure would have been quite different.

Again more short films on the Yale order would help. Judging from those I have seen they seem equally to please the high-brow and the low-brow. Possibly they are a little too long and that a series of pictures of historic events of not more than one reel each would help greatly.

I am becoming one of those who think the tendency to long pictures is being overdone. There appears to be not a few pictures of eight, nine, ten, eleven and sometimes even more reels and with rare exception they would be far better if the padding were taken out and they were reduced to two thirds their apparent proportions. I think the producers will be wise to learn in time that the public is far more interested in good pictures than in long pictures.

To sum up—I would suggest not the elimination of but lessening of the slapstick. I think we could safely dispense with the bathing ladies as they have been with us long enough to be quite familiar. We could use to larger value stories woven around great cities, distant countries and single events in history and in fiction. Short stories could be culled from great books just as short half hour plays have been made from similar sources.

Need for an Educational Campaign

By Jason S. Joy, Executive Secretary, Committee on Public Relations

The thing which strikes me most forcibly is the need for an educational campaign designed to bring about knowledge of, and support for, subjects which, of course, would act favorably on the producing of the game.

Important Problem

By Mrs. Coffin Van Rensselaer, Executive Secy. Nat'l Civic Federation

I entirely agree with you that short reel material is as important a subject as the producer must and in which some danger lies.

Safety Lessons

By Marcus Dow, Executive Secretary, Bureau of Public Safety, Police Department, New York

Short reels containing stories will convey a lesson in public safety will not only hold interest and be popular but would be a most valuable contribution to the movement for better films.

Illustrated In Films

By Le Roy Bowman, Sec'y. and Director, The Nat'l. Community Center, Columbia University, N. Y.

I have been concerned about the elimination or subordination of the short subject in motion picture some time past and have spoken of it. I believe this is a matter on which our Committee and organization represented on the Committee can well afford to expend some thought and energy.

There are two reasons, others that lead us to the theater to the motion picture house. Cultural stimulation and education and we go with the expectation of watching keenly and profiting. A splendid picture as "Abraham Lincoln" and "The Covered Wagon" very welcome when we go with in mind and we put as much of psychic energy in watching and appreciating the picture as we would some of our major work of the theater.

There is another reason, however, that leads more of us to the theater and that is relaxation of a kind which is pleasant and, in the second place, instructive and helpful. My study in sociology lead me to suspect that the city environment creates a greater need for relaxation than it does for cultural development, and despite the vast importance of this ideal, it is the short subject that tributes most to relaxation. I believe the short subject could be improved a great deal if there was more attention put on plot as there is no longer reels. I believe it is a subject of a different technique ould like very much to see one eparture in the short subject

a short reel on Teapot Dome noptical review of the life of the public eye would be fairly interesting. Little journeys big advantage of the short

Educational Subjects

Thomas A. McGoldrick, Dept. ature, International Federation holic Alumnae, Sinsinawa, Wis.
ems to me an absolute necesthe motion picture to include subject picture of a high tone
e. Indeed, too frequently, an
gusting comedy, or antiquated icture. I think the educational can be made an interesting iller picture by 1, showing loof famous stories; 2, by illus-well known dramatic poems;
ravel pictures of places figurthe day's news.

ere are only a few of the num-excellent possibilities awaiting oment, I think the public likes that it is learning something ould quickly show its apprecia-the well balanced program a worth while short picture.

Condense Scenarios

By Elsie Pearl
ieve that if the exhibitor who lack of interest on the part of blic, could be dissuaded from ea, which to my mind is quite ous, there would result a good rward. I hear from all sides or that feature picture being g, and this or that short film oo poor. Could not producers ouraged in condensing some fine scenarios? The average igests a short lecture or a short ear better than a long one, and ue strikes home quicker with eing direct and concise, than ing which leaves it fatigued.
s fact, exhibitors and producers take advantage and I feel ter a sincere trial, the outcome be successful artistically and ercially.

ems that a large proportion of subjects are comedies, and it this type that most attention be given, for while there has a considerable improvement, is yet room for a great deal
e. Many of these films are so y lacking in any continuity pear to be merely the result of nd seeking the most utter sort ge-podge. I have in mind pary the mud-slinging variety and hms as are used to exploit Baby

Peggy, all utterly opposed to good comedy.

These certainly reflect a pretty poor estimation of the public's tastes, for though it seems to be conceded that the average taste is rather ordinary, yet the younger generation would doubtless benefit from a higher production, and in time, really reject the poorer stuff.

The Lloyd or Sidney Drew pictures and other like ones, based on possible and humorous events of everyday life, are far more healthfully entertaining, and have, I am sure, been quite equally as popular as others. Not enough distinction has been made between pure comic films and offensive, grotesque antics.

Colonel Joy, at the last meeting, requested from the Members some intimation of what would be desired at future meetings. May I not include my suggestion in this letter to you? I would be interested in seeing one Children's Matinee Program, or more especially a few examples of the kind of comedy used at such performances.

Nature in Films

By Harold A. Caparn, Landscape Architect, New York

Probably the producers assume that a filler ought to be comic as anti-thetical to the usual serious character of the main picture, and thus easily assume that slapstick comedy is what the public likes. For my part, I think the slapstick definitely bad, not only because of its witlessness, but because it accustoms the public to think that painful and humiliating situations are in themselves humorous.

I should say that one class of available substitutes might well be the insect and other natural history pictures which often seem to be well received. Also I think the usual line drawing absurdities are acceptable.
Also the shorter historical pictures, best of all in fact, if they can be used.

I am wondering if it would not be well for the producers to look upon fillers much as stage producers used to look on curtain raisers, i. e. as tabloid dramas not usually employing the best stars, and requiring little stage setting or change of scene. If fillers could be produced on this basis, utilising some of the innumerable good short stories comic, tragic and otherwise. I would think their cost might be comparatively small and the status of the filler might be much improved.
I assume that the scenarios of fillers would be constructed to avoid expensive settings, thus forming a sort of foil or contrast to the main picture.

Improve Comedies

By Mrs. Frank H. Parcells, Daughters of the American Revolution, Brooklyn, N. Y.

I think the style of short reel picture could be improved. It is seldom that I see a good comedy short reel.

At present I have no suggestions to make as to the subjects to be used, or improvements to be made in the old ones which I realize is not helpful, but I feel that good comedy pictures can be made without being so ridiculous and cheap as most of them are today.

Short Stories

By Lillian A. Lilly, Chairman, Motion Picture Committee, General Federation of Women's Clubs.

A performance made up of just feature pictures would be both tiresome and tiring to me as I find the short reel breaks the tension after sustained interest, but just what they should be is another story.

We have novels of book length, and magazine short stories of all lengths, why not what is popularly called short stories on the screen?
These latter are simply one incident developed, moving to a swift conclusion and comedy or tragedy as the author wills. Is it not just as good business to the screen the good short stories that we have as well as the book ones? There is a large field for selection here. Some of the short story plot has been used but built out into a feature picture, why not have just the simple short story to balance the feature picture? Of course, I do not know the financial side of this but I pass it along as a suggestion.

The short reels are a boon to the person who only has a limited time to spend in the theater and who can get a complete impression in a little space of time.

I'm just wondering as I write whether it would be possible to run on an act of some popular play. Here again I am on strange ground but almost everything is done these days and there might be some way of reconciling differences between the spoken and silent drama. It would not be necessary to have only modern ones but some that have reputations that have survived the years.
Then too, we have the great paintings whose scenes as they are related to history or life might be illustrated in this way.

I do hope for the reputation of the Public Relations Committee that you receive some valuable suggestions and that some of the members will be more intelligent on the subject than I am. Of course, we would all chorus patriotic and civic subjects but these I take it are not what you mean.

Emotional Variation

By Rev. G. J. Becker, Financial Sec'y,
The American Sunday School Union,
New York City.

I heartily agree with you regarding the seriousness of the situation which has developed. I believe that every effort should be put forth to produce a clean, as well as interesting, type of short picture. It seems to me that these short picture subjects are necessary to a well rounded program. Anyone who appears before the public realizes that it is unwise to play upon one set of emotions alone and frequently the feature film does this very thing. I believe the public should be educated to support short subject films.

The program which you showed on Tuesday before the meeting of the Committee on Public Relations it seemed to me was almost ideal.
So far as practicable, an approach should be made to a program of this sort

Shorts "Crowded Off Market" by Features

By De Sales Harrison, Southeastern Representative of the Committee on Public Relations

In my opinion, short subjects will never receive the proper attention from producers—that is, the majority of producers—until they are made a more certain medium for producing revenue.

On account of the exceptionally long features that have been released within the past two years, the short subject has practically been crowded off the market. Of course, this statement cannot be taken literally, but I recall when I was booking pictures for thirty odd theaters for the Southern Enterprises, short subject contracts were piled high on the desk, with numbers and numbers of subjects contracted for and unplayed.
These subjects could not be put into the program, as the majority of features average eight reels and over.

When a manager, or booker, is arranging a program, an eight reel feature, a two reel comedy, and a one reel news, allowing five to ten minutes for announcements, advertising, overture, or any additional novelty, will mean a two hour show. I believe that exhibitors realize that this is too long for the average motion picture entertainment.

The ideal running time for a moving picture theater is an hour and forty-five minutes. A two hour show, with, an unusual production of a big type such as "The Thief of Bagdid" is all right.

I realize that this answer to your letter is more or less indefinite, but in my opinion the subjects will not improve until they are better revenue producers. They cannot be made unless they are given the bookings. The bookings cannot be given unless the features are shorter.

The answer is—are the producers to discontinue the two reel comedies, or shorten the majority of the feature pictures. In my opinion, feature pictures should be shortened, as a good short reel subject is a decided advantage to a program.

Century's Plans

In his address to the Universal sales force at their convention in the Hotel Astor, Julius Stern, president of the Century, releasing through Universal, outlined his company's product for the coming season.

Among other things he promised the salesmen that his organization would give them assured box-office bets. He based his assurance, not only on the enlarged staff equipment, but also on the list of stars lined up for the production of two-reel Century comedies. These include Buddy Messinger, Waunda Wiley, Harry McCoy, Hilliard Karr, Al Alt, Jack
Earle, Henry Murdock, "Spec" O'
Donnell, "Bubbles," the latest Stern "discovery," a five year old colored comedian, the Century Follies Girls and "Pal," the wonder dog of the screen.

New Color Process

Prologues, Historical Films and Other Short Subjects Planned by Reel-Colors, Inc.

A new company known as Reel-Colors, Inc. capitalized at $200,000 has been formed for the purpose of making short subjects in color. Offices have been opened at 50 Riverside Drive and laboratories at Lyndhurst.

This company declares it will "create" from o'd negatives lying idle on the producers' shelves pictures in colors, sample of which is ready, called "Arabian Dreams, a Creation in Colors."

It will produce prologues in colors.

This company will produce one or two-reel subjects dealing with the lives of prominent men. It will also produce "novellettes" by the same process, based on the American and Foreign novels and poems, and playettes based on famous plays.

It will also produce now and then, original reviews of each world event of importance, ready for distribution within 48 hours after that event has taken place.

The officers of the company are: A. L. Godoy, vice-president and treasurer; James T. Ruddy, second vice-president and Jose Sales Diaz, secretary.

All Star Short Bill

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Sedalia Mo.—The management of the Liberty theater ran an all short subject program last Saturday and Sunday, making a special appeal for children patronage. The idea went over big and will be tried again.

Among the subjects shown were "The Ant", one of Educational's "Secrets of Life" series; "Barnum, Jr." a juvenile comedy; the Bruce Wilderness Tale, "While the Pot Boils," and others.

Music Master Films

One Reelers of Great Composers' Lives Get Complete Orchestration by Fitz-Patrick Pictures

Fitz-Patrick Pictures, Inc. are producing an interesting series of one-reelers, based on important incidents in the lives of internationally known musical composers. The plan, as it now stands, calls for six pictures.

Fitz Patrick has a novel method of selling exclusive first-run rights to a representative theater of each city. For instance: The Eastman controls exclusive first-run for Rochester; Kinsky's Capitol for Detroit; the Circle for Indianapolis; McVicker's, Woodlawn and Stratford for Chicago; the Strand for Brooklyn; Gordon's Olympia Circuit for Massachusetts and New Haven; Rowland and Clark houses for Pittsburg; the Lyceum for Duluth; the Strand and Princess for Hartford; the Rialto and Rivoli for Broadway; and so on.

"Franz Schubert", the first release, was shown at the Rialto the week of May 4 and was so well received that Hugo Riesenfeld is holding it over for another week. This is perhaps the first time in the history of pictures that a complete and specially arranged orchestration was ever sent out with a one-reel subject. The score for "Franz Schubert" was specially arranged by Victor Wagner Director of Music at the Eastman, Rochester.

The music is scored perfectly with the action. Five of the famous Schubert compositions are played: Ballet from "Rosamund", "Moments Musicales", "Who Is Sylvia", "The Unfinished Symphony" and "Serenade". Dr. Riesenfeld used Miriam Lax, soprano and Adrian de Silva, tenor for the "Sylvia" number. The entire presentation was extremely effective and at a mid-week evening performance at the Rialto, the applause was generous.

A Summer Necessity

By J. A. TILTON
Standard Cinema Corp.

The short subject is an attractive part of the up-to-date motion picture program all the year round, but in the Summer season now approaching, it is nothing less than an absolute necessity.

It is becoming more universally recognized among showmen both large and small, that the little feature must be chosen with the same discrimination as the six-reeler. The good one and two reeler provides a concentrated package of amusement of interesting entertainment in its best form and its brevity, lightness and punch are welcome characteristics of the theater program at any time.

The short subject has the immense popularity possibilities of the newspaper daily comic strip, and this should be capitalized by the showman. Play up big your good comedians, and let your patrons know when you can expect to see them again—get them into the habit of looking for them at regular intervals, on regular days. It is this continued habit that some of our most successful papers coined until now they are running as many as 12 or 16 different series of comics day by day, and finding them among their strongest circulation builders.

Co-operation

By Mack Sennett

Comedies are necessary to an ideal program. Our daily mail from exhibitors and fans prove this to be true. Different communities and localities vary in their opinions as to which is the most popular type of comedy entertainment. Where some insist on the broad, exaggerated slapstick, others will patronize nothing but refined, situation stories with a good plot and a reason for the pictured action. These wants of the public must needs be studied to provide satisfaction; all of which means that a large corps of writers must be maintained to supply material for the directors, who in turn confer with their respective "gag-men," and together they figure out what often appears, almost impossible pieces of action, more often referred to as tricks. Such departmental co-operation is absolutely essential if a producer is striving to attain the highest degree of excellence in his pictures.

House Spirit

Old Franklin Has an Idea or Two That an Exhibitor Can Use

In the current issue of "The Close-up," the house organ for the Famous Players theaters Harold B. Franklin, director in charge of theaters, says:

"A first-class theater should breathe an atmosphere of inconspicuous refinement. It should offer a service which is distinctive, yet not obtrusive. A truly successful manager is one whose theater is considered the dominant theater in a community. His theater is accorded first place because of the spirit that dominates the employees, because his advertising instills confidence, and because the service that is offered to patrons stands out prominently in his community.

"A theater that carries with it an atmosphere of gloom cannot be successful. Theater-goers are looking for diversion and happiness. Therefore it is not surprising that they will leave the Gloom theater absent treated. What we need most in any theater is good cheer—a smile atmosphere will gladden a patron for an entire performance.

"Above all, no theater can be successful with a 'Public-be-damned' policy. It doesn't belong any more, anywhere. The day is past when untrained ushers can chew the rag, and untrained ushers must be at their post, must be neat, properly uniformed, shoes shined, with a smile of confidence on their face. No manager should overlook the fact that the attendants of his theater play an important part in making it successful, or otherwise. It is the ushers, doorman, cashier who can make a friend of a patron. More good-will can be gained by the attaches than by any other point of contact with your theater. These employees are truly representatives, and to most of the patrons, they are the only representatives with whom they come in contact.

"No employee has any right to inaugurate a dispute with a patron regarding the cause. Marshall Field stated the maxim long ago that 'the customer is always right'. Your employees must realize that the theater is operated for the patron, and not for the employee, and that it is his special privilege to act towards a patron as host or hostess.

"There should be a hospitality attendant the moment a patron enters the door of your theater—not insincere, counterfeit courtesy. A good manager cultivates among his staff an genuine spirit of hospitality and encourages a sunny disposition by being a good example himself.

"A service such as this will sell your theater to the public more than anything else.

Prospects for Summer Business

Were Never Better, Pearson Says

Suggests Cool Houses, Comedies and Short Subjects with "Pep" to Draw Patronage

By Elmer L. Pearson, Pathe

Gross business of both rentals and box office receipts have shown steady increases in the last couple of years that has been greater in proportion than the increase in general business of the country, thus clearly indicating that the motion picture business is still steadily growing and whereas general business conditions have cycles of reaction and depression, from time to time, that, to a very large extent, wipe out the gains previously made, the motion picture reactions are apparently of a milder nature and do not nullify a very large portion of its previous gain.

A few years ago exhibitors in some sections of the country looked forward to each summer's reaction with considerable apprehension.

Last summer, to the surprise of a great many, that apprehension was entirely unwarranted and most exhibitors went through the summer with a nice profit to their credit in spite of some lethargy occasioned by mental submission to apprehension.

Since the box office receipts are now on a higher general average level than they were a year ago, such slight reaction as summer and industry apprehension may bring about, will, in all probability, not drop down to the same level of box office receipts as those of last summer.

If we got through all right last summer we ought to get through considerably better this summer.

In addition to which, encouraged by the box office response to their efforts last summer, exhibitors will undoubtedly make greater efforts this summer than last with the net result that this year may see the entire elimination of the old summer fright bogey.

The thoughtful exhibitor cannot afford to close his theater during the summer time because patronage of motion picture theaters with a great many people is a pleasant habit, and denied the opportunity of indulgence in this habit, in a measure, destroys the habit, to rebuild which in the Fall the exhibitor must resort to expensive exploitation and entertainment. That portion of his normal early Fall profits is dissipated, hence, if he can possibly get through the summer by keeping open, experience has taught him that it is far better to do so.

The small portion of the average community's population that leaves during the summer should make very little difference in box office receipts. The principal reason why business falls off a little in the summer time is because theaters are not properly cooled. If the patrons are compelled to sit through long, dry programs they emerge anything but refreshed and they do not come as often as at other times of the year.

It naturally follows that if during the summer the exhibitor will avoid the extremely long, dry and profound subjects and inject "pep", comedy and diversification into his summer entertainments, there is no reason why his business should fall off to any appreciable extent.

Today's market, and particularly the output of Pathe, affords an exhibitor such a wide range of diversification of extraordinary attractiveness and "pep" that there is no excuse whatever for offering as entertainment the awesome solemnity that stigmatizes so many of the motion picture programs now being offered the public by many exhibitors.

Just now there are 10,280 exhibitors in the United States showing the Hal Roach "Our Gang Comedies." It occurs to me that that fact is irrefutable evidence that the public enjoy the diversification that good comedy injects into a program. Show me the series of dramatic subjects that has endured at all for over two years. Show me the series of dramatic subjects that has endured one year, that at the end of the year had even half this many regular customers.

Pathe are releasing an average of two Two-Reel Comedies per week, consisting of "Our Gang", "Mack Sennett", "Will Rogers", "Harry Langdon-Sennetts", "Spat Family", "Stan Laurel", "Ben Turpin" and others of equal or better quality, and while we did not get this comedy series well under way until recent months, their reception at the hands of the public has just been one tremendous ovation after another. In fact, while our customers have considerably increased their use of comedies, it is still very plain that they are still considerably underestimating the ability of the public to consume and pay for this type of entertainment. The best advice I know of to offer the exhibitor at this time is:

"Buy comedies and diversification in your program until it hurts with absolute safety, because it will never hurt, and in all probability it will put you through the summer with a splendid profit, your apprehensions not withstanding."

Try a couple all short subject programs per week. The results will surprise you, and there is plenty of this kind of film for the purpose.

Key City Conditions

By D. J. Chatkin,
Sales Manager Educational.

Just returned from a trip to the following cities: Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Louisville, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit and Buffalo.

I took special pains to investigate the manner in which short subjects are being advertised today and it is indeed gratifying to note the improvement in this respect, over what was being done a year ago. I believe the exhibitor is really beginning to realize the value of advertising his short subjects to his box office.

Briefly, this is what I found in the various cities:

Chicago: One of the outstanding cities in this respect. A great deal of attention is given the short subject by largest theaters in city. Not only on advertising and electric lights, but advance trailers are used. This must bring returns to box office or it would not be done.

Milwaukee: Short subject receives splendid advertising and exploitation by the largest first run houses. One house in particular went so far as to build a special prologue around the comedy—with box office results.

Minneapolis & St. Paul: Some theaters in the twin cities let the public know when they have a comedy, but nothing is done in a concrete manner. The idea seems to prevail that short subjects are just fillers, and no mention need be made of them. An altogether erroneous idea. The public is interested in every single unit of each show. Several houses in the twin cities take full advantage of every opportunity to exploit their short films.

Des Moines has started to take advantage of short subjects in their advertising and out front, but not enough to get them any returns. I believe however they intend to go after this much stronger. What is being done is certainly an improvement.

Omaha certainly gives short subjects plenty of space in newspapers and out front.

Kansas City: Very little space is given to short subjects in the advertising or out front.

St. Louis: Gives short subjects splendid exploitation. Very good space in newspapers as well as advance trailers are used which unquestionably bring results to the box office.

Louisville still a little backward on advertising short subjects. Not much change here since a year ago.

Cincinnati: Not very much attention is given to advertising the short subjects either in newspapers or out front. About same as last year.

Cleveland: A vast improvement is noticeable here in method of advertising.

Youngster Will Accept Surplus Films

Hal Hodes, New York manager for Educational, received the following letter from Charles Hawlik, Garfield, N. J., a freckle-faced youngster of 9 who wanted "a few rools of films" to play with. Hodes comments on the letter as follows: "The writer of the attached must have seen some of the super-long—excuse me—super big features that were released this last year and consequently figures that a few 'rools' would never be missed from these films."

The Felix Vogue

England Takes to the Famous Cat—Experiences of the Only Woman Distributor of Short Subjects

Everybody knows Felix—the funny cat. Felix has brought laughter and life to many an otherwise dead program. And while America seems to have appreciated Felix considerably from the box-office view point, over in England—and they do say Englishmen have no sense of humor—Felix has walked right in, stood them on their heads and walked right out again. In London today Felix is the recipient of an honor in that the most popular song of the day is entitled "Felix Kep. On Walking" and it is being sung by many music hall performers. There are Felix handkerchiefs, Felix toys, Felix chinaware and an actor in vaudeville is made up to resemble Felix and struts in the same manner as Felix's peculiar little walk.

Back of Felix is Pat Sullivan the cartoonist. Few know Sullivan but there is hardly anyone who doesn't know Margaret J. Winkler, the only woman distributor of short subjects in the business. Up to 1921 Margaret Winkler—she's married now and has another name—was secretary to Harry Warner. Because of the Federated Convention on the Coast she was taken there by Harry Warner and later she decided to get into the business on her own. She looked about for material and decided upon Felix which had been shown for three years on the Paramount schedule. Since then her success has been most unusual.

Felix is in distribution in practically every part of this country and the foreign rights are reported to be working out very successfully.

Now, in addition to Felix, Miss Winkler is handling the Alice series and in the Fall will start distribution on a series of two reels based on a series of poems written by Edgar A. Guest and published in Red Book and other well known magazines.

The Felix cartoons are distributed through the King Newspaper Feature service and it is reported that the Geo. Borgfeldt Co., will have a line of Felix toys.

The News Weekly

How it Developed from Early Elks' Parades to Present Costly Staff Men Around the World

Can you remember the old "news reel?" Remember the Elks' parades; the unveilings of monuments, the eternal ship launching and the neighborhood festivals? They were a "riot" in 1912, in the early days of the co-called "news reel."

The "weekly" of 1912 was not unlike a rural or small town newspaper. Small town papers have their places. They are a necessity. But they have no business trying to appeal to a world-wide audience. The "weeklies" filled with trivial happenings of no general interest, were trying to appear to a vast, cosmopolitan clientele. They were "chasers" on the theater programs.

In 1913, William R. Hearst started the International News. Pathe, which had its share of the old line stuff, came along a year later. But Hearst developed a battery of camera men all around the world, with trained newspaper editors back of the organization ferreting out news. Now Pathe, International, Fox and others have staff men everywhere.

In 1912 public men—governments—considered the "weekly" a form of cheap entertainment. They were thinking of nicolets, nicolodeons and such where school children sneaked in of an afternoon without the knowledge of their parents and where loafers loafed for a few minutes of their abundance of time.

Editors of the News Reel had to fight this attitude. The news reel finally gained the recognition it deserved. It is gaining more recognition every day. At one time public men ignored the news reels as they had ignored the "weekly". Today they seek out the news reel editor in his lair.

Saving the Bill

By William Fait

The principal and best reason for the use of short subjects is of that of giving variety to a program and any man who has watched an audience closely will have discovered that there is a certain class of people who are always more interested in the short subject than in the so-called feature of the bill.

It is my experience that the subject often saves a week's business. I recall in the past year one particular occasion when for the want of a thing better I was forced to put a very mediocre feature. Alone the feature could not have brought an audience but a very bad week's business. Cutting the feature to the bone and putting in some particularly short subjects. I turned that week's business not only to an acceptable week, but received more favorable comment on the whole bill than for a long time before or for a time after.

Short subjects however must be carefully selected and presented on the feature on the bill. There are a few films made today either for a short subject that are not too good or there is little or no difficulty in getting out a thousand or fifteen hundred feet from the average feature of without spoiling either story or continuity, likewise the average subject will always stand up without spoiling them.

While at the Eastman in Rochester I had three News services, from which I culled from six to eight hundred feet scored them carefully and one news reel was a Feature on the bill.

Just as in vaudeville the short subject must have its proper "spot" on the bill, this depending of course on the nature of the subject and the importance of the program. Likewise the short subject must be selected with due regard to the rest of the program.

I hope again to see the day when features will be made in from 1000 to 6000 feet (plenty long enough to tell the average story) which will give us ample room for short stuff and will unquestionably help the office.

The public has "gone nuts" over stories of the Orient.

Look at the big successes, past, present and coming, with an Oriental background.

Here's a peach of a story, laid in Egypt. A young American rescues a beautiful young girl from a harem, but doesn't get her to safety until he has been vamped, captured, beaten, shot at, imprisoned and a few other things for good measure.

As a production it is positively splendid. The cast is perfect. Allene Ray is a most charming heroine; Bruce Gordon is fine as the hero; Anna May Wong is the vamp of the harem (and she is there); and Frank Lackteen as Hamid will knock them all cold.

Nation—Wide Canvass of Exhibitors' Treatment of Short Subjects

Insufficient Advertising

However, it is a lamentable fact however is responsible for the exploitation does not give a proportionate amount of advertising to the short subjects. In the case of Educational, it is hardly a cause for this lack of advertising part of the big theaters, as usually all the advertising aids available on short subjects, as are used by the exchange on features. The manner in which well-known newspaper reviewers have used the Educational one-reelers, Plastigrams, in their reviews that the public's interest at times is not always centered on the feature. Often the short subjects are the most entertaining numbers in the program, and the writer believes that if exhibitors would stress the importance on their short subjects they would find that where features prove disappointing, the strength and popularity of short subjects would overcome the deficiency on the feature in the eyes of the audience.

A small town exhibitor, who has little or no newspaper advertising, can exploit the short subjects liberally and prominently by displaying posters and photos.—LEE L. BERGER, Sec'y, Big Feature Exchange Corp., Kentucky.

MASSACHUSETTS

In the matter of presentation of short subjects, the Fenway, Boston, is the field in New England. James F. Stuart, manager of the Fenway, has a keen eye for short subjects and knows how to put them in the proper musical setting, an important feature.

An example of the kind of program which I believe to be a well-merited one, recently the Fenway presented a News Reel; Robert Lloyd in "Wilderness Tale," "From the Windows of My House;" and one of the "Secrets of Life" series titled "The Spider," a Secrets of Life Film, distributed by Educational "Juvenile Committee" titled "Barnum Junior;" also "The Spider."

The Boston Transcript, when commenting on the showing of the above program, said, "This writer is especially pleased that at last Boston and New England have a manager (James Stuart of the Fenway) and a theater that have an eye for short subjects and novelty reels—"The Spider," a Secrets of Life Film, distributed by Educational is excellent and Robert Bruce's "Wilderness Tale," "From the Windows of My House," deserves special mention. The musical setting for these subjects is appropriate and worthy of the subject.

Another example of Mr. Stuart's ability in selecting programs so that they have diversified entertainment is furnished when using Harold Lloyd in "Girl Shy," a single-reel drama was presented and another of the "Secrets of Life" Series titled "The Bee," both subjects being very appropriate to surround the feature; a jazz poem in addition to the Overture gave added pep to the bill—certainly a well-balanced program.—JOHN J. SCULLY, Boston Manager, Educational.

MICHIGAN

Every key town in Michigan, with the exception of the first run accounts in Detroit, seem to realize the value of advertising their short subjects. Particularly is this true of the Bijou Theatrical Ent. Co., known as the Butterfield Circuit. E. C. Beatty, the general manager of the Butterfield Circuit, books his longer pictures one to two months in advance, and very conscientiously surrounds same with the pick of the short subject market. Beatty has contracted and played practically all of our releases ever since we have been a National organization.

On the releases that we furnish mats, the managers of the Butterfield Circuits use same in all their towns, and there have been a great many instances when they have devoted as much space to the two reel comedy in their newspaper ads, as they have to the longer picture.

Roy Tillson of the Fuller, Kalamazoo, is also a great believer in exploiting and getting everything out of his short subjects. His policy is three acts of vaudeville, a feature picture, and a two reel comedy, and he advertises the two reel comedy over the feature picture in numerous instances.

The Consolidated Theaters in Grand Rapids, also exploit their short subjects, and as far as the key towns are concerned in this territory, they realize the value of the short subject to their program. The only towns that do not seem to get behind their short subjects properly, are the smaller towns.

Regarding the first run situation in Detroit, we are up against a very peculiar proposition, due to the fact that in nine cases out of ten, the Kunsky houses do not select their short subjects for the following week, until Friday or Saturday, and as their copy goes to the newspaper on Thursday, it is impossible for them to advertise their short subjects. The Fox-Washington and the Broadway-Strand seem to make it a rule to always mention their short subjects in their advertising.

Several times the writer has been informed by outside people regarding the high merit of some of our single reel releases that are playing the first run houses in Detroit, without any advertising. This especially applies to our "Secrets of Life" Series, and on numerous occasions we know that one of these releases have stolen the glory over the longer picture.—M. HARLAN STARR, Detroit Manager, Educational.

The Strand Flint has a big sign across the front of the theater reading "Pathe News Here Every Week;" The Fox-Washington, Detroit, gives one-third of the display advertising to short subjects on the bill.

The suburban runs and smaller towns use liberal space in advertising ing short subjects. When using the Our Gang, Will Rogers and frequently Ben Turpin comedies, they give as much space to the advertising of these subjects as they do their feature.

How Handled

As a rule, the exhibitors open their program with the News, then run the comedy to get the people in a mood to appreciate the feature picture. By running a good comedy, the people forget the worries of the day and by the time the comedy has run, are in a very fine mood for whatever is to follow. Occasionally, if the feature is a highly dramatic production and has very little comedy relief, the comedy subject is run after the feature picture, so as to get the people in a happy mood when they leave the theater, because in this way they will appreciate more the feature and will talk more of the show. People are always more enthusiastic when they are happy.

Some of the suburban theaters are running two 2-reel comedies on a bill, giving them a two-reel comedy for the reasons stated above and a two-reel comedy after the feature picture.

The managers of the larger theaters are very careful to balance their features with well selected short subjects. If a feature is of a comedy drama nature, subjects as "Birds of Passage," "Black Shadows," "Is Conan Doyle Right?" "Why Elephants Leave Home" and etc. are used to round out the program. For instance: With "Stephen Steps Out" the Kunsy Interests used "Why Elephants Leave Home;" with "Ladies to Board," a Tom Mix western comedy picture, the Fox Washington Theater used "Among the Missing" and hence brought out both pictures to very good advantage and made a very strong bill.

Special care is also used as to the type of feature certain comedies are played with. If a feature is sensational, such as "Flaming Youth" etc., the Sennett, Turpin and Laurel comedies are used. Comedies such as the Our Gang, Rogers, Spat Family, etc. are used with more of a family type of picture.

Serials Used

Serials are used on programs to attract at the box office the attention of people who love action, thrills and out-door pictures as compared to the usual slow moving society pictures. Hence a program with a serial featured along with the feature picture, is one that will please every type of patron.

Such short subjects as "Aesop's Fables," "Topics of the Day," Grantland Rice's "Sportlights," "Pathe Review" and "Pathe News" are always welcome on any program at any time and are used on a standing order basis regardless of what feature pictures are played.

Most theater managers in this territory realize that the subjects playing with the feature program are as important as the feature itself. In many of the suburban and smaller town theaters, the exhibitors tell us that outside of few very big pictures the good two-reel comedies will draw equally as well as the feature.

The Keith Circuit, of which we have two representatives, one at Detroit and one at Grand Rapids, feature "Aesop's Fables," "Topics of the Day" and "Pathe News" just as strong as any act. A short time ago there appeared in the Detroit Free Press, a report on the Temple, Detroit, saying that "Aesop's Fables" were ten times as funny as any act on the bill and one hundred times as funny as anything in pictures.

The Keith people use "Pathe News" the last thing on the bill in order to hold the people until the show is entirely out, for they have learned from experience that unless there is a very strong act or film at the end of the show, that many people will leave before the show is entirely over.—C. W. HANSON, Detroit Manager, Pathe.

MINNESOTA

Short subjects to such a man necessarily mean nothing. He admits, however, that if he were to give them to his patrons he would have to continue to do so because they would ask for them and asking for them he would necessarily have to appease them in some way. Therefore, it is evident that if a theater were to open in his town with good complete programs the patrons would flock to the new theater at the expense of the old self-satisfied exhibitor who is not giving to his patrons what they deserve. He refuses to believe that there is additional money to be made in his town, claiming that just a certain percentage of the people go to the show anyway and he does not believe in the idea of creating new business, therefore is doing nothing so far as the advancement of the show business is concerned. When an exhibitor refuses to believe his business is advancing he is through. His days are numbered so far as success is concerned. Some day we will see in that town a great, fine theater built on the principle of giving an evening's entertainment and rest assured it will pay. It cannot help but pay.—A MINNEAPOLIS EXCHANGE MAN.

MISSOURI

The Newman, Kansas City, makes a specialty of short subjects, advertising them almost as heavily as the feature. Comments from the public indicate that this policy is correct.

They make it a point to play every week some kind of novelty subject along with the regular releases of News, review and comedy, making four or five reels of short subjects which is almost as long as the features playing in this particular theater. In other words, half of the program is devoted to short subjects.

The Miller and Palace, Wichita, controlled by Stanley Chambers, also exploit short subjects. One specific instance, "TWO WAGONS BOTH COVERED," featuring Will Rogers, was played along with "ICE-BOUND" and created more comments than any short subject ever before in the town.

I find the majority of exhibitors in the territory make it a point to play as many short subjects as possible along with each program. In other words, most of them have gotten out of the idea that a complete program can be made up of the feature alone, even though it does extend to eight or nine reels. Unfortunately, these long features have caused the exhibitor to play less comedies the past several months than ever before.

It does not seem to be the exhibitor who is at fault on account of not running short subjects, but the feature concerns who put out from seven to ten reel subjects.—C. C. VAUGHAN, Kansas City Manager, Pathe.

We have few exhibitors indeed in the St. Louis territory who realize the exploitation possibilities on short subjects. Mr. Dessberger of the Delmonte and Mr. Goldman of the Kings theaters, however, are exceptions to the general rule. They at least give the short subjects a reasonable display in their publicity. Both of these men give the short subjects approximately one-third of the amount of space given so-called feature pictures.

HARRY GRAHAM,
Pathe Manager, St. Louis

Milton Feld, the Managing Director of the Newman and Royal in Kansas City, is very careful when selecting his short subjects claiming they are one of the big assets to the theater.

Feld informs me they are being highly complimented by their patrons. He also states that due to the long features he has been unable to use Short Subjects as often as he would like and was hoping that the producers in the future would reduce the footage of features whereby he would be able to use them regularly each week. C. F. SENNING, Kansas City Manager, Educational.

I have in mind one account in Kansas City that thinks so little of short subjects that I cannot help outlining his particular policy, which to my mind, is a very, very crude one.

This particular theatre, unfortunately, is losing very heavily at the present time and has been for some time back. It is the only theatre in the country that I know of that does not play a News reel of some nature. This theatre does not consider a news reel of any value whatsoever. I might add that it is a vaudeville house, which makes it all the more peculiar.—An exchange manager.

NEBRASKA

It is my candid opinion that the average theater owner does not appreciate the box office drawing power of honest-to-goodness short reel subjects. The average exhibitor just books a comedy whether it is a single or double reel, more or less as a filler and often does not even mention in his advertising that he is running a comedy.

In our larger towns in this particular territory, the exhibitors do play up the comedies in their advertising; particularly in our two first-run theatres, the Strand and the Rialto, which in several instances have ads on short subjects almost as their feature ads.

The majority of exhibitors with a starring comedian like J. H. Ton, do not obtain the result should from the running of his dies simply because they will advertise and boost same.

I know instances where exhibitors will not even use 1-sheets on comedies and some of them even so far as to not use a set of graphs. This applies particularly the small towns where I believe are making serious mistakes. It has been my experience that in the towns, particularly those catering to the majority of farmers, if the dies are handled correctly and advertised as they should be, the theaters will show an increase in business. JAMES WINN, Omaha Manager, Educational.

NEW YORK

The short subject is slowly gaining ground, as practically every exhibitor is now doing some advertising on his short subjects. It is only in rare instances where an exhibitor does not give some space to short subjects, at least in his new advertising.

The demand from most exhibitors for Press Sheets, that they really want material that they can advertise their short subjects and give them the place in their program.

J. H. MORCONE,
Albany Manager, Educational.

BUFFALO

You probably have heard the story of the foreigner who refused to pay $2 for a small pair of shoes that fit him because he saw a pair in the window twice as large for the same price.

Unfortunately, some exhibitors purchase their films and advertise them, using the same judgment as this foreigner. They figure their tractions by length rather than quality, and do not realize that the public does not buy entertainment by the yard but by the caliber of the subject.

Vaudeville some years ago suffered from the same complaint; an act received a certain salary, a comedian received almost twice as much but today that method is "passed" some single acts in vaudeville receive a larger salary for twelve or fifteen minutes work than a troupe of people do for an act that runs an hour.

Advertise Short Reels

Fortunately, for us here in Buffalo our first run accounts are managed by two men that received their business experience in vaudeville. Vincent McFaul at Shea's Hippodrome, and Al Beckerisch at the State, both realize the importance of exploiting and advertising the short units in their program, regardless of their length. Consequently "Our Gang" and the name comedies are often seen in the lights at Loew's State, and the Ben Turpin, Sennett and Langdon comedies are exploited in the same way as Shea's Hippodrome.

Both of these theaters also give a good portion of their advertising space to comedies and other short subject novelties.

I have seen both theaters give one-quarter of the space in their newspaper ads to announcing some event appearing in the PATHE NEWS, which did not run over three hundred feet.

Only a short time ago Mr. Beckerisch of Loew's State told me he had more complaints from his patrons if he cut out a PATHE NEWS at a performance (on account of time) than if a vaudeville act were missing.

"RAPID TRANSIT"

This proves the importance of the NEWS reel and exhibitors who show it without advertising same, are losing a lot of business that should be theirs.—BASIL BRADY, Buffalo Manager, Pathe.

The undersigned who is handling a number of best short subjects in both independent and national field, is so disgusted with the manner which same are received in this territory that he hasn't a good word to say for either the theater owners or the managers of the Buffalo territory.

The whole country enthusiastically received the "Felix Cartoon," The Inkwell comics, Post Nature Sceneries, etc., while in Buffalo, Rochester and Syracuse, they are passed up as if they were the worst junk, by the foremost providers of entertainment. If this is intelligent consideration on their part we apologize but beg to differ.

Sorry but this is our experience in this territory while we know that 85 per cent of other territory is quite different.—J. BURKOWITZ, Buffalo Manager, First Graphic.

The Lincoln, Troy, is an outstanding example of a motion picture house which handles short subjects to advantage.

It invariably features "Our Gang" Comedies and the Mack Sennett Ben Turpin Comedies over the feature length productions presented at the theater.—C. W. STOMBAUGH, Albany Manager, Pathe.

A short time ago there were two very dead houses in Albany namely the Leland and Clinton Square theaters. Oscar Perrin became Manager of both of these houses and is putting both of them over in a wonderful way. Part of his success is due not only to the judicious advertising of his features, but to always giving his two reel comedies, single reel subjects and News Weeklies the proper space in his advertising.

While out in the territory a short time ago the remark was passed by an exhibitor who controls quite a few theaters, that he would not purchase any short stuff from any exchange who put out lengthy features, as he felt that his patrons were desiring of a diversified program. Also he felt that long features was hurting his business.

Of course there are a few exhibitors who think of short stuff as "Fillers" but we feel that we are educating these few to looking at it as part of their show and to advertise these reels just as much as he does feature.

The first runs in our territory short stuff as follows: Hippodrome, Buffalo, advertises an electric sign as well as programs. Loew's State, Buffalo advertise their vaudeville acts, feature comedy on a program board of the theater. They do not use programs or electric signs.

In Rochester, the Eastman, and Piccadilly do not advertise comedies in the newspapers—only. However, when our Comedy entitled "Aggravating" played at the Eastman, it was advertised on an electric sign in front of the theater.

The Empire, Eckle and Syracuse, advertise in the newspapers as they do not have electric signs or program boards.

Our smaller accounts are advertising more and more advertising material short stuff. In fact, we have increased our standing order sheets, three sheets, photographs, slides 50 per cent over what a year ago.

HOWARD F. BRADY
Buffalo Manager, Education

For years we have been endeavoring to get the exhibitor to consider all the units of his program, and the short subject units, and advertise them and consider them as separate as do the B. F. Keith Circuit every act they play. By advertising each of the acts they have hundreds of new head line semi-head liners that have both value, and our argument is, the exhibitor would do this he would soon find that all the units of his program had a draw.

With comparatively few exceptions, the exhibitor does not advertise but waits until a subject becomes popular of its own accord and then they feature or advertise.

The most we have ever seen in the exploitation of a short subject is a 1-sheet placed in the lobby, and on occasions a display on the marquee signs.—A NEW YORK CITY CHANGE MAN.

There are two theaters in the territory, namely the Bardonia and Stratford, Poughkeepsie, controlled by one Company, which are changing their policy, and claiming that business is very good. These theaters consider their subjects merely as filler and always act as if they were afraid to place short subjects on the program when they use special feature.

This is possibly one of the reasons why these theaters have no business over as they should have.

NEW YORK CITY

Although the majority of exhibitors in this territory have still to realize the box office advantage in advertising their short stuff aggressively, an increasing number of exhibitors are discovering the money value in telling their prospective patrons the good things with which they surrounded their feature picture.

Illustrating how Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y., advertised a Christie Comedy on the marquee lights.

peculiar phase of this situation at the very exhibitors who fail to advertise their short subjects, will probably bolster up a weak feature by the strongest shorts they can. Their motive is obvious, yet do not realize that the shorts will please their patrons once they are inside the house, may bring people into the theater if the shorts are advertised outside the of the liveliest exhibitors in this territory is Dave Snaper, who runs the Strand at New Brunswick, N. J. He not only advertises the Educational product aggressively—and by that I mean that he gives the short subjects their share of advertising in all of his mediums—and in the lobby—but every once in a while will build up a program consisting exclusively of short subjects, which he advertises as an "All Jazz Comedy." A saxophone is added to his orchestra, which enables him to announce an "Augmented Orchestra", the result that this showman has a splendid business because his for that particular period differs from any other in town.

O. Mumford, who runs the Tivoli, Newark, for Joseph Stern is one of the best advertisers in this territory. Mumford doesn't bother in hiding his light under a bushel basket. His comedies are advertised almost as much space in all advertising as are his features. The mediums are the newspapers, boards, programs, mailing lists, screen, etc. For instance, Cliff Rogers in a Cameo Comedy—a single advertisement will be given as fair a share of advertising space as any of the big features which play at the Tivoli. It is Mumford's theory that Bowes, having established himself in Cameo comedies, has created a clientele which would bring additional patronage to the Tivoli if that theater's prospective customers knew of his advertising.

Here is how Mumford explains it. "I merely announce a comedy, without revealing its title or the particular star featured in it, puts the exhibitor in the same class with the purveyor of a variety of soups to suit all tastes, merely using the word 'soup' on his menu. It doesn't mean a thing to those people who like certain soups. 'A Comedy' to people who want to see a star like Hamilton, Clyde Cook, Lige Bley, Cliff Bowes, or any of the comedy stars doesn't mean a thing to the shoppers of motion picture entertainment. After all, why keep the name of the attraction a secret? It's why I tell every person reaching my advertising mediums all about my entire show."

The Bimburg people, who control the West End, Standard, Broadway, Coplay and Schuyler theaters here in town, are also alive to the fact that this stuff is capable of attracting patronage. Eddie Bimburg, who does the booking for these houses, declares it is a regular policy of his organization to advertise the short subjects on the marquis of the houses, on programs, their paper, lobby signs, etc., and that they would no more think of discontinuing this policy than in shutting down the box office because they want to discourage patronage. "A live showman," said Bimburg, "will never overlook any bet which promises to increase the crowd at the box office, and the difference between a live showman and one who is constantly crying about his business consists, in the majority of cases, of the kind of advertising these individuals do."

Russel Cohen, who books for the Schwartz circuit in Brooklyn, recently told me of an incident which illustrates what his people think of advertising in connection with the short subjects they use. The Merrick, Jamaica, was about to play "Little Old New York". A two-reel comedy had been booked at one of the exchanges and was scheduled to go on with this feature when the discovery was made that "Little Old New York" was too long to allow a two-reel comedy to be played. As a result, Cohen arranged to replace it with one of our "Sing Them Again" subjects, on the theory that it contained sufficient humor, aside from its community sing qualities, to take the place of a comedy. The "Sing Them Again" was given practically equal prominence on the marquis of the Merrick as was the big feature, and the same was true of all the rest of the advertising done by that house.

In this connection, Russel Cohen made a very significant statement. Said he, "The majority of exhibitors today are in much the same position as were the retail merchants back in the days when John Wanamaker set out to show the world what real advertising was. Whereas the old time retailers were merely content with advertising that consisted of ordinary announcements, the future Merchant Prince, from the very start adopted an aggressive advertising policy, thus revealing for the first time a method which demonstrated the right kind of advertising. The exhibitor of today has at his disposal the finest advertising mediums in the world, but a short sighted policy prevents him from making proper use of them."

While passing an uptown theater not long ago, I saw in blazing electric lights the name of the feature and then on the line below, merely the two words "A Comedy". Curious to know what comedy was being played, I investigated and found it to be a Lloyd Hamilton. Upon inquiring why this exhibitor had failed to use Hamilton's name on his marquis, I was informed that he never advertised a comedy star or brand. It took some time to convince him that he ought to change his policy. He played another Hamilton last week. This morning he told me that that star's name in lights on his marquis had bettered his receipts more than $75 as compared with his former short sighted plan of making no particular mention of either the brand or star name.

It wasn't so long ago that George Gerhauser of the Eden, Brooklyn, one of that borough's prettiest theaters, and catering to the highest class clientele, found that a certain feature he had booked in, did not come up to the standard. Gerhauser, who had also booked the two-reel Educational drama "Ne'er-to-Return-Road", featuring Lewis Stone and Wallace Berry, saw the possibilities of this subject and promptly converted that two-reel drama into his main attraction. His advertising carried the line "Lewis Stone and Wallace Berry in 'The Ne'er-Do-Well'". "Added attraction * * *" and here was the name of the feature which was originally to have been the main attraction of his show. In other words, Gerhauser is a man who studies his short subjects for their possibilities and then bills them for all they are worth.

HAL HODES,
New York Manager, Educational.

OHIO

A large majority of the exhibitors in this territory use short subjects, especially comedies with their features whenever it is possible to do so, and the few who do not are the ones who are not usually found in the limelight. In Cleveland, Al Freedman, of Loew's Ohio Theaters, uses a comedy with each feature if it is possible for him to do so, and it is not unusual for him to cut the length of the feature in order to put in a comedy. He also gives his comedies and short subjects a portion of his advertising space in the newspapers, and he is continually complaining about the length of the features—in that their length prevents him at times from using as many short subjects as he would like to.

In Toledo there are four first run theaters, but only one, The Princess, Paramount, uses a comedy regularly, and their standing order is for 2-reel comedy each week, no matter what the length of their feature might be.

The other three first class run theaters do not pay much attention to their short subjects. Their main idea is to get as many shows in as possible on Sundays, and in order to do that they cut their shows as short as possible, never figuring that there are six more days in the week when they will have sufficient room to take care of all the patrons who desire to come. As a result, the Princess, in giving their patrons a well balanced show, usually does the business of the town.

In Akron, Dunlevy, of the Strand and Botzum, of the Orpheum, give a lot of attention to their short subjects, and the same is true of the Strand, Alhambra and Valentine at Canton, Ohio.

In Youngstown, Christy Deibel, of the Liberty, uses a 2-reel comedy each week and besides exploiting it in the newspapers as a special attraction board hanging under his marquis on which he features on brand, title and stars as his comedy.

In summing up the short reel situation among the exhibitors I find that the one who does not use short subjects is the one who is not rated as a successful exhibitor.

HARRY SKIRBOLL,
Cleveland Manager, Educational.

Comedy Program

The best example of proper utilization of short subjects in our territory, is the exploitation used by Loew's Allen, Cleveland.

For instance: JAZZ WEEK—ALL COMEDY PROGRAM—ALLEN, Week of Jan. 6; Buster Keaton in "OUR HOSPITALITY;" Will Rogers in "TWO WAGONS—BOTH COVERED;" Ben Turpin in "THE DAREDEVIL."

HAPPINESS WEEK beginning March 23; Laurette Taylor in "HAPPINESS;" Ben Turpin in "10 DOLLARS OR 10 DAYS;" Lloyd Hamilton in "LONESOME."

Another JAZZ WEEK program consisted of Douglas McLean in "YANKEE CONSUL;" Will Rogers in "UNCENSORED MOVIES;" Lloyd Hamilton in "MY FRIEND" (would have used another Turpin, but had none available).

In every instance, the short subjects on the programs mentioned have been just as much the feature of the program as the feature-length subject. The "Spotlight" on the Park program was billed as heavily as the feature and comedy.

The Loew houses in Cleveland are very appreciative of good short subjects, and where the length of their features does not interfere, they devote much of the time on their bills, and in advertising to short subjects. —O. J. RUBY, Cleveland Manager, Pathe.

Here is an excellent two-reel comedy that contains a large number of laughs and will highly amuse the great majority of patrons. It is one of the best constructed and most amusing of the recent Christies and is well up to this company's usual high standard. Occasionally a short subject will be given prominent space in the advertising and lobby display by Mr. Dolle of the Alamo, Louisville; Mr. I. Libson of Cincinnati, Columbus and Dayton, and Mr. Fred Meyer of the Palace Theater, Hamilton.

For instance, pictures of the Kentucky Derby and the Championship Race of Zev and In Memoriam last year, were advertised exceptionally by these exhibitors and Mr. Dolle just recently played the Will Rogers two-reel comedy "TWO WAGONS, BOTH COVERED," as part of a double feature bill, devoting as much space to advertising the comedy as he did to the feature.—S. C. JACQUES, Cincinnati Manager, Pathe.

We have found that there are very few theatres with the exception of our first-run account which are using any novelty one-reelers with their program. By novelty one-reelers we mean such releases as Pictorial Reviews, Sport Lights, Scenics and Cartoons. Ninety per cent of the exhibitors are still of the opinion that all one and two-reelers are merely fillers and do not warrant their serious consideration in advising the public.

A great complaint against short reels among the exhibitors at the present time, and their reason for not giving them more consideration is the fact that for the past year most of the features have been from one to three reels longer than the regular features of two years ago, and it is impossible to play over a certain number of reels on their programs in order to maintain their schedule. The average length feature which they would like to play is six or seven reels. At no time should they be over seven reels in length.

You will find that the comedies are always booked with each show, but very little attention is given in any of their advertising or at the front of the theatres to let the public know what they are playing.—J. S. JOSSY, Progress Pictures, Cleveland.

OKLAHOMA

Our experience has been that the large majority of exhibitors in this territory are not alive to the possibilities and reward of properly exploiting their short subjects. The only advertising which is usually done is to merely mention in their newspaper or program Ads., "Added a Comedy" or "Good Comedy today". This is done in spite of the fact that they all admit the value of good Short Subjects to their program and box office. We do not know how to account for this condition, for in the case of our Company, an extensive line of good advertising materials is carried, which makes it easily possible for them to get the most out of it.

If exhibitors would advertise in the same proportion as the footage of the reels they run, much more space would be given to Short Subjects, and if their advertising was based on the merits of the various pictures constituting the program, there is no doubt that there would be a large increase in the advertising space devoted to the Short Subject.

Regret to say that we do not know of any exhibitor in the territory who consistently advertises his program on the above basis.—N. P. EBERLEY, Oklahoma City Manager, Educational.

PENNSYLVANIA

An important exchange man writes: "Most first run programs in Pittsburgh consist of a feature, comedy and news. None have featured shorts over the feature or have played a complete short subject program.

"Rowland & Clark Theaters, the biggest chain in Pittsburgh very seldom advertise in the newspapers the brand or title of comedy playing. In fact, no mention is made of the short subjects. There are several brands of two-reel comedies that have box office value and if advertised would increase theater attendance. Just why they do not advertise comedies and short subjects has never been satisfactorily explained.

"The Million-Dollar Grand devotes a corner space in its Sunday advertisement to the comedy, giving name of star and title; also line space to the News and Topics."

We find that the exhibitors in this territory cater towards good short subjects. They are more anxious to play, five, six or seven reel features and add short subjects, than they are to play a feature of ten or twelve reels.

We think that the public in this territory are very anxious to see good short subjects. We believe that the price we get for short subjects discourages the exhibitor in making them. We think that the exhibitor should give serious consideration to his surrounding bill—try to increase the price he is paying for them.

De Luxe has taken quite a number of very good short subject series, which we purchased at a fair price and which we are able to sell at a price attractive to the exhibitor, but we do not think that the producer would be able to continue to make short subjects profitable to himself at the price he is securing for the entire United States and foreign countries
OSCAR NEUFELD,
De Luxe Film Co., Inc.

The Olympic, Pittsburgh, advertises the complete program, naming all shorts by their proper trade name i.e. Pathe Review, International News, star, title, brand and name of comedy, and devotes about one-third of the ad space to the shorts. Loew's Aldine also mentions the comedy name and various other shorts in its Sundays ads.

Louis Sidney, Loew's Aldine, put on the "NATIONAL RASH," Grantland Rice's Sportlight for which he gave a stage setting, consisting of a club house, miniature greens, etc.—B. M. MORAN, Pittsburgh Manager, Pathe.

TEXAS

Southern Enterprises, who operate the Palace in Dallas, use the short subjects on all programs to their best advantage.

"Regardless of what length feature they have, they always run their complete short subject program. Right after the prologue they open up with the Pathe News reel, follow it with Pathe Review. In the event they have any other special one or two-reel subject booked as they generally do from one week to another, this subject follows the Review. After this the feature is flashed on the screen, and the program winds up with a one or two-reel comedy.

"To my way of thinking this is the best way to balance the program, for as a rule features that are of the melo, or society drama type that have a plot that keeps the audience intensely interested, holds them practically under a strain. By running the comedy after the feature is completed, it gives them a chance to relax, so to speak, and sends people out in a cheerful mood.

"To my way of thinking the Palace in Dallas has one of the best balanced programs for a straight motion picture show in this part of the country.

"The Majestic, Dallas, which is operated by the Interstate Amusement Co., also has a well balanced program, but on account of running vaudeville, their arrangement is a little different. They open with Topics of the Day, which gets the audience in a cheerful mood at the start, come back with Aesop's Fables, following with the vaudeville. They close their show with the Pathe News. For a vaudeville house, I do not know of any better combination than these three reels or three similar ones run in this manner.

"Mr. Hoblitzelle is the owner of the Majestic operating in Dallas, Ft. Worth, Houston, and San Antonio, and all these theaters have the same method of exhibiting their short subjects.

S. J. COUGHLIN,
Pathe Manager, Dallas.

Short subjects play a very important part in the programs of the Phillip's Egypt, Fort Worth, C. A. McGuire, Manager, states that he considers the short subject most essential to balance his program and he uses the utmost care in his selection, in other words, quality short subjects are selected with just as much care and thought as the features, which results in a perfectly blended bill.

This exhibitor displays his short subjects in the lobby, using cut-outs, photographs, etc. He assumes that the average patron is interested in the short subjects, therefore he does not fail to mention in his ads what these subjects are. He states that the short subject has many times in the past saved the show from complete failure.

I am happy to say many more exhibitors in this territory have the same thought along these lines.

F. A. TOMES,
Dallas Manager,
Educational.

In small towns they usually make a short reel program of a two-reel serial, a two-reel western, or a one or two-reel comedy, or they get a two-reel western and a two-reel comedy and one-reel scenic.

In the past two years they have not been using the reel program extensively as before, for the reason that there have been a great many re-issue features put on the market and they were sold at about the price of a good two-reel western. But a two-reel western seems to be in demand now than they have for some time, and whenever a two-reel western is in demand it is to make up a short reel program.

We are releasing a serial of two-reel western starring Leo Maloney and we have better success with than any serial we have ever had with possibly the exception of our two.—FRANK FAY, Southwest Film Corporation, Dallas.

TENNESSEE

We have in this territory a number of very progressive exhibitors who take advantage of advertising their short reels and would not consider using a program without comedy, or some other kind of reel.

The first run theaters in this territory using Pathe News always take advantage of advertising the events and one theater keeps a sheet on the News in front of the theater at all times in a most conspicuous place.

Carey encloses a letter from F. Suzore of the Suzore, Memphis, as indicating how one progressive exhibitor in his territory employs an all-comedy program to distinct advantage. The letter addressed to Carey from Suzore reads as follows:

"In regard to an all comedy program, I wish to say that Tuesday night has been one of my off nights so thought I would give the all-comedy program a trial, using a Rogers, A Spat Family, a Stan Laurel and a 2-reel Our Gang comedy, making an 8 reel program.

"I put up a banner with Comedy Carnival, All Comedy program on it and it must say that I was very much surprised at the result. It broke all Tuesday night records and my receipts were about 1/3 more than usual on Tuesday.

"On the following Tuesday night on another all comedy program I gave short notice with practically no advertising and did better than the previous Tuesday.

"I am going to make Tuesday night an all comedy night as the kids will come and they bring the old crowd with them."

A. J. CARROLL,
Memphis manager,

UTAH

George E. Carpenter of the Mount-Empress Salt Lake City is one exhibitor in this particular territory who appreciates the drawing power and value of good short subjects and always advertises his show. He not only gives a large amount of space in his newspaper but the titles of each comedy is given on the marquis of the theater given a prominent space almost equal to the feature.

...penter believes in giving his patrons a whole evening's entertainment and when one sees the crowds at the theater and waiting in line for tickets there is little doubt that patrons are thoroughly sold and appreciate his ideas.

C. H. MESSENGER,
Manager, Inter-Mountain Educ'l.

WASHINGTON

A specific example of a right and proper method was clearly demonstrated at one of the first run theaters here.

The exhibitor gave the writer to understand that he regarded short subjects merely as a filler, something to absorb time and add no drawing whatever.

The writer then visited the exhibitor during an evening performance and noticed that when the reel comedy was projected on the screen it was a signal for recess for the orchestra. The organist took over the musical theme. The exhibitor treated seriously to lively music pieces being played on the organ. As a result, a very sad number was rendered while a comedy was being played to obtain laughs from the audience. It was like trying to make a comedy with wet wood.

The next morning the writer visited the exhibitor and brought the matter to his attention. Today the comedy subject enjoys the same position on the program as the feature. Advertising space in the paper is divided into three equal parts. The feature, the Music Score and the comedy, an evolution in his former procedure.

The orchestra plays to the picture and they are just as careful now with proper music score for the two-comedy as they have been with the largest feature production ported on the screen. A WASHINGTON EXCHANGE MANAGER.

Exhibitors in this territory as a rule give very little space to short subjects in newspapers, boards, or other advertising mediums, being content with a big flash for their feature and usually adding the bottom of their advertisements: "Five reel comedy etc."

Metzger of the Rivoli, gave considerable prominence to a Will Rogers comedy, "Two Wagons—Both Covered" advertising this above his regular feature attraction in the newspapers and also posting block 24-lets.

A New Idea

In the Tackett Theater, Coffeyville, Kansas, they play a serial along the lines of a circus playing a concert or wild-west rodeo after the main event is over. All the people file out of the theater and then return, paying 5 or 10 cents to see one episode of a serial. This exhibitor has been playing serials along this line for sometime and has found this arrangement very successful.

Frank Lacey of the Majestic sometime ago utilized his 90 three-sheet boards and posted this with posters on the Harry Langdon comedy, "Picking Peaches."

The results at the box office in both instances were very satisfactory which proves that the public is interested in good short subjects and that they are worthy of space in the exhibitors advertisements.

WISCONSIN

We find in the majority of instances that the exhibitors are beginning to appreciate more and more the value of building programs consisting of a suitable number of selected short subjects instead of the old fashioned policy of just giving their patrons a feature and a two-reel comedy which seemed to be the policy up to some time ago. So far as our product is concerned, we have found that in a good many of the smaller towns where they have never used single reel subjects outside of comedies, it was necessary for us to carry the various subjects which we had to offer, under our arm, so to speak, and screen the individual subjects for each particular exhibitor. We are happy to state that in the majority of cases whenever we were in a position to screen a novelty reel such as we have described, it has enabled us to not only sell the exhibitor the product which we had to offer, but they generally felt that we were doing them a great favor by pointing out to them where it was to their best interest to give their patrons product with as much variety and diversement as possible.

Take the New Milwaukee, the finest outskirt house in the city of which George Fischer is manager. This house under Fischer's direction is a great success and Fischer attributes the greater portion of the success of the New Milwaukee to the fact that he is continually building suitable programs and always on the look-out for novelties which he is in a position to use. The patrons who frequent Fischer's theater are always treated to never less than two hours of entertainment. Regardless of how great the hold-out may be, and this happens very often, not one inch of the film is cut from the original program regardless of what same may be.

It seems as though exhibitors who never used any great number of short subjects outside of their regular routine, are sort of vying with Fischer in an endeavor to build programs in the same manner he does.

Of course, there are and always will be a great number of exhibitors who can not be impressed with the value of using short subjects to any great extent. So far as our territory is concerned, we believe this number is very few and far between.

MAX STAHL,

Millwaukee Manager, Educational.

Clever Advertising Brought Results

An example of clever advertising which brought capacity audiences to each performance was furnished by the Miller, Wichita, Kas., which was playing Will Rogers' "Two Wagons, Both Covered," in conjunction with DeMille's "Icebound."

Throwaways were distributed in which "Icebound" was only mentioned once in a streamer across the paper, while the rest of the paper was devoted to a description of the 2-reel comedy in unique wording which immediately intrigued attention.

At the top of the throwaway was a bold headline "A GIGANTIC PRESENTATION OF THE HISTORY-MAKING, HEART BREAKING EFFORT TO WIN THE WEST FROM FEROCIOUS JACK RABBITS, AND SAVE CALIFORNIA TOURISTS FROM REAL ESTATE AGENTS." Immediately underneath this headline was a cartoon showing Will Rogers with a gun in one hand and a whip in the other straddling two covered wagons.

On the other side of the paper another headline appeared "SEE THE WILD 'ESCROW INDIANS—SAVAGE REAL ESTATE AGENTS OF LOS ANGELES—SEE THE HARDY "HARD" AND HARDUP PIONEERS, SEE WILL BUNIAN THE SHEIK OF THE TRIAL, SEE JIM BADGER THE BEST SCOUT THAT EVER IGNORED A SAFETY RAZOR." Underneath this "head" was a "still" from the comedy with two columns of clever descriptive matter on both sides.

Among other sentences appeared the following: "SEE * * *—the pioneers cross Nebraska seven years before the birth of Bryan and twenty-one years before he started to run for president. * * * Six quarts of mucilage up on his face. * * * Two thousand and forty-six and a half feet of film were used to produce this picture which is only 2,000 feet long.

The 46½ feet were lost because someone moved when the picture was taken.

Thirty-nine girls of the cast had to be supplied with wigs—the other one waited until the picture was finished before bobbing her hair. * * * Fourteen packages of safety pins were used to hold the covers on the wagons.

Two Saxophones—one was destroyed by Will Rogers when he heard an "extra" playing "Yes, We Have No Bananas."

One pint of gas, three quarts of oil, and forty gallons of water was used in the Ford used to haul the "extras."

Business Slumps

When Short Subjects Are Not Advertised or Are Cut Off the Program

An interesting experience is related by Joe Brandt of C. B. C., which occurred during one of his recent trips over the country and points out very effectively the attitude which exhibitors throughout the country are taking on the short stuff.

In talking to one of the exhibitors in a middle west city a comment was made that he could not understand why the patronage of the men folks in his towns had dropped off so considerably and when Brandt analyzed his program, the reason was very apparent.

The exhibitor had built up a show consisting of a feature, an overture and a weekly and was satisfied that he had given his public their money's worth considering the fact that he was running an eight reel feature the night in question. A great many of the men who accompany women to the theater openly expressed their opinion that they were not interested in the picture and since there was no billing showing that there was a comedy or some other short subject that would interest them, they were going to spend their time at the pool room or at the vaudeville show and call for the women after the picture was over.

Exhibitors have gotten to a point where they consider the short stuff only as a filler and in doing this they have taken from their program the one thing that made it possible for any person who went into the theater to see something that would interest them.

This indifferent attitude on the part of the exhibitors has resulted in the elimination of a great many producers of short stuff and the indications are that unless the exhibitors will pay more attention to their short subjects and pay a reasonable price for this kind of service, the field will very soon be restricted to possibly one or two concerns who will manufacture this kind of product; and those exhibitors who are still live enough showmen to know that they must have a diversified program will have to foot the bill. While the blame is not entirely on the shoulders of the exhibitor, because of the fact that some of the producers have made eight reel features, which makes the program rather lengthy if he uses a weekly and comedy, nevertheless, if the exhibitors were to assert themselves effectively enough, the producers would bring their features to normal length and make it possible for the exhibitors to use enough short stuff to give the sort of entertainment that is necessary to interest both the men and women and not excluding the children. The motion picture business was normally built up on the diversified program plan and if we are going to away from it, it is very evident that patronage at the box office must proportionately suffer.

Box Office Builders Possibilities of The Short Length Feature For The Wise Showman

By J. R. Bray

I am going to preface my comments with a prediction. The prediction—and I make it without qualification or reservation—is this: There is going to be—in fact there are many instances, that it has already begun—marked increase in interest among more progressive exhibitors everywhere in the short length attractions during their programs during the coming year.

Many exhibitors who hitherto have been more or less indifferent to the possibilities of entertainment they have provided their patrons in the shorter subjects on their bill, are going to give this part of their program vastly more consideration.

They will do this because the big feature, whether cartoon, comedy or scenic, or all three combined, has a special appeal of its own for the hot weather audience and one which can be made to equal and often excel the drawing power of the multiple reel feature, if adequately advertised and exploited.

This means, of course, that the exhibitor must use care and showmanship in selecting the subjects for his short length program, just as he does in choosing his main attraction, for I do not profess to maintain that all short subjects will prove box office winners, any more than all big features will.

There is now such an increasing variety of good short length attractions to select from, however, that a sure no exhibitor who takes ordinary care will have any difficulty in securing subjects that will please his patrons and increase his box office receipts, especially if he gives them a part of the consideration he gives his larger feature.

Recent reports from exhibitors in widely different sections indicate that many theaters this summer are planning to set aside one or two days a week on which they are going to show a program exclusively made up of short features.

They are also going to build up a part of their program on other days of the week with greater care than formerly, and many state that they intend to call increased attention to this part of their bill in their advertising, program, screen or newspaper advertising.

One of the reasons that they give for doing this are twofold. One is that they recognize the growing interest among their patrons for the better type of short length picture and the fact that

The short subject is coming into its own. This great and vital factor of motion picture theater operation is going to be recognized for what it is to the immense benefit of the motion picture industry and to the pocketbook of the individual exhibitor.

There is no exhibitor who boasts ability as a showman, who denies the value of the short subject. As a showman, he knows that people come to his theater for entertainment—the chief and predominant feature of which is diversity. He knows, too, that it is bad business to “put all his eggs in one basket,” so to speak, taking a chance that the feature will satisfy all of his patrons.

There is a wide and varying preference on the various types of pictures. What suits one person will not suit another, and it is upon appreciation of this factor that the short subject is rising to new heights, as an essential part of every program.

The short subject with its educational force has been of invaluable assistance in counteracting adverse criticism leveled at motion pictures generally.

The short subject, of course, is being handicapped greatly by over-long features. Because features are so long, exhibitors are forced to dispense with most, and sometimes, all of their short subjects. This is particularly true in the rural districts, where patrons, coming a considerable distance to see the show, make the element of time an important and often the deciding factor in their attendance at the show.

In this connection, a recent instance in this territory is worthy of particular note. Crockett Brown, Unique theater, Nashwauk, Minnesota, a strong devotee of short subjects, was having considerable difficulty in using the short subject specialties he had selected with great care. This was due to his inability to obtain features of reasonable lengths. Accordingly, he inserted a paid advertisement in Greater Amusements, stating he was in the market for good, snappy features, refusing to consider any over six reels. This shows to what lengths exhibitors are willing to go to make it possible for them to give the proper attention to the short subject end of their program. While some exchange managers thought him crazy, the idea was successful, and he got the 40 or 50 short length features he was after.

The instance cited demonstrates that the excessive-length padded picture's death knell already has been sounded, by the aroused demand of they believe it to be ideal for summer entertainment. The other is that many exhibitors are convinced that there is going to be a decided let-down in quality in a majority of the multiple-reel pictures released this summer and so are turning to the shorter subjects to strengthen their program and hold their patronage.

exhibitors for short length features. The conditions caused by the excessive-length picture is a temporary one, due to the trend of the times and is the fault of producer, distributor and exhibitor. It will be righted in a slow, but nevertheless sure process. Its righting is inevitable because padding is directly contrary to and violates a basic rule of entertainment. The future of the short subject is concerned only with the speed with which this righting is brought about.

What the short subject should be concerned with is in how to get its message to exhibitors. There would be a much wider use of short subjects, if the exhibitor knew about the great number of quality short subjects on the market.

The exhibitor is interested in short subjects, and if he is not giving them a fair break, it's because he doesn't feel they have it coming. So far as the Northwest is concerned, exhibitors are showing their appreciation of the importance of short subjects, through the Exhibitors Reports. In Greater Amusements alone, short subject reports have increased tenfold within the last year, and are continuing to increase. Other publications printing reports also appear to have noted an increase.

Short subjects have a lot of missionary work to do. Exhibitors, while noting the effect of short subjects on their audiences, still regard short subjects as fillers, paying for them accordingly, in many instances.

That is because sufficient stress has not been placed on the individual short subject, and instead are being grouped together under the one general classification, and are so considered by the exhibitor.

The trouble with the short subject is that it hasn't “stepped out” and demanded the attention which is its due. Instead, it has sought recognition apologetically, trailing along after the feature meek and submissive, content with the few favors and scant recognition accorded it.

The short subject has nothing to be ashamed of, in fact the tremendous strides it has made, may well be envied by the feature. The short subject is carrying a heavy burden, as it is assuming the task of pleasing patrons who do not like the feature.

The short subject is coming into its own in the northwest, but much remains to be done in the campaign of necessary education, which must be waged to sell the exhibitor properly and thoroughly on the idea of the short subject.

Box Office Values of Short Reel Program

Commenting on the all short subject program idea the Newark (N. J.) News says editorially. “A sort of vaudeville of the screen, that type of short subject program might well be worth a trial in the small centrally located theater. Not since the days when the two-reelers marked the limit of celluloid enterprises has a local playhouse been devoted exclusively to the exhibition of short subjects. And yet such a program has its advantages over the program dominated by the ‘special.’”

“In the first place the smaller films now on the market in an assortment of the same length as the featured photo-play, are available at a much cheaper rental figure—so much so as to permit a box-office rate of from fifteen to thirty cents in the class of playhouse now showing the usual bill. Such a program would please and attract many who find in the news reel and its companions their keenest enjoyment in filmed entertainment. The necessity of arriving at a theater at the beginning of a featured picture or sitting through it twice would be eliminated. Greater variety would of course, prevail, and the short subject, so fruitful in its possibilities, probably would be encouraged and improved.”

Short Subject “Saved The Show” (Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—A well chosen short subject “saved the show” for an exhibitor as evidenced by the newspaper review of the program of Clune's Broadway, wherein the reviewer in the Los Angeles Illustrated News, after declaring the feature attraction “painful and boring” states that the Christie Comedy “Stay Single” with Dorothy Devore, “is worth more than than the price of admission.”

New Idea In Historical 2 Reelers

Historical Pictures Inc., has started work on a new idea in 2-reelers. Beginning with the “History of Nassau County” the company, John J. Livingston, president, will start production on 485 stories dealing with the history of this country and with important events in the history of other countries.

Particular attention will be paid to pictures dealing with the history of ancient Greece and Asia. In producing these films miniature sets will be used to reproduce naval battles and dramatic events which have influenced the course of the world.

The films are intended to be chiefly educational, but Livingston is planning to make them sufficiently interesting to have entertainment value.

“Phonofilms” Proving Attractive By W. E. Waddell, DeForest Phonofilm

Notwithstanding the fact that it is simply a strip of ordinary motion picture film it has the uncanny power of reproducing any “act” or “number” one may see performed by living actors; every word, every musical note, and every audible sound being faithfully produced with infallible synchronism.

Wisdom

The best motion picture in the world is worth nothing on the shelf. The man who made it must sell it to someone.—Hal Roach.

Short addresses by famous people are being produced from time to time by people who could not otherwise be seen or heard. For instance the Rivoli, New York, recently had Chauncey Depew as the star attraction. Any exhibitor will realize that such an offering will bring into his house a multitude of people who are not regular patrons.

Senator Depew was 90 on April 23, and in his Phonofilm production he discussed "birthdays" with the dry humor for which he is famous.

Good Showmanship

Means That On Every Program Short Reels Must Play Important Part

By G. Ralph Branton, Minneapolis Sales Manager, Educational.

Showmanship in the motion picture business is not based alone on the money that can be dragged into the box office through the exploitation of any particular feature. From the exploitation man's angle this is all that is necessary. However, it would be well for exhibitors to stop and consider showmanship not from one, two, three days, or a week's angle, but from a 365 day standpoint, and to do that it is very necessary to take into consideration the whole show. You can sell your patrons the idea that every show in your theater is a complete and good program.

You will have a better and a more substantial business than if you build your business around a certain feature and go out and get all the money your town or community affords, and the rest of the week or month may suffer.

Short subjects have a great deal to do with such showmanship and the building of a permanent business for any theater. This has been proven in many cases. In the Northwest territory the firm of Hay & Nicholas of Fairmont, Minnesota, stands out in relief against the exhibitors who are prone to give proper attention and thought to the short subjects on their program. This firm uses fifty per cent of advertising in newspaper space to the short subjects on their programs. According to their statement, in every program that they run, as much care and consideration are given to the short subjects as to the features. Every program contains certain adaptable short features that they feel will make better their feature and to complete a whole evening's entertainment. They use their billboard space, not in the same proportion, but plenty of billboard space is given to the fact that always comedies, news reels, and novelties can be seen at the Strand.

The result has been a steady, good business in a territory that has been down to the lowest ebb, so far as exhibitors' profits were concerned. This firm has at all times maintained a steady average of business which can only be due to their selling argument of a good evening's entertainment and of not overselling any single feature production.

I also cite the case of V. B. Val-leau, recently of Albert Lea, who was one of the most successful exhibitors of this territory and who claims that ninety per cent of his success was due to the fact that not one single picture was ever shown in his theater without a good two-reel comedy to accompany it. Val-leau's statement is as follows: "Personal observation has taught me to believe that while most people may come to your theater because such-and-such a picture is on, a two-reel comedy in the theater at all times, is the greatest asset one could have. It means that if a feature does not come up to the expectation of your patrons the two-reel comedy is a great relief, or if the feature meets their every anticipation, the two-reel comedy only adds to their enjoyment, and I believe if all exhibitors would disregard the length of features and insist a two-reel comedy play the theater at every showing, the ups and downs of the exhibitor's business would be less."

Valleau's success as a showman is unquestioned. He is known throughout this territory as one of the keenest judges of pictures and running some of the best managed theaters in the Northwest.

the program is so constructed that the climax of the snow is the feature and when the footage of a production is so long that it becomes necessary to eliminate the shorter subjects and show the feature immediately, a great deal of the psychology of the motion picture presentation is eliminated and lost.

One thing is certain. If a special were made of big productions eliminating all the shorter subjects, the public would rebel and rescuse a program. For one thing, news weekly is an absolute essential today in every program.

The late war did more than anything else to create this demand, for the public were greatly interested in what this country was doing in depicting its resources in the army and navy, and they have been educated to expect it now at every performance, and are greatly disappointed when they do not see it as part of the program.

The exhibitors do not want productions beyond eight reels in length—the extreme, and why the producers go to the extra expense in making subjects of greater length is something that is beyond me.

For a nicely balanced program, short subjects are an absolute essential.

Putting Over the Chronicles

Among the important innovations in the short subject field during the past year has been the "Chronicles America" series, produced by the University Press and distributed by Pathé.

In some respects the Yale University Press enterprise is unique in the history of the motion picture industry. In the first place, here, for the first time in the career of the screen, an educational institution of world-wide prominence becomes identified, through the intermediary of one of its auxiliary bureaus, with the production of a series of motion pictures made expressly for regular theatrical entertainment.

A description of the campaigns conducted in Jersey City and Seattle on "Columbus" will serve to indicate how exhibitors are handling these releases. The showing at the Fulton, Jersey City, was preceded by a campaign addressed to the local newspaper editors; school superintendents; principals; teachers; clergy; heads of civic, fraternal, welfare, and business organizations; municipal officials and citizens prominent in the city's professional activities. Letters to these individuals apprised them of the nature of the Yale University Press enterprise and the showing at the Fulton. Invitations were also sent with tickets of admission to a late screening staged on the Saturday preceding the regular run. The response was tremendous. Editors, gymmen, educators, and organization heads vied in lending their support. In several instances, ministers went to the extent of voicing their personal endorsement from their respective pulpits on the Sunday preceding the regular opening. In addition, the Fulton ran special children's matinees at a ten-cent admission price and tied up the local merchants and the Jersey Journal on an essay-writing contest for elementary and high school pupils in the city.

In Seattle, Mayor Edwin J. Brown, following a private showing of "Columbus" issued in advance of the regular showing through the columns of the local press an official proclamation, calling attention to the new screen series and the forthcoming presentation at the Liberty. For an essay-contest idea the Liberty substituted a poster contest, which also received liberal space in the local dailies. This contest was declared open to three separate grades—university or college students, high-school students, and elementary school children, with prizes for the winners in each class. One drawing was submitted by each contestant dealing with any phase of the "Columbus" subject. The jury of award was made up of representative citizens, and in addition the Liberty tied up the Seattle Society of Fine Arts, the Cornish School of Art, the Federated Clubs of Seattle, and the Parent-Teachers' Association on the contest.

"The Neglected Short Subject"

(Reproduced by permission of The Moving Picture World, issue of April 19)

"* * * The management of the Grand Central readily admitted that the length of the feature governs the number and class of short subjects put on its screens, and that it was only when an exceptionally good comedy was obtained that it was given more than passing attention.

"A good comedy on the same bill with a poor feature will not save the show," one of the officials of the theater stated. "However, if we have a good feature our patrons will not complain if the comedy, news or other shorts are somewhat below the usual Grand Central standard."

The Missouri also guides itself by the length and quality of the feature in preparing its screen program although Herschel Stuart, in picking the news items, etc., for the Missouri Magazine, uses the utmost care to hold them up to the Missouri standard. He also is very critical about his comedies and other short films, and on some occasions has exploited them somewhat. He has also tied up his short pictures with outside interests, such as women's clubs, etc., and at different times has held radio expositions and similar events in the spacious lobby of the Missouri, tying them up with one of the short subjects on his bill.

the comic operas put on every Summer in the Open Air Theater in Forest Park, and a manager of a first-run picture house in St. Louis to be successful apparently has to keep that fact in mind.

Take Fred L. Cornwell of the Delmonte, the largest one-floor motion picture theater in the world, for instance. He swung a master stroke several months ago when he purchased the St. Louis and St. Louis County film rights to Metro's entire year program over a two-year period, but nevertheless, jazz and girls usually obtained most generous treatment in the advertising of that wonderful film house.

So experienced a showman as William Goldman, owner-manager of the Kings Theater, gives scant space to short films in exploiting his shows. And he is no saver of advertising space. His newspaper ads are well arranged and the exploitation stunts he has pulled to put over big features has set new marks for his brother exhibitors to shoot at. Yet it is rare indeed that the Kings Theater ads tell what the title is of the comedy and other shorts on the week's program.

Harry Greenman of the William Fox Liberty gives bare mention to his comedy unless it is exceptionally well known and good.

The same general condition exists throughout the city. From one end of St. Louis to the other the feature picture is the thing thought of.

Little Attention at Neighborhoods

Your correspondent asked Dave Nelson, of the Webster, a substantial and successful neighborhood house in a section the writer thought would desire comedy and other shorts of a snappy sort, what he did to exploit his comedy offerings. He seemed surprised at the question, then admitted that he gave little attention to them, concentrating his exploitation and advertising campaigns on the feature pictures.

Charley Vollmer, veteran manager of the Mid-Way, made the same confession: that he picked his feature-length films first and then worked out his program from the basis. He said that very few, if any, of the exhibitors in St. Louis ever put on an entirely short-subject program. Instead, double-feature bills are the thing resorted to by the smaller houses to get larger crowds.

A tour of the city covering all sections and an inspection of the lobby displays, posters and other advertising put out by theaters revealed the same characteristics everywhere—domination of the feature picture.

DALLAS

Without short reel subjects, one Dallas exhibitor would close his theater. That statement is outstanding among all the ideas and information gleaned from a trip along Movie Row in Dallas. It was Si Charinsky speaking.

Short subject units have prominent places on the programs of every first-run house in Dallas. They likewise prove to be virtual lifesavers for the smaller houses. In isolated instances short subjects have been exploited ahead of the longer features with which they are run. For example, when the Palace secured for first run the new third dimension Plastigrams, the Dallas Dispatch carried a column and a half that started smack on page 1.

In that particular instance, the Plastigram picture was run in conjunction with "Scaramouche," Metro's masterpiece. For a one-reel subject to be exploited by a remarkable newspaper above a production like "Scaramouche" was altogether unusual.

Opinions on short reel subjects, like opinions on any other subject, vary. On the other hand, three of the largest Dallas houses—the Palace, Melba and Capitol, all invariably open shows with a newsreel and send them out laughing with a comedy.

P. G. Cameron, of the Melba, looks upon the short reel subject like this: It is like advertising: you don't know what good it does you but you can't do without it. It completes a program and rests the audience's mind from the intricacies of a longer feature.

Against strenuous competition, naturally, Mr. Cameron believes that an all-short-subject program never is advisable. While this exhibitor does not give the briefer unit the same position as a feature, nevertheless, the shorter subjects are well advertised on his programs.

Cameron seizes every opportunity to tie up with clubs and civic organizations when he has short subjects booked affecting their particular sphere of activity. In fact, the owner of the Melba is more or less of a pioneer along his line, incorporating the parent-teacher and like organizations.

Shorts Permanent Institution

Jean Finley, manager of the Palace and Old Mill, regards the short reel as a permanent institution. Advertising done by these two theaters stresses not so much the feature as the show itself, the atmosphere and the music. Naturally, under these conditions, the short subject must be of paramount importance.

"No, the all-short-subject program is not a success in this city. However, the plan can be carried out very successfully in other communities. We tried this out and know. The last all-short-subject program that we put on was more or less of a failure, yet every subject in that briefer unit program had a star. It simply goes to prove that the more stars you cram into a picture, the punker that picture is going to be. One should concentrate."

"We figure that shorter reels should get from one-fourth to one-third the amount of advertising that we do on the feature. We play up the short reel in electric when it is a 'name' picture; when it has a star, for instance, like Lloyd Hamilton, Will Rogers, or when it is a Sennett comedy.

"This week part of our International news reel shows physical-culture training in Eng'and. We tied this up very nicely with the local high schools. Some time ago one of our news reels gave a pictorial treatise on careless driving. This came at a time when the newspapers were playing up the large number of accidents resulting from careless driving on the streets of Dallas, so it was an easy matter to tie up with the Dallas Traffic Club. Some time ago, too, when we had a briefer unit showing some jumping horses in Italy, we co-operated with a local troop of cavalry and had some mighty good results, although we never run advertising on our screen. When we got hold of a short strip showing the inside of the dairy business, we commercialized it with a tie-up with local dairymen, but at the same time mentioned no particular products on our screen.

"We bill the short subject very prominently on our printed programs."

Short reels occupy the same positions on Si Charninsky's program at the Capitol as they do on their first-run programs in Dallas. Charninsky agrees with his conferees that an all-short-subject program is not practicable for a house on Main Street. Mr. Charninsky features shorter reels second to the feature picture. He declares that no program is complete without the shorter subjects. He stresses the fact, too, that in most theaters over the country the briefer units are shown to the accompaniment of an orchestra, whereas frequently the feature is projected with only an organ playing. This is as it should be, he commented, for the reason that folks get interested in the continuity of a feature, whereas nobody ever knew a comedy to have anything approaching continuity.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS

The short subject program presents this problem to exhibitors: "Will the patron feel that he is getting his money's worth?" So asserts Reginald V. Tribe manager of the Empire Theater. "Of course, there are a lot of good short subjects," he says, "but in my opinion it would take a tremendously good program of well diversified subjects, well arranged as to running order, to make a success of the short subject program from the box office standpoint. It certainly would have to be an experimental proposition."

When They Do Laugh

By Mack Sennett

There are some things the public will not laugh at. I know just why, but it is just they will not.

One of these things at which the public will not laugh is a Spony. For some reason they having a "Shelty" ridiculed. We tried them in all kinds of comedy but it is useless. They just will laugh.

Spectators will laugh at any kind of a horse in a comedy situation they begin to snicker whenever they see a burro come on the screen not a wee pony.

By the same token, in the comedy throwing days, I always noticed fans didn't like to see a girl in a lawn dress get hit with pies. They didn't like to see young people strewn anyhow.

Perhaps the oddest thing of all that they resent any kind of defecation on the screen except cross eyes would have you if you made a man with one leg lost; but cross eyes seem to be considered fair.

The man in the top hat is a sight to laugh. For some extraordinary reason every one hates to let a man with a top hat escape unscathed without something done to him. I guess the reason for this is some deeper than the mere fact that a hat looks funny falling off. After all the supreme joke of life is the loss of dignity. And the top hat is the final symbol of dignity.

Early Days—at $5 Per—With Harold Lloyd—Today the Most Important Producer of Short Subjects

By Garrett Graham

takes two qualities for a man to excel. To excel in one thing is enough. He not only must be able to do something better than the average, but he must market that something.

Hal Roach's outlook on the picture world. Ten or twelve years ago he drifted down to California and Alaska, where he had been driving logging teams, and became a film writer at Universal City where he had his first experience in pictures and he met a youth named Lloyd, trying to break into the game. Two boys, barely out of their teens, were glad to get work for $5 per week, and they clung together in adversity.

Harold Lloyd is a name for which the producers to conjure with and Roach is one of the most prominent figures among film producers. He started without a cent. He never had a dollar of outside capital.

His first picture Roach made was a comedy with some child actors. Harold Lloyd played an unimportant "bit."

From that first Roach was the author, the producer, the business manager and practically everything else in his comedy. In that first picture Lloyd stood out so in his work that he was the leading comedian from then on. They experimented with different characterizations and different "make-ups" for their leading "comic." Finally they hit on the character of the well-dressed young man with the tortoise shell glasses. It stuck and became world-famous.

Roach began with Lloyd in one-reel comedies. The product became established and found a steady, dependable market. When Lloyd was advanced to two-reel comedies the producer was not satisfied with one unit. He started another one-reel company. Theater owners began to recognize and remember the name of Hal Roach on short comedies. It gradually became a hallmark of excellence. As time went by and he got more money to work with, Roach started other units. He acquired a tract of land, then comparatively cheap, at Culver City, and started his present studios. All the time he was putting back into the business the money his pictures brought from exhibitors.

The producer's really great success came when he advanced Lloyd to feature-length pictures. He was bringing a clean, new, refreshing brand of comedy to the screen. One of the first of these ran something like 11 weeks in Los Angeles, a thing then unknown in film circles.

Today the Roach studios with eight producing companies is one of the busiest in the industry. The secret of it all from Roach's standpoint is that he has never been afraid of new ideas. He has made many experiments with comedy subjects. Most of them have been successful and profitable. A few have failed to hit. Several years ago Roach conceived the idea of the "Our Gang" series which have become the best sellers in the two-reel comedy field. Another novelty that Roach developed successfully the Dippy-Doo-Dad comedies, made entirely with animals.

Advertising short subjects. In addition to newspaper and lobby displays, special musical scores are prepared which add greatly to the enjoyment of all short subject showings.

Detroit: With possible exception of one theater, not much attention is given short subjects either in newspaper or out front. By no means what short subjects deserve. Noted no improvement in this respect over a year ago.

Buffalo: While it could give short subjects more attention yet what is now being done is a vast improvement over a year ago.

Sooner or later every exhibitor, large or small, is going to realize what it means to advertise his short subjects, at the box office. Nothing more true was ever said, than "If it's good enough to show on the screen it's good enough to advertise."

1-Reel Fairy Tales

Chatham, N. J.—Herbert M. Dawley is working on a series of 8 one-reel fairy tales in his marionette studio here. The Dawley productions, which will be incorporated in the Pathe Review will include stories of "Jack the Giant Killer", "Thumbelina", "Jack and the Bean Stalk", "Cinderella", "Sleeping Beauty", "Beauty and the Beast", "Tattercoats", "Alladin and the Wonderful Lamp".

The one-reelers are made by manipulating marionettes against miniature sets in silhouette form and besides embodying the main features of the stories will be liberally sprinkled with humor.

Dawley is at present producing "Sillyettes" which appear as part of the Pathe Review. In 1921 Dawley was associated with Tony Sarg in the production of the famous "Almanac".

First Run Showmen Asked "Are You in a Rut?" Furnish Interesting Replies on Short Subjects

An Ideal Program

Max Balaban Suggests Feature, Comedy, Weekly, Scenic and novelty Reels For Average Theater
By Max Balaban, Balaban & Katz Corp., Chicago

My idea of a well balanced program for the average motion picture theater around the country is a seven reel feature; two reel comedy; six minute weekly; four minute scenic, and some other novelty reel, which gives a small house an hour and forty-five minute show, and the deluxe theater a two hour and ten minute show, allowing for an overture and two specialty numbers.

I believe comedies should be advertised the same as the feature picture. Every time we eliminate a weekly at our theaters on account of a long feature, our audience leaves the theater disappointed because they come every week expecting it as part of our program, and they don't know we have eliminated our weekly on account of the long feature picture.

Just as soon as the producers keep their pictures down to around 7,000 feet, I believe it will be better for everybody concerned, as it will send the public away more pleased and it will create new picture patrons.

Another great fault with the long feature picture is that the average exhibitor in order to get his patrons in and out of the theater is forced to speed up his picture to such an extent that the public cannot read the subtitles and regardless of the quality of the picture they leave the theater dissatisfied.

Shorter Films Coming

By Frank W. Buhler, Stanley Co. of America, Philadelphia

I believe conditions in the picture industry are righting themselves as to the short subjects.

It is absolutely necessary that we have a diversified program in theaters catering to the masses, as does the motion picture theater. Producers are seeing the advisability of this and are making their pictures in shorter lengths.

It is a very rare exception when a story cannot be told in six reels and told well—without undue padding—giving the exhibitor a chance to give his patrons what they want—and they do want comedy.

"Special" Short Reels

By Harry Bernstein, Colonial Theater, Richmond, Va.

I consider short subjects very valuable to any program, for the needed variety to round out the proper program. It should be gotten before the clientele of the house that on every program they can expect in addition to the feature, a good comedy, travelogue or novelty reel and a news reel. These are featured Important first run exhibitors were questioned "Are You in a Rut?" as to their handling of short subjects. Many replied. Some frankly admitted they were. Others—well, read what they have to say. Regardless of their admissions, their ideas on the short subject will surely prove of interest.

The responses received offer a wide and varied opinion on short subjects and how discriminating exhibitors look upon this particular type of production.

in Saturday and Sunday special newspaper pages as "special extras" and carried on every program, giving the names of the stars and the comedy's title, etc.

We also feature our musical interpretations in newspapers and programs, as well as the screen, and very often we offer this in novelty form through announcement cards or special slides.

In the Northwest

By Theo. L. Hays, General Manager Finkelstein & Ruben, Minneapolis

We are all in a rut. Many of us do not realize it, but we are there just the same.

I have written you on several occasions concerning the disadvantage of the feature of "long reelage" and the positive advantage of the "short feature."

If vaudeville entertainment continually offered one act of an hour and a half, people would soon tire of it. It is variety that appeals.

Film programs should offer the greatest variety possible. News reels, scenics, novelty reels and comedies are all good program units and should be extensively used to blend the ideal motion picture program.

Single reels should be advertised and such advertising will bring results.

A large percentage of motion picture patrons miss the short subjects and if they are eliminated entirely, the monotony of the long feature will eventually lessen interest in motion pictures or drive our patrons away permanently.

We frequently receive complaints on the length of features with suggestions towards the varied program.

Am glad you are stirring this matter up again, as you have frequently done in the past, apparently however without much result.

Hope that something definite and constructive will result from your present effort.

Where Fault Lies

By Harold B. Franklin, Director of Theaters, Famous Players-Lasky

I can well realize that something ought to be done to give the short subject producer greater encouragement.

I believe the principal difficulty facing the short subject producer is the fact that most small exhibitors do not recognize the true value of the short subject. It has really been only the large theaters in the country that have given short subjects proper support and attention. Frequently I have found the most interesting part of the show . . . and not only interesting, but at times highly entertaining.

Of course, one of the difficulties that the small exhibitor is up against in considering short subjects is the fact that the features he has to play are frequently of excessive footage. It has been suggested that one reason why producers encourage the padding of pictures is because exhibitors will not pay the same price for a short feature that they will for one of 7, 8 or 9 reels. This is a fallacy. The price of any commodity is governed by demand and this same rule applies to motion picture product. A feature's value can only be measured by box office results. The public is not interested in whether a picture is long or short. The successful picture is one in which padding has been eliminated and among the better producers, there is no such thing as wasted footage.

Exhibitors must not discount the importance of the short subject, whether they operate a great big theater in a big city, or a theater in a small town. The short subject lends itself admirably to the building of a program, and every exhibitor will find it pays to balance a program into a good entertainment.

At most of our theaters the selection of the short subject is given the same care as the selection of the feature, and every short subject is given the same musical synchronization that the feature is given.

The short subject gives an exhibitor an opportunity for showmanship. With ease he can blend his program so that it is an harmonious arrangement of contrasts.

It is my thought that short subjects on a program should be properly advertised. It seems antiquated to play anything on a program without letting the public know what you are offering.

I believe that a great percentage of our audiences would miss the short subjects if they were eliminated, and excepting where a super-feature of unusual length is shown, we never attempt to eliminate them from a program. A certain percentage of our audiences look for the weekly, for the comedies, for the scenics, for the scientific subjects, and I believe if exhibitors in general would carefully study this problem they would realize that the public would look forward to seeing the short subjects on the program.

While I do not think any short subject can be considered or counted upon as a box office attraction, I believe short subjects are especially appreciated by every high class audience in the theater where motion pictures are played.

Materially Helped

By James B. Clark, Rowland Clark Theaters, Pittsburg

In answer to question No. 1, "Should they be advertised more intensively?" In my opinion the answer is definitely should. I feel that many ordinary features which without advertising your audience is helped out materially by good short subjects, to the fact that it sends your audience home feeling that even though the feature was not quite as good as probably expected, the show as a whole—on account of the good short subjects—was a very good show.

Question No. 2, "Should they be advertised at all?" My answer is "Yes." While I do not feel that the short subjects will draw a crowd regardless of the feature, I do, as stated above, that if properly advertised and the short subject good, they materially help our show.

Question No. 3, "What percentage of your audience do you think would miss the short subject if eliminated it from your program?" Our experience with extra long features which in the smaller houses necessitated cutting out of the program has been that our audience were not slow in letting us know the short subjects were missed.

Question No. 4, "And to what extent would you hear from them?" Would say that our experience has been, as stated above, that we have heard from our audiences on numerous occasions when we have cut down the short subjects on account of a long feature. We try to do just as little as possible, but in smaller capacity houses it is sometimes necessary.

I do realize that the number of short subjects has materially decreased in the past few years. I think there is a good reason for this, as good short subjects—in my opinion—are just as hard to produce as good features. In former times when short subjects were handled almost all of the distributor quality was very inferior. There were more produced a of them were driven out of business because of the quality of their subjects. I think the short subjects as handled by Educational are very much superior in quality and are commanding much higher prices than formerly. I think it would be a great mistake to eliminate the short subjects from the program.

Some Real Thinking

V. Richards, Jr., Vice-Pres. & Mgr. Saenger Amusement Co., Inc., New Orleans

Reply to your letter as regards getting in a rut—

WE ARE!

A short subject is very valuable in a program and a very essential part of the variety or spice of the program—and this is a very big IF—you can get the idea out of the program heads about footage on the program. It is dangerous for the exhibitor to set a policy of four and fifty minutes or two and thirty for a show and then to follow with an eight reel the following week at the same price of admission and attempt to keep his program reels on the same bill. You can't put your short reels on one bill and then pull them off the next week.

We should have a set policy of admission prices in a house. The exhibitor may not have extended it in so many words, but he is likely to disturb a set policy with his program reels as the outstanding part of a regular policy.

Another thing—there has never been an established short reel program by a distributor figured out to match in with fifty-two weeks in the year, or whatever number of changes the average exhibitor may require during the year—that he could buy in one volume, to be shipped out simultaneously with his features. In other words, balance his program same as the U. B. O. would send out a vaudeville bill.

Whenever the short reel people become organized in that manner and can cooperate with the feature people so that the short reel business becomes established and the exhibitor knows where he is at in making such a policy, I am sure that it would soon be recognized by the exhibitor, as to just exactly the value of short reels as related to his program.

The above may be as clear as mud to you, but what I am trying to say is—

Limit your features to six thousand feet and for argument's sake, Limit your short reels to two thousand feet, or not make your average program combined for the average house, to run over eighty-five hundred feet of film.

Let him know what he is going to get a year in advance, or six months in advance, and you will get the short reel features stabilized, and the exhibitor will be able to do a good many things when he knows about the amount of time consumed on his days when time is very limited and very vital to his success.

I know that you want it all in ten words so that you can put it in your ten-inch paper, so boil it down after you have gotten the meat out of it and shoot! Them's my sentiments.

Featuring Short Reels

Satisfying Demand of Canadian Patrons Who Like News Reel, Travelogues, Cartoons and Good Comedies

By N. L. Nathanson, Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto

As far as the operation of our circuit of theatres is concerned, we pay a great deal of attention to the short reels. We are very careful in our choice of the subject matter, and I personally consider the News Reel one of the best features and I know that it has a real following. There are a lot of our patrons who enjoy the news reels and short educational subjects.

In our larger theaters in the key cities we give quite a varied program. Where there is something special to advertise in the short reels, of some unusual nature, we do so, but as a rule it takes only a small place in our advertising plan.

With regard to what can be done to give this part of the program better standing, I think that is a matter for the individual manager. We do not as a rule show all of the short reels together. We try to feature them as much as possible. As to advertising it more extensively, unless it is a subject of unusual interest I do not see how it is possible to advertise it to any effect.

I believe that a great deal of the audience would miss the short subject, particularly the News Reels. While I believe in comedies in the smaller theaters, I have lately been of the opinion that unless it is a feature comedy or unless the comedy is something unusual, we would be better off in our larger theaters using either a cartoon or other short reel rather than to just play an ordinary two-reel comedy because it is a comedy.

I believe that the patrons of our theaters regard the short subject as a part of the entire performance, and while no doubt they are attracted by the feature picture, the show is balanced and made more entertaining to them by the introduction of varied subjects.

The type of short subject that I find most entertaining to our patrons here, are travel reels, showing scenes and life in foreign countries. We get too little of this class of subject, and in my opinion, too much of the stereotype, so-called, comedy reels.

However, short subjects have a place in all of our programs, and I have a thorough belief in their value.

A Real Novelty

French Production Has Unusual
Dogs as Leads with Ducks, Chickens, Monkeys, and Other Animals as Supporting Cast

When Harry Reichenbach was abroad he picked up a six reeler called in French "Betes-Comme les Hommes" which had a long run in Paris. He has re-titled it "Hot Dog" and reduced the footage to about 2,300 feet. It makes one of the most novel films of its kind ever shown, and should prove a great drawing card especially for the kiddies.

This picture was made by Rene Fequent in Nice, on the French Riviera, and it took two years to produce. Mr. Fequent is not a producer of photoplays, but an ardent lover of animals. It occurred to him one day that it might be worth while to see some of his many pets on a film, and therefore, with the assistance of one or two men who knew something about producing motion pictures, he mapped out a scenario, built sets that were in proportion to the size of the dogs and chickens, including a diminutive train, and had a happy two years picturing the different scenes.

In one sequence the producer has endeavored to picture a foot flirtation and the turkey is supposed to believe that the rabbit is pressing his soft foot against hers. Actually the hero believes her foot is a bone and the soft touching with his tongue is only preparatory to using his teeth, which fact she discovers in time to save her pedal extremity from being gnawed.

There are interesting sequences in a "prizefight," the combatants being two roosters, one much heavier than the other. There is the squared ring, the canvas covered floor and the ringside seats, wherein one sees the villain and the heroine seated together. The poor old hero hasn't a penny to bless himself with, so he has to watch the battle through a hole in the canvas, through which he manages finally to squeeze his whole head. Seldom is he without a pipe, it being almost as much a part of him as it was of Sherlock Holmes.

Short Films Neglected

By Fred Levy, Lafayette Amusement Co., Louisville, Ky.

Most exhibitors are in a rut today as far as short subjects are concerned. A good short subject, in my opinion is essential to the success of the show as any other number on the program.

It is like a vaudeville bill that might be made up of a number of good headline acts and yet not be thoroughly satisfactory, because it lacked the presence of a comedy act or two to make the bill properly diversified. Then, there are certain parts of our audience, notably the children, who are attracted to the theater probably by the comedy end of the program. I think that most of our exhibitors have become so excited over the importance of the long features that they have really neglected the short subjects.

Artcraft Making "Hickory Comedies" (Special to THE FILM DAILY)

South Schroon Lake, N. Y.—Artcraft Pictures is making a series of twelve 2-reel comedies entitled "Hickory Corner Comedies", starring Eddie Scanlon the comedy "find" of D. W. Griffith. The comedies will typify rural life. Winifred S. Stoner, (Countess De Bruche) will play opposite Scanlon, while Gus Alexander, Margie Evans, J. E. Poole and June Alec will complete the cast.

Artcraft has New York offices. Distribution will be announced later.

Please the Women

By Al Christie, Producer of Christie Comedies and Features

There is a well known adage in the show business that if your commodity appeals to women your battle is mostly over, because the women control the bulk of the money which is paid in to box offices in all countries. The women may not actually do the spending but their wishes determine what shows to go to and what shows to avoid. Moving picture theater men have estimated that 75 per cent of the receipts are determined by women, but I would put this estimate even higher.

We offer here the statement that short comedies should be designed primarily for the kids and they will bring their parents. This is part of our theory of working but not all of it; for in giving general audience satisfaction we find that it is most successful in the long run to make a type of comedy which grown ups particularly women, can enjoy as well as the kids.

We are well aware that women audiences like fast farce and hokum in their comedies, but they also like a good basis for the funny business to rest upon. This illustrates the great difference between the modern hokum comedy and the old fashioned type of rough slapstick. With the old strong-arm methods of making comedies, there wasn't any plot. Pie-throwing orgies were indulged in without any rhyme or reason. Now the method is to take a little story and sprinkle in enough fast action and gags to enliven a story of funny situations.

A critic recently hit the nail right on the head when he said "Give us less kicks in the pants in our comedies." And another reviewer, speaking of the newer type of successful two-reeler, said "It is exceptionally bright, clean, and in good taste. More of this kind would revive interest in this feature of the average moving picture bill."

We have a staff of gag men who do nothing else but think up amusing situations to inject into the plots after the basis of the story is written out. This means plenty of outright laughs, for the women as well as for men and the boisterous youngsters down in the front rows. But in adding gags, one rule is that they must never be in bad taste, and there has to be some reason behind the dressing of hokum.

Our Gang

By Hal Roach

Children have played in pictures most since pictures began. have played parts that have for dramatic ability just as much the parts played by grown-ups. children have been a success since, then their popularity has waxed except in a few instances, such as those of Jackie Coogan and Peggy. These two youngsters played parts that required real acting and the popularity they enjoy is that they have done it well—I was left for Hal Roach to bring a different kind of child to the screen or rather a group of different children—who truly depict American youth—because they do not act simply play out their story before camera, just as children do in real life.

I reasoned that the psychological effect of such a picture would be a favorable reaction in the mind of the average human being; he would like the antics of these children, either because he remembered similar things done by himself, or because he remembered seeing other children do these things. So—I found a director I picked the "Rascals," as they affectionately called and "Our Gang" was formed.

Bob McGowan, the director of an almost uncanny understanding of child nature; he is patient and patient; he is kindly, and he is a good fellow. When he directs his pictures, he in reality plays with children.

McGowan at one time owned a motion picture theater. He cared for the type of pictures made in those days, so he sat down and wrote to Biograph and Essanay setting forth what he thought was wrong with the movies. He kept writing, and writing, and nothing happened, so he sold his theater and came to Los Angeles to attend to his matter personally. That was years ago, and it followed immediately upon the purchase of one of the ideas by Essanay. Since that time he has worked in nearly every department of picture production. He became property man at Universal. Then he became assistant to Al Christie, comedy producer and director, and he joined us.

The personnel of "Our Gang" made up of Mickey Daniels, freckled Irish and red-headed; Mary Pickford, blonde leading lady, who was the daylight out of her various mirrors; Jackie Condon, with tousled hair and mischievous grin; Joe Frank Cobb, the fatty of the bunch, without which no group is complete; Ernie Morrison (Sun Sammy) whose wide grin and roving eyes have graced many a Hal Lloyd comedy made under the Roach banner—and last, and not least (but in size only) Farina, or Sam, as he is called at the studio, the dusky pickanniny.

Of course, all children like pictures, but as a well known critic said recently: "They are laugh getters, and the grown-ups like them better than the kids."

Short Subjects in the Foreign Market

Reel Comedy Not In Favor

C. Barnstyn, British and Continental Trading Co.

The most desirable type of short subjects is the two-reel comedy. Audiences abroad look for entertainment as American audiences do and reel comedies, like: "Our Gang," "Smile," and "Mermaid," will find a ready market everywhere. In many countries, people are fed up with the pronounced "slapstick" reel comedies, either "slapstick" or "lined," are difficult to sell in most foreign territories and the same result prevails for cartoons.

Novelty reels like "Plastigrams" and interesting subjects like "Screen Shots" are in great demand everywhere and especially the latter have been used for propaganda purposes to make the American stars popular in various territories.

In continental Europe and the United States as a rule, only one comedy is in their program and combined with a "News" reel and a two-reel comedy and sometimes a third reel. For that reason there is no room for one-reel comedies, which would make the program even too long.

"Leather Pushers" Made "Clean-Up"

N. L. Manheim, Universal
The "Leather Pushers" made a big clean-up from one end of the world to the other. There was only one exception—Brazil, where the natives couldn't find any Portuguese words into which to translate Witwer's breezy sub-titles. In every other country the "Leather Pushers" beat all records for short stuff. In fact the success of these pictures is one of the good reasons why you recently read the headline "Universal Signs Jack Dempsey To Make 10 Two Reel Sport Subjects".

Demand For 2-Reel Comedies

By David P. Howells

For the foreign market, a good two-reel comedy is most in demand—in fact there seems to be too few of these comedies at this time.

A two-reel comedy is a very convenient length for the fact that added to a topical review and an average length feature film, it rounds out a good program for the average theater. Then, too, people want to see a comedy and they would much prefer it in two reels than five or six, or even one.

"Medium" Type of Comedy Successful

By E. W. Hammons, Educational

In a general way the comedy is by far the most popular American subject for the foreign market.

Perhaps, the most popular comedy product is what I might call the "medium" type of comedy. That is, the comedy which is neither too light farce nor too full of slap-stick. They like the broad action which is also so popular in our own theaters as long as it is of a fine clean character.

All the two-reel comedy series which Educational has been distributing in the United States are doing very well abroad especially in the British Isles and on the main land of Europe.

High Lights of News

Bijou, Playing All Short-Reel Programs, Leads Other Houses in City

Wilmington, N. C.—The Bijou presents an all-short program, six days a week. We use almost the entire output of short subjects of all producers. We present a five reel bill (one hour) for a dime, daily from 11 A. M. to 11 P. M. The Bijou clears a larger net profit every year than the other three theaters combined, and last Saturday played to more paid admissions in the one day than the Victoria (super-feature house) did all week.

We endeavor to play up a two-reel headliner on each bill, just the same as the average house exploits its feature; but are greatly handicapped because the producers do not even furnish press sheets, much less mats or cuts, with their short subjects (I refer especially to Universal and Pathe—Educational does furnish this matter). How can they expect us to exploit their short subjects when we cannot even determine the cast without searching through your reviews? Not a single producer was able to furnish me thumb-nail cuts or mats of their leading comedy stars—I even asked the New York offices for them.

The Bijou advertises short reel programs by distributing heralds, tack cards and dodgers. Cards are sometimes passed out to school children which are good for 5 cents at a specified time, say Wednesday between 3 and 4, or at some other time when attendance would ordinarily not be very heavy. In this way the house is kept full at all times.

D. M. BAIN, Booking Manager, Bijou Amusement Co.

Judging a Comedy

J. A. Partington, production manager of the Herbert L. Rothchild theaters in San Francisco, says:

"Don't try to judge a comedy—or any production for that matter—by hanging around in the back of the house and listening for laughs.

"The only way you can tell anything about it is to walk up the aisles and watch the faces. Many observers take their amusement quietly, it registers in chuckles, nudges, whispers, and particularly by smiling faces. You can't hear smiles from the box-office. You have to get down in front of the house and see the faces."

Choosing Shorts

Selling the idea of service to the exhibitors in the Northwest for the past three years has brought about a realization on the part of the exhibitors that the short subjects occupy a very essential part of their programs.

Our service consists of a compilation of the complete programs of the leading theaters in the Northwest. This service is available to the small exhibitors, who realizing its benefit, send us their advance feature bookings and we, in turn, from our records, book the most suitable short subjects. They even depend on us to keep within their program footage.

In reviewing our May bookings we find that twenty-five per cent of our accounts are now forwarding us their advance feature bookings and requesting us to complete their programs with short reels.

Is this a forward stride—We ask YOU.

J. A. GAGE,
Seattle Manager, Educational.

Here is the way O. L. Meister of the Whitehouse, Milwaukee, exploited the Our Gang Comedy, "Sunday Calm." A special platform was constructed the entire width of the lobby. On the outer edge was a picket fence covered with vines. About two feet back of the fence were cut-outs of the Gang, so mounted to give them the effect of looking over the fence at the onlookers. In the center a stuffed goat, hitched to the wagon, in which wax figures were specially made up to represent the various members of the Gang.

Reviews of Latest Short Subject Releases

"Fortieth Door"—C. W. Patton—Pathe
Produced Serial with Egyptian Locale of production. . . 10 episode serial e's latest serial has, as serials uite a number of things to mend it. Pretty Allene Ray star, the locale of the story Egypt—where the hero, Bruce n, is excavating a Pharaoh's
 . There is a good love-interest en the Mohammedan girl and merican scientist who helps her from the villainous Hamid o whom she is to be married.
 ge B. Seitz, who has directed Pathe serials, has done just as ith this, judging from the first episodes. The sets are more usually good, showing the of Cairo, the interiors of Turk-places and the desert. There is ked absence of "stunts"—that re are no wild jumps off cliffs.
 ut the excitement is supplied h episode with tense situations in which either the hero or heroine or both are in extreme danger, and left so until the next episode.

 In view of the talk and publicity which the discovery of the tomb of Tutankhamen occasioned there should be many ways of tying up and exploiting this serial. The cast should not be overlooked, either. It includes besides Allene Ray and Bruce Gordon, Anna May Wong, David Dunbar and Frankie Mann, Frank Lacteen and Lillian Gale, all of whom do good work. Pathe's pressbook contains many good ideas for exploitation.

"Fast Steppers"—Universal
Play Up the Races; Exciting
 Type of production
 series of two-reel stories

"Fast Steppers" is a series of two-reelers based on "The Information Kid" group of race track stories by Gerald Beaumont which ran in the Red Book Magazine. Billy Sullivan who succeeded Reginald Denny in the second "Leather Pusher" series is seen as "The Information Kid", a race track tout.

The pictures have been produced and handled in much the same style as the popular "Leather Pushers" except that they draw their excitement from horse-racing sequences instead of from boxing. The Tia Juana race track has been photographed for the series and the racing sequences seem to be the real thing. There is a complete story in each picture, but all of them deal with practically the same characters. "The Information Kid", his tough partner who supplies the comedy element—James T. Quinn,—"The Kid's" girl, who plays the violin in a cabaret—Shannon Day, and others. Edward Laemmle directed. Properly exploited this is a series of short reels that should make money for the exhibitor and please the crowds. A trailer of any of the racing sequences should bring them back for more.

"A Stitch In Time"—Max Fleischer—Red Seal
Exceedingly Clever Cartoon
 Type of production
 1 reel cartoon comedy

Max Fleischer's imp of the inkwell tries a new stunt this time. The artist sews him together instead of drawing him, as usual. The imp grabs the needle and the artist his pen and they have a duel. Finally sliding off the paper the little imp gets the spool of cord and ties up everything in the artist's home, much to the amusement of the audience. Cats, puppies, pictures, chairs, all are tied with cord, which is finally untangled by the artist and the imp put safely back in the inkbottle. There is the usual deft handling of actual photography and cartoon work seen in the Fleischer offerings. The audience at the Rialto liked this a lot.

"The Pilgrims"—Chronicles of America—Pathe
Worthwhile Historical Number
 Type of production
 2 reel historical drama

The trials and tribulations of the Pilgrim Fathers are depicted in this, the ninth chapter of the Chronicles of America series. The story begins with the persecution of the Separatists in England, showing their flight to Holland, and finally after twelve years, their voyage to America in the "Mayflower" with the rigors and privations of a bleak New England Winter following their landing at Plymouth Rock. This intensely dramatic tale is told with simplicity and will strike a spark of patriotism in every American who sees it, as well as make the history of the Pilgrims clear. It is very worth-while, as is the entire series.

"April Fool"—Roach—Pathe
Really Laughable

Type of production. . . . 1 reel comedy
 Genuine, spontaneous laughter will result from the showing of this Charlie Chase comedy, which, is built, as the title indicates around the practical jokes played on that date. Seeing the other fellow "fall" when you know the joke is always funny, and they have played upon this to the last flicker. The titles too, are good. Chase is seen as a reporter on a newspaper. He is in love with the editor's daughter. The office boy fools everybody with rubber hammers, paper-cutters, tin ink-spots, etc. and Charlie bets ten dollars no one can fool him. After which he sits down in real ink, breaks the glass door with a real hammer, thinking it rubber, and finally lets the editor's house burn down because he thinks the fire is just another joke. Should be good for many laughs.

"Fishin' Fever"—Grantland Rice—Pathe
Interesting and Well Produced
 Type of production
 1 reel sport review

Fishing in all its phases is shown in interesting fashion in this issue of Grantland Rice's Sportlight. The pictures deal with the development of so-called "fever" from the tiny tots and their toy fish-pond, to the bare-footed boy with willow rod and overalls, and the he-man's sport of deep-sea fishing. The reel finally closes with a shot of an old man dozing under a tree with his rod in his old wrinkled hands. The photograph is particularly good.

"A Tiny Tour of the U. S. A."—Hodge-Podge—Educ'l
A Novel Presentation

Type of production. . . . 1 reel novelty
 Lyman H. Howe's "Tiny Tour of the U. S. A." should find a suitable place on any program. The subject matter is varied and the manner in which it is presented is interestingly novel. Cartoon bits are also interspersed here and there throughout the reel with good effect. The places pictured are first located on a map and then the scenes are shown. Among the shots are a driveway in Central Park, New York City; the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y.; a steel mill furnace in Pittsburgh; a glimpse at the Colorado Rockies; Yosemite Valley and finally the streets of Washington. This last looks as if it were taken from a low-flying aeroplane and the spectator gets the sensation of riding in it.

"Air Pockets"—Mermaid—Educ'l
Cutting Heightens Effects

Type of production 2 reel comedy
 Good cutting is responsible for the effects obtained in the second reel of this Jack White production in which two coons are caught and carried up accidentally by rising aeroplanes. They are seen high up on the clouds, sailing over housetops, etc, finally catching hold of the same flag-pole, which sways and bends precariously under their weight. This situation alone is enough to put the comedy over, although the first reel contains several bits of humor involving a folding flivver that blows apart when the window is opened and a fat woman who insists upon climbing upon a moving wagon that tips over whenever she puts her foot on it. Fred Hibbard directed and Lige Conley is the featured player. The cast includes Earl Montgomery Sunshine Hart, Olie Borden, Peg O'Neil.

"Nerve Tonic"—Christie—Educ'l
A Lively, Funny Number

Type of production 2 reel comedy
 Remember the old sliding-panel-trap-door-hidden-passage serial? Harold Beaudine, the director of this Christie Comedy starring Jimmie Adams, has got all the old stuff and some new in this. And what's more, it's funny. It goes at such high speed that it's all you can do to keep up with it. Of course, you know there's a catch to it all—and it comes out at the finish when you find that the mysterious house is an amusement park device that a doctor has rented to cure his nervous patient. Jimmie Adams is the patient. Jay Belasco the doctor, and Marie Astair, the girl whom both love. Walter Graham is responsible for the story.

of Story....Domestic drama.
ere isn't a thing that happens in "al O'Mine" that hasn't occurred many previous pictures with ories having exactly the same ic situation as those found here.
ere is the wife who gives up a reer that promises fame and for-

As a Whole....MYSTERY MEL-LER WITH ACTION AND THRILLS FOLLOWING IN RAPID SUCCESSION. MUCH HOKUM AND LITTLE LOGIC
BUT GOOD EXCITEMENT AND PLENTY OF IT FOR THOSE WHO LIKE IT.

Stars.....Work nicely together and fulfill requirements without much trouble. Roles don't ask much serious effort of either.

Cast.....Includes some well known names but no one gaining prominence either for the prominence of his part or the excellence of his work. A well balanced cast and capable for the most part. Includes Wilton Lackaye, Tyrone Power, Charlotte Walker.

Type of Story.....Mystery melodrama. Back in 1917 Herbert Brenon produced Louis Joseph Vance's "best seller" for Selznick and at that time the picture was criticized for being too gruesome and badly in need of reediting. S.
E. V. Taylor's production, with the same story brought up to date, is not gruesome—in fact the murders and knock-outs are usually done in the dark—but the reediting criticism still holds good. There is such a wealth of incident, so much rapid incident, that you're bound to lose track of the thing.
You can't keep up with it. For some this probably won't be a fault, however. They'll probably consider it part of the mystery business. But those who like to have things clarified won't be satisfied when events happen faster than they can keep track of. "The Lone Wolf" contains, however, a plot that is too illogical for much explanation. It's mostly a matter of taking things for granted and accepting them for the action and thrills they afford. It's speedy all right.

Box Office Ang'e.....Depend upon the action and thrills to send them out satisfied. You know whether or not your folks like exciting pictures. They should be familiar with the title and unless you cater to folks that want logic and won't get a kick out of thrills and hokum, it should do very nicely.

Exploitation....Boost the title and arrange book-store tie-ups for the display of Vance's book. Promise plenty of thrills and talk about the workings of the Parisian underworld band known as "The Pack" and the secret manouevering of the crook who worked alone and became notorious as "The Lone Wolf." Use the stars' names prominently and if you want more detailed exploitation suggestions, get a copy of Associated's press sheet. It is quite complete.

Buster Keaton in
"Sherlock Jr."

Producer: Jos. M. Schenck
Distributor: Metro

As a Whole....THE BEST COM-EDY THIS YEAR. A RIOT OF LAUGHS. PROBABLY THE BEST THING KEATON HAS EVER DONE. IF THEY DON'T LAUGH THEMSELVES SORE
THERE'S SOMETHING WRONG.

Star....Better than ever before. Has a knock-out story to begin with but he gets his gags and stunts over particularly fine.

Cast....Buster has his father working for him again in "Sherlock Jr." He plays the part of the father of Buster's sweetheart, the latter played by Kathryn McGuire.

Type of Story....Comedy, but not just plain comedy—a comedy-riot fits it better. Buster Keaton has made mighty fine comedies before but never has he had a story with as many original stunts and new comedy gags as he offers in "Sherlock Jr." To describe the laughs in the picture is impossible. They have to be felt to be enjoyed. Buster is a moving picture operator who falls asleep while watching a drama from the projection room.
He has just lost his sweetheart because his rival placed a pawn ticket in his pocket indicating that hero pawned his prospective father-in-law's watch. As a side line Buster has been studying to be a detective. In his dream the sweetheart and rival assume the characters of the people in the drama and Buster is the famous Sherlock Jr. His adventures in pursuing the villain and his method of "detecting" evidence provides constant laughs. There is such a wealth of original business in the picture that it is difficult to pick out any one sequence as the best but to give an idea of the stunts—while escaping from villain and his band after rescuing the girl, Buster, driving one of the new four wheel brake cars, suddenly comes to a lake and when he applies the brakes, the car stops, the body lands in the lake, Buster stands the hood up on end and the pair go sailing peacefully across the lake. The chasis remains in the spot where Buster stopped the car.

Box Office Angle....Big in letters as big as you can make them.
"Sherlock Jr." is a riot of laughs and if you don't show it you're doing your patrons an injustice.

Exploitation.....Shouldn't be necessary to go into detail on this point.
Just get your booking and don't spare yourself to put it over. Tell them it is the funniest picture Buster Keaton has made yet and the best comedy this year, because it has continuous laughs and originality.

Laura La Plante in
"The Dangerous Blonde"
 Universal

As a Whole.....THEY STILL HAVE TO FIND BETTER STORIES FOR THE STAR. CURRENT VEHICLE GIVES EVERYONE IN THE CAST MORE PROMINENCE THAN IT GIVES HER. FAIR PICTURE.

Star....Pretty and wears attractive clothes. Needs a lot better material than either her first or second pictures contain if she is to make a place for herself. Very limited role in this.

Cast.....All have more to do than star. Edward Hearn suitable as the football hero and Arthur Hoyt fails to do much but overact. Others Philo McCullough, Eve Southern, Margaret Campbell and Frederick Cole.

Type of Story....Romantic comedy drama according to Universal's billing but there's more slapstick and helter-skelter action than either romance, comedy or drama, the latter element being out entirely. "The Dangerous Blonde" is a weak story and there isn't much to be recommended in the way of entertainment. There is one compensating feature, however, that helps a lot to make the picture possible and that is the pace that it moves at. It isn't slow. Even if there isn't much weight to the incidents and not always a satisfactory amount of humor, it keeps moving along and ends in the fifth reel so that there isn't any reason for being bored with it. Laura La Plante is pretty and displays some attractive gowns that will appeal to feminine patrons. With proper material she should be developed into a worth while bet. The story has to do with the attempt of Diana Faraday, a college girl, to retrieve letters written by her father to a vamp who threatens exposure unless he "comes across." Diana's efforts to secure the letters and the anxiety of her sweetheart who has not been taken into the scheme furnishes some fast moving, though pretty absurd, incidents.

Box Office Angle....Average picture. Even though it isn't strong in story nor unusual in other respects, you need not worry that they'll walk out. It keeps moving and should hold them.

Exploitation....You might work this up in comedy fashion with lines reading: "Husbands, Attention! Are you married to woman or a battleship? Daddy Faraday thought his was a battleship. But he had good reason. See 'The Dangerous Blonde.'" Or, "Write letters if you will but don't give your right name. 'The Dangerous Blonde' will explain why." A striking blonde distributing throwaways containing catchlines should attract considerable attention.

"The Goldfish"

Producer: Joseph M. Schenck
 Distributor: First National

As a Whole....DECIDEDLY THE BEST VEHICLE CONSTANCE TALMADGE HAS HAD IN SOME TIME. DOES SOME OF HER BEST. TROUPING IN THIS.

Star....Makes up for the disappointments of her last few pictures. As the "dizzy" wife of the cabaret singer she's great.

Cast.....Pat O'Malley splendid as Connie's "retired" husband. Jean Hersholt great type as Herman Krauss, the love-sick German who becomes Connie's second husband. Zazu Pitts good in comedy role.

Type of Story....Comedy. It has been a long time since Constance Talmadge had a story that fits her as well as "The Goldfish." It gives her all the opportunities in the world to troup in her own style and she doesn't let a single chance get by her. The opening reels are packed full of great comedy business. Both the star and Pat O'Malley contribute fine character sketches in this sequence. Unfortunately they set too fast a pace in the opening reels and since they haven't got quite as good material for the latter part of the story, it seems to slow up a bit toward the close but this could be considerably remedied by a little cutting. The titles are corking fine and draw many of the laughs. The theme deals with the rise of Jennie Wetherby who divorces her first husband, whom she loves dearly, to marry Herman Krauss who has plenty of money. Her next step is to divorce Herman and marry the president of Herman's company. Husband number three dies, leaving her a fortune, and she's just about ready to marry an English Lord when Jimmy re-appears and Jennie elopes with him. The story is not without a moral: that happiness can only be attained through true love.

Box Office Angle....Very good. You may have to do a lot of talking to convince them that Constance really has a winner in "The Goldfish." Her recent pictures haven't been the sort that her admirers want of her so do your level best to bring them in for this one and count on pleasing them.

Exploitation.....Title readily suggests effective stunt exploitation and tie-ups. Secure window space in a prominent locality and stock it with gold fish in globes and display signs announcing the picture. Get bird-stores to co-operate in the display. Play up the star's name and say that Marjorie Rambeau appeared in the stage play of "The Goldfish." Teaser ads and stunt exploitation, trailer advertising and stills will all help.

Direction.....Jerome Storm; very good.

Mae Murray in
"Mlle. Midnight"

Producer: Tiffany Prod
 Distributor: Metro

As a Whole.....ARTISTIC PRODUCTION AND RATHER TASTIC ATMOSPHERE. STAR VERY MUCH IN USUAL. SURROUND STORY A BIT SLIGHT FOOTAGE ACCORDED.

Star....As vivacious as usual is inclined to overdo it some. Nearly always dashes off the set. Very pretty and sply photographed. Her gowns attract attention. They're beautiful and not quite as bizarre as she has worn in previous pictures.

Type of Story....Drama. Mexico's political strife holds the key of interest in Mae Murray's photoplay, a drama in which big, fat Mexicans are striving for leadership and involving a little miss whose father is killed. The agent of his own brother, the latter than secreting the daughter and heiress, while he plans control of her fortune to further political ambitions. There is a wealth of material or a great deal of originality in the story but director Leonard has dressed it in an elegant production and surrounded the star with plenty of material appeal to offset the story's shortcomings. It includes a dramatic role for Miss Murray following her several opportunities in dance, and develops into a plot of romance when the brave American saves her from her villainous captor. Some of the bandit business is a bit hectic and could have been omitted without detriment. The development isn't slow but there is a little too much footage for amount of story.

Box Office Angle.....You can't tell whether or not you can please the folks with a Mae Murray picture. She's made enough of them for them to like her they'll be pleased with this.

Exploitation.....Here's an unusual title that should catch their eyes. Play it up extensively and in your announcements say that Mae Murray plays the part of a vivacious miss of French ancestry who answers the call of her great-grandmother, a belle of her day, whose imprudent but frivolous escapades caused her to be banished from the French Court. Say it is a story of bold and a hero brave who wins the lady he loved from a villainous uncle who sought to confine her in an asylum while he appropriated her fortune. Boost the star's name and use plenty of stills and a trailer.

Direction.....Robert Z. Leonard; very good.

THE BAG

By DANNY

Who holds it? Does the producer, the distributor, or the exhibitor? Buck-passing has been the national pastime in the industry with regard to the matter. We've heard a lot lately of exhibitors who complain of pictures and blame distributors; and the latter pass the blame to the producers. And the exhibitors!

One of those Clem Deneker's just get nowhere. And we—but the Chadwick group of Independent M. P. Prod. & Dist. have one of those famous lunches tomorrow. Mrs. Astor's. And we're due to some ideas. So we'll talk about finding the Bag." And let it go. Sydney S. Cohen of the T. O. is also to talk. And the subject relates to the co-dependence of the independent producer, distributor and exhibitor. Sydney always worth listening to.

Praise from Caesar

Writes Al Lichtman.

"My Dear Danny:

"I want to compliment you on the splendid articles you have published recently in your valuable paper concerning the buying and selling conditions which exist in our industry.

"I believe if you continue to publish these constructive articles for a better code of ethics in the buying and selling of pictures, it will result in the betterment of conditions for all concerned.

"Personally, I greatly appreciate your articles and hope they continue."

Now, Al, that's nice. Glad you liked them.

There's going to be a nice meeting of the Hays group. Deal soon. And it promises results. Relative to certain types of pictures. Which were generally agreed upon as "out." And that—by that perversity which distinguishes some of our ablest citizens. Some of the "outs" have been scheduled for production for next season. Which has stirred up some of the gen-

Bring Hot Retorts from Exhibitors in New England and Nebraska—Hostettler Wants to Know

The April 29 issue of THE FILM DAILY carried the report of the admission tax figures furnished by the Government, indicating that business was far better than a year ago.

A general cry has resulted. "Al" Steffes of Minneapolis protests the figures; Joe Dennison of Michigan thinks they fail to show truthfully existing conditions, and several sales managers declared, commenting on them that business was far from good in several sections.

The mail of the past few days has contained quite a few letters showing exhibitor agitation resulting from the

"Girl Shy" at Cameo

"Girl Shy" will follow "The Chechahcos" at the Cameo. The Lloyd picture opens May 25 for an indefinite run.

Editor's Note—Behind this inconspicuous news report is a mighty important matter. Especially, as it concerns the showing of the Lloyd picture during the summer months. The Cameo run is going to block the showing. The reason: inability of buyer and seller getting together. Pathe won't talk about it. Neither will the big circuits involved. But the point remains that either because of inability to make a deal or the

No Intention of Bringing Unit Here, Despite Report—Some Scenes Shot in Tunis

Edward Bowes denied on Saturday the report that the "Ben Hur" company would return to New York and make the picture in this country.

He admitted that adverse weather conditions had retarded the building of sets but declared that the production was advancing as expected. The picture will be made abroad as originally planned. Some of the scenes those dealing with the "Wise Men of the East" have already been shot in Tunis.

You'll notice a holler. From Hostettler and a New England exhibitor. About the admission tax figures. Well, they're right. But you can't go back of the record. Business isn't good. In a lot of spots. So much so that a prominent distributor just notified some of his men. To have the pictures played—even if they had to be furnished free. To keep some houses open. In the territories affected. Here's hoping that impositions do not develop.

If they do they will just choke a mighty decent effort to help out. When help is most needed.

Admission Figures

tax figures. Two of the most interesting are printed below:

HOSTETTLER AMUSEMENT CO.
Executive Offices

Omaha, Neb.

Film Daily,
New York, N. Y.
Gentlemen:

We are just in receipt of issue of your paper of April 29th, in which you reveal figures regarding admission tax.

We would certainly thank you if you will try to analyze these figures and find out just where and why the tax was higher. Certainly it could not have come from motion picture theatres—I mean the rank and file of picture theatres in which fifty-piece orchestras and stage presentation, which rival the Music Box Review production, are not used. We have quite a large number of theatres and are in constant touch with hundreds of exhibitors, and cannot accept the figures as any indication that the motion picture receipts are increasing. We do not say that there are not localities where the picture business is better, but we think these instances are few and far between.

If there is any way to find out from these figures the sections of the country that are doing an increased business over last year, that is, what we term motion picture theatres, we would be pleased to have you advise us.

Very truly yours,
HOSTETTLER AMUSEMENT CO.,
M. W. REINKE.

ELM AMUSEMENT COMPANIES

Editor, Film Daily,
New York, N. Y.
Dear Sir:

Apropos your article in the April 29th issue, giving statistics and figures that "1923-24 Theater Business Tops Previous Year's Record by Millions," it is well to state in addition that the fact alone does not necessarily mean an improvement in the business in general. A mere increase in volume of business does not, of itself, indicate larger profits. It may well be, and, I think, it is true in this instance, that the high cost of operating our theatres which has been brought about by the steadily increasing cost of pictures, rentals, and general overhead expenses, has necessitated a slight increase of admission charges, which in return is reflected, of course, in larger admission tax to the Federal Government. All of this, however, does in no way show or prove a larger net profit. The larger cost of operating is met by a larger and corresponding cost of admission, but in the final analysis, no better result from a profit standpoint than hitherto.

At no time is it safe to give figures on business done without at the same time showing cost of doing that business, for it gives an erroneous impression. And, in this day, when so many exaggerated accounts are circulated as to the fabulous profits made by men in the industry it is proper that some word be said to correct that impression. If we are to be relieved from the burdensome taxes, we cannot afford for our own protection to allow such statistics to go unchallenged, unless we add this word to give a proper focus of the situation.

If you consider this point worthy of a place in your daily why you are at liberty to insert it.

Very truly yours,
HENRY H. LEVENSON.

Kennedy Comedies Formed

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Boston—Kennedy Comedies, Inc., has been chartered with a capital of $50,000. Those behind the enterprise include Frank P. Kennedy, of Pepperell; Leon E. Dadmun, of Harvard, and Charles Kapka and Daniel Maguire of Boston. The new company will produce at Newton Highlands.

Hollywood Previews

As productions are invariably cut after previewing, a general idea of each picture only is given, rather than a complete analysis. The usual review will appear when the picture is shown in New York.

"The Marriage Cheat"

Ince—First National

The best part of "The Marriage Cheat" is the beautiful photography and magnificent backgrounds. The story proves to be not very good for picturization purposes, and at times dwindles off to absurd situations. But, regardless of the story lack that is evident, John Griffith Wray has injected certain values that may pull the picture through with the average audience to a little better than ordinary business.

The story deals with a missionary on an out of the way south sea island. A white woman who had jumped overboard from a passing yacht is rescued by the natives and brought to the island. A love affair develops between the missionary and the girl, and even though the girl tells she is married, the missionary hesitates to give her up. Then the husband returns to the island on his yacht—discovers the state of affairs—with the missionary fighting for the girl. As a finale, we find the three principals tossed upon the rocks in a storm—the missionary swims two miles to shore to summon help, and the husband conveniently slips off the rocks to leave his wife with the missionary.

The cast including Percy Marmont, Leatrice Joy, and Adolphe Menjou, may, with the title, help to draw the customers.

"How to Educate a Wife"

Warner Brothers

This is a very clever comedy-drama of domestic strife, that should get over most satisfactorily in every theater. It is the experiences of three married couples—the main couple, however, being Monte Blue and Marie Prevost. They get jammed up into all sorts of matrimonial difficulties and misunderstandings when she endeavors to help her husband in business.

A number of very clever situations have been devised, and the story moves along at a nice rate of speed. In addition to Monte Blue and Marie Prevost, the cast includes Creighton Hale, Betty Francisco, Vera Lewis and Claude Gillingwater.

With the exploitation possibilities of the title, plus the real entertainment values in the picture, it should go very nicely.

"A Son of the Sahara"

Carewe Prod.—First National

Even though Carewe journeyed with his company and staff all the way to northern Africa to film this, the finished product does not justify all the trouble expended.

The story is typical "sheik" style in unfolding—sheik in love with white girl—kidnapping and placing the girl in his harem when she discovers his nationality—then, later her discovery that he is really of English parentage.

Carewe has obtained some very colorful settings, but the story drags in spots, and Bert Lytell is far from a matinee idol sheik in the part he portrays.

On the whole, "A Son of the Sahara" is little better than program material, with certain audience value if you can interest your public in a "sheik" picture.

In the Courts

The Cosmograph M. P. MacL Co., has filed suit in the Supreme Court against the National Non-Technical M. P. Machine Co., for a balance of $3,440 due for machines delivered in 1921 and 1922. The defendant counterclaims for $10,000 damages on the ground that it signed contract to become exclusive agent for the plaintiff for five years, and that the plaintiff broke the contract by failing to fill orders with first class machines, and to put an unwriter's label on the standard safe machine.

The Appellate Division has decided that Eggers, Inc., need not test before trial in a suit by Abbey Printing Shop, Inc., for $3,405 due for services and materials in printing the "Scraper Mirror." The defendant is counting claiming for $3,325 on the ground that the plaintiff used such poor paper, ink, and press work that the new dealers returned 3,500 copies of each issue of the paper. The plaintiff sought to examine the defendant to these allegations.

Supreme Court Justice Ford denied an application by William Faversham to set aside an order in his examination before trial in suit of the Selznick Distributing Corp., for $44,036 damages for breach of contract to make a film under an agreement with Lewis Selznick.

A default judgment for $4,822 has been filed in the Supreme Court by Mary F. Yoost against Alfred Harstun on a note payable at the Dyckman Theatre, in W. 207th St.

Supreme Court Justice McCo has signed an order dismissing a suit of the Automatic Reel Co., against the Precision Machine Co., Inc., because the case has been settled.

AMERICAN—Another Griffith picture, another masterpiece of the cinema, another unimpeachably artistic fusion of romance and history * * *

JOURNAL—It was not only that this picture is a shelter for artistic achievement and the spectacle, nor that a great scion of a fine historic family, Lionel Barrymore, played an unimportant part. It was because the greatest pictorial biography the cinema has ever seen was presented.

NEWS—The ride of Paul Revere is an outstanding and important piece of motion picture art in this production. * * * The poet Longfellow is surpassed and outdone in the swiftness and breath-taking quality of the scene of the Paul Revere TRIBUNE—"America," the greatest play D. W. Griffith has made since "The Birth of a Nation." * * * What a picture! The illustrated story of momentous events in our country's history.

POST—The Griffith film is a stupendous work. There are hundreds and hundreds of scenes in some of the scenes. * * * The war scenes were gripping, and to verify the picture all we have to do is to turn to authentic history.

TIMES-STAR—As sweet as an old song at twilight, yet so powerful that it fills the heart and stirs the soul, * * * "America," * * * will live long after its stars are dust and its actors phantoms.

TRIBUNE—* * * the latest and greatest D. W. Griffith's productions, not only a superb picturization of the Revolution, but an inspiring lesson in patriotism.

"The Confidence Man"—F. P.-L. Granada, San Francisco (Week Ending May 3)

SULLETIN—The picture is a romance filled with exciting situations, and watching it one is reminded of the old work accompanied by Meighan in the first big crook drama.

ALL—It keeps one guessing as to what is going to happen next and whether or not the hero will forsake his evil ways or not. EXAMINER—A sort of "Wallingford" is given to the play, although the operations are conducted on ordinary lines of acting and there is good entertainment going with the constant dramatic action of play.

NEWS—Interest is sustained in "The Confidence Man" to the end without resort to melodramatic climaxes and it proves a sane and wholesome picture.

"Cytherea"—1st Nat'l Olympia, Boston

TRANSCRIPT—* * * a series of sticky, colored scenes, quite devoid of any exotic charm * * *

FREE PRESS—Hergesheimer's novel * * * was loved by thousands * * * and the play should prove equally popular * * *

Lewis Stone is admirable in the part of the husband. Some of the scenes in color are unusually interesting and the whole is well staged.

NEWS—"Cytherea" has been splendidly staged and good judgment has been shown in selecting the cast. Lewis Stone as the husband gives his usual effective performance * * * it's not a bit shocking. However, it's much too sexy for any but adult minds.

TIMES—* * * has lost none of its charm of interest being transferred to the screen.

"Dawn of a Tomorrow"—F. P.-L. California, San Francisco (Week Ending May 3)

CALL—This picture has action that rivets the interest of the spectator to scene after scene, and when the story is told it really ends something that some picture plays forget to do.

NEWS—"The Dawn of a Tomorrow" is a good film, and unusual in that it manages to be a sentimental story that is not sentimentalized in the telling.

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall"—United Artists New Detroit, Detroit

FREE PRESS—Many factors contribute to the success of this attraction. Naturally Miss Pickford is the principal one. The appropriate cast assisting the star is also of material importance.

NEWS—Not since the happy days of "A Romance of the Redwoods" and "Daddy Long Legs" has the sprightly Pickford spirit had such romping leeway * * * the whimsical touches of Marshall Neilan, who directed, are always in evidence.

TIMES—The picture shows up a new Mary Pickford, as fascinating as any of the others and with an additional impressiveness and dignity already mentioned. The other acting is good.

"The Eternal City"—1st Nat'l New Astor, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE (Morning)—Barbara La Marr and Bert Lytell play the effective roles of the two lovers, while Lionel Barrymore gives an excellent performance of the unsympathetic baron. Richard Bennett and Montague Love head the supporting cast, which includes hundreds of people.

TRIBUNE (Evening)—Same.

"Excitement"—Universal Randolph, Chicago

TRIBUNE—My name is "Excitement" and I am greatly in need of help. I limp badly so a pair of crutches would be appreciated. * * * I am supposed to be funny but am not, is the common complaint against me.

"The Lone Wolf"—Asso. Exhibitors Kings, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—"The Lone Wolf" has given a most adequate scenic investiture and there is real environment for the many scenes of underworld mysteries of Paris.

POST-DISPATCH—It might have happened anywhere, or it might not have happened at all, which is more likely.

STAR—"The Lone Wolf" is a reasonably engrossing presentation of swift-moving adventure, with many unexpected climaxes and anti-climaxes.

By DANNY

Why do we everlastingly talk about money? Why when anything important happens in pictures that the first thing someone thinks about is in terms of millions? There are a lot of folks hiding behind screens who don't wait for these figures and then they come against the industry when the opportunity happens.

For instance—a few weeks ago we were all fussed up in the office. Over the figures showing the volume of business done at the box office. And then came the increase with pride. And a few days later—during the hearing in Washington these very figures were used against the tax reduction on admissions.

In Washington several years ago we were threatened with serious taxation on production because a Western Senator was peeved that Mary Pickford's income was vastly in excess of the income of the President of the United States.

When a wise press agent sent out a report of Jackie Coogan getting a check for a huge amount against his last four pictures, this was turned against the business. Let's all agree to lay off using figures. Especially when they crawl into the millions. It saves a lot. And block Canon came from being oversupplied with material.

Here's what the Motion Picture News says about the coming golf tournament:

These film tournaments have become extremely popular. They bring the boys together in a fine spirit of good fellowship. Ideas are exchanged—and so is the stuff that finds park space in the hip pocket. They do not make many 'birdies' or 'holes,' but they make a happy following concentrated around the teenth hole. They start off by shouting 'Fore!'—and end up by shouting 'More!'

Jack White Here on Reported New Deal—Plans Features Next Year

Jack White is at the Commodore in connection with what is said to be a new distributing arrangement for his 1924-1925 product. The various White units at present supply a considerable portion of the Educational program.

When White was reached on the telephone yesterday, he refused to either confirm or deny the report about a new release. However, a spokesman for him declared that, while White did not want to make a definite statement, it was true that he was figuring on a different distribution.

White said he intended operating sixteen units next year, an increase of six over his present forces and that he intended making feature length comedies, in addition to short subjects. Educational, during the current season, has listed a total of fifty-seven pictures produced by the White organization.

It was impossible to reach anyone in authority at Educational for a statement.

English Budget to Relieve Little Fellow—Worry There Over Import Duty Removal

BY ERNEST W. FREDMAN

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

London—While the elimination of the entertainment tax on all seats up to 6d., is by no means all that exhibitors hoped for, yet it is a step in the right direction, and has been received with satisfaction on all hands. The effect will be that in the smaller kinemas throughout the country considerable relief will be felt as most of the seats in these halls average from 5d. to 9d. and it therefore means almost abolition.

Suggested For All European Producers—German Editor Would Draft Agreement

London—A co-operative agreement, embracing the leading figures in the European film industry in order to permit each producer to get his cost out of the Continental market and thus add an impetus to the sale of foreign rights, perhaps irrespective of price, is suggested by Gustav Wolfsohn, editor of the "Lichtbildbühne" of Berlin. The Wolfsohn article is given prominence in "Kinematograph Weekly."

Wolfsohn's analysis of America and how this country regards foreign pictures is lucid and clear. He argues that the idea of an American boycott is silly and admits that Americans need have no fear of European competition, at least, as he says, "for the time being." He points out that some German pictures have gone over very well in America and places the blame squarely on the producer for his failure to follow up his advantage. Wolfsohn says, in part:

"If we wish to sell our goods we must be ready to risk some expenditure. Instead of casual trips to the States, we ought long ago to have founded American branch offices of our own, just as the Americans are doing in all the important European markets.

"The strength of the American position is due to the fact that they can recover their cost in their own market, which means that the American producer is financially independent of any other market. * * *

Adolph Zukor Finds Business Conditions Generally Satisfactory—Enthusiasm at the Studio

Returning yesterday from a visit to the Coast, during which he attended sales conventions in Chicago and Los Angeles, Adolph Zukor reported that he found business conditions generally satisfactory.

"I talked with several exhibitors," he said, "and except that weather conditions at the moment are unsatisfactory they all were optimistic. Business has been excellent excepting in a few spots. In the Northwest, I was told that with the reduction of the admission tax it was believed that much help would come to the exhibitors of this section, because they have absorbed the tax; this will help. In the farming sections of the West business has not been satisfactory because of crop conditions. Otherwise business looks good. General mercantile conditions are not so good."

As to production plans he said he felt very happy over the enthusiasm and spirit which was manifested at the studio. "Several stars and directors told me that if they could not turn out their pictures under the con-

Warners to Distribute Themselves In This State and Northern New Jersey

All reports to the contrary, the Warners will retain the distributing rights of their 1924-1925 product for themselves and handle their own releases in New York City, New York State and Northern New Jersey.

The present Warner exchange, adjoining the executive offices in the Mecca Bldg., will accommodate the selling force to serve the city, Northern New Jersey and part of the State. No exchange has been secured in Buffalo as yet, but it is quite likely that an arrangement will be made with an existing organization to handle physical distribution.

"We must enter the American market, not in order there to earn a few odd dollars, but in order to get a footing over there for good, to secure a future market.

"The essential thing for the leaders of the European Trade is to see that this splendid isolation, is the real source of their weakness, and that it needs co-operation in order to bring them on the same footing with their American competitors. The idea is to get the leading personalities of the European film trade to sit down round a table and come to some agreement regarding the marketing of their productions within Europe. There is no reason why such an agreement should not be reached. "Only by thus establishing a certain solidarity within the European film producing countries, only by co-operation such as outlined above, will it be possible for European producers to obtain a firm footing on the American market."

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Essay Contest on "Scaramouche"

Terre Haute, Ind.—An interesting essay contest was the pivot of the campaign around which the management of the Grand, waged their exploitation campaign for "Scaramouche." With the support of the school heads the management sent out notices to all its patrons and advertised it in local papers. Prizes totalling $50 were to be distributed to the first four winners on a "Scaramouche" essay for school children. The only rule laid down was that each contestant was to enclose with his essay the stub of the ticket to the Grand and to name the hour and the day on which he had attended. The judges were the principals of the two high schools and George Jacobs of the Grand.

The newspapers cooperated with stories on the contest and "Scaramouche" and numerous stills from the picture.

Broadcasts Showing Over Radio

One feature of the exploitation campaign put over at the Brooklyn Strand for "When A Man's A Man," was a radio tie-up with Loeser's store. On the Saturday preceding the opening, mention was made of the picture, accompanied by musical numbers in the radio announcements from the store, through station Weaf.

Many window tie-ups were also made. At Womrath's, one of the biggest stores in Brooklyn, a 40x60 special output was used as a central decoration, surrounded with mounted stills and copies of the book, making a most attractive and effective window display.

Other windows and store tie-ups included the insertion of 100 4x8 inch frames in choice restaurants and drug store locations.

Preview Gets Free Publicity

ties on films is still creating some little consternation. In many instances, laboratories are more seriously hit as it is felt that the larger American corporations will, directly after these duties are abolished, send their own prints into the country. It is also felt that this country which is already glutted with product is likely to receive a tremendous amount of cheap Continental and American pictures which otherwise would be kept out by reason of the fact that the duty would militate against them.

Graham Wilcox gave another trade show when they screened "The Nibelungs" the German epic to an audience of over 9,000. The hall was packed with leading lights in the producing and exhibiting side of the industry, whilst Society personalities were to be met with on every hand. The film is acclaimed in this country to be a masterpiece.

Fritz Lang, the producer, who was present at the trade show, intimated that his next picture will be a great modern drama.

Louis Mercanton, the French producer, is over here to arrange for an international cast for his next picture, "Two Little Vagabonds." He plans to place it in production in the next month.

Herbert Wilcox has now definitely fixed his cast for "Decameron Nights" the Drury Lane drama, on which he starts work shortly. The leads will be Lionel Barrymore, and Ivy Duke, the well known English screen star. They will have a strong supporting cast.

"The Ten Commandments" is still going strong at the London Pavilion. One of the latest stunts of the management was to invite a large number of clergy to be present.

The next big conference of the Kinematograph Exhibitors Ass'n will take place at Scarborough on July 1. The President of the French Exhibitors' Ass'n., has been invited to attend.

Malicious Gossip!!!

Certain persons have been spreading false and malicious mis-information about Independent Distributors. These inspired gossipers have been trying to persuade the trade that Independents charge higher prices than national distributors for similar product; give inferior service; lack consideration in ordinary business contacts . . . etc., etc.

Such methods usually defeat their ends. Exhibitors have become suspicious of the rumors flying around and are daily expressing to us, as well as to other reliable Independents, the assurance of their earnest support for the coming season.

Speaking as an Independent Distributor—meaning thereby a distributor who sticks strictly to the business of selling pictures to theatres without being an Exhibitor on the side—Commonwealth Film Corp. promises for the new season of 1924-25 the finest and most comprehensive product in its history.

Since its beginning in 1919 Commonwealth has handled a product worthy of representation in the finest theatres. Each year has seen that product expand in variety and scope, all the while maintaining the highest standard. Incidentally, we have never been lacking in customary business courtesy nor in efficient service.

This year our product is bigger and better than ever.

"Bluff"—F. P.-L.

Missouri, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—Agnes Ayres and Toney Moreno are a happy combination. The Paramount picture, "Bluff," is exceptional.

POST-DISPATCH—Agnes Ayres and a bewildering assortment of gowns * * * make "Bluff," * * * a picture that appeals mainly to the eye and hits that "modern" note which so many present-day movie regulars seem to demand.

STAR—The picture, while nothing to write home about, presents a fair way to spend an idle hour.

TIMES—* * * a sequence of events that are amusing to the extreme.

Columbia, Washington

POST—The old story of a small town girl's struggle in New York and how she won out by applying an American characteristic, "Bluff," is cleverly portrayed by Agnes Ayres.

TIMES—Besides the inducements of a good story, plus Agnes Ayres plus Antonio Moreno the role of Agnes as a costume designer is an excuse for a fashion display that alone is worth seeing.

"Fools Highway"—Universal
California, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 3)

DAILY NEWS—As unusual as it is interesting.

EXAMINER—The story * * * is slight, its principal purpose being to supply an interesting medium for little Miss Philbin * * * the suggestion of talent is strong throughout her work.

EXPRESS—Two things particularly distinguish "Fool's Highway." * * * It confirms the impression that Mary Philbin is a sensitive little actress of genuine and unusual gifts. And, it may be classed with that growing list of productions which portray certain phases of our multiple American life.

HERALD—Mary Philbin, * * * finds new laurels, not alone through her splendid interpretation * * * but through Cummings' masterful direction. The picture, * * * is enhanced to a place among the super-productions of the film world by the director's carefully arranged presentation.

RECORD—Mary Philbin, * * * plays excellently, the part of wistful Mamie Rose who loves Mike Kildare, played by Pat O'Malley.

TIMES—The picture is as full of human nature as a hotel, yet as full of romance as a girl's first kiss. In it Cummings has given us a completely fresh screen style, and one as colorful and arrestingly vivid as stained glass.

And what a genius Mary Philbin is!

"Forty Horse Hawkins"—Universal
Strand, Montreal

STAR—The dry, inconsequential, restrained humor of Hoot Gibson in "Forty Horse Hawkins" * * * will keep audiences chuckling merrily throughout the show.

Moon, Omaha

NEWS—Those who have lived in small towns * * * will appreciate "40-Horse Hawkins," * * *

High steppers on the other hand, will appreciate a back-stage glimpse of a Metropolitan theater in the same.

WORLD-HERALD—It starts out to be a pleasing comedy but it soon becomes tiresome by the introduction of too much humor.

"Girl Shy"—Pathe
Adams, Detroit

FREE PRESS—* * * has all the dramatic and heart interest of "Grandma's Boy," the thrills of "Safety Last" and all the laughs that were ever crowded into a motion picture.

NEWS—* * * finds Mr. Lloyd traveling at his fastest pace. But, let us hurry to warn you not to miss it.

Stanley, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—Take all the antics of Harold Lloyd that have made the world laugh in days gone by; add to them as many more and equally original antics with the star in the role of a stuttering country lad, and you have Lloyd's best and newest production, "Girl Shy," * * *

NORTH AMERICAN—* * * we admit freely there is plenty of art in Harold Lloyd's simon-pure facial pantomime. He dramatizes with complete truth very simple emotional facts, especially the fact of another's disconcerting, without rancor, and that's what honest slapstick comedy is. Harold Lloyd doesn't make clumsy burlesque of it.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—Most of the laughter comes in the last part of the picture from his frantic efforts to arrive at the girl's house in time to stop her from marrying his hated rival.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—There are so many different thrills and laugh-provokers that to enumerate would necessitate the heading of "a thousand and one."

Warfield, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 3)

CALL—"Girl Shy," in which Lloyd is appearing * * * is a corking comedy, * * *

EXAMINER—There is only one Lloyd. And nobody knows that fact better than the patrons at the Warfield, where all day yesterday hundreds and hundreds waited patiently in line until the hundreds and hundreds who were viewing and laughing at "Girl Shy" went their merry way.

NEWS—It may or may not be the funniest picture ever made. That doesn't matter either. What does matter is that it is excruciatingly funny and an amazingly good show.

"Jealous Husbands"—1st Nat'l New Lyric, Minneapolis

STAR—"Jealous Husbands," at the New Lyric this week is played by Earle Williams and Jane Novak and is a movie that ought to please screen fans. It has all the requisites of a good movie.

TRIBUNE (Morning)—An impressive characterization is offered by Mr. Will Williams as the husband. He is given capable assistance by Jane Novak and a supporting cast * * *

TRIBUNE (Evening)—Same.

"Mile-a-Minute Romeo"—Fox
Cameo, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 3)

BULLETIN—There is breathless action, a number of thrills and other situations of considerable interest.

CALL—* * * in addition to breathless action and a number of thrills, Mix offers in this his newest story situations of considerable interest.

NEWS—In addition to breathless action and a number of thrills, Mix offers in this his newest story situations of considerable interest.

"Mlle. Midnight"—Metro
State, Boston

TRANSCRIPT—The plot in its conception and execution is antique. All the big moments are such as one may see in any melodramatic production. There is the abduction of the lady, her rescue by the night-riding, loyal "rurales," the fight between hero and villain.

Piccadilly, Rochester

DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE—"Mlle. Midnight" is better than the average picture in which Miss Murray is starred, * * *

Monte Blue, of course, can be depended upon to play the lead opposite any star. His presence in the cast of this photoplay is a decided asset.

HERALD—The picture * * * shows the touch of an indefatigable, understanding and artistic directorial hand. * * * a picture well worth attending.

JOURNAL—There is plenty of action * * * so much that it really leaves scarcely any time for the familiar Murray posturing.

* * * Miss Murray makes a stunning senorita in a black wig and a series of gorgeous Spanish shawls. * * * She dances, of course.

TIMES-UNION—There is much action, but not very much acting * * * Mae Murray burlesques her way through the role of Renee, wearing many elaborate costumes and, at times, looking rather pretty.

"Montmartre"—F. P.-L.
Metropolitan, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 3)

EXAMINER—Pola Negri is lovely to the eye and thrilling to the imagination in this picture, but the story itself is trite enough and scarcely worth the time of either star or director.

EXPRESS—It is the acting that makes this film worthy of attention. * * *

Despite its technical shortcomings, "Montmartre" is a picture that all interested in cinema affairs and particularly those following closely the careers of Pola Negri and Ernst Lubitsch, should see.

DAILY NEWS—* * * —certainly the production cannot be called a contribution to the cinematic achievements of the year. It was made in Europe before Miss Negri and Mr. Lubitsch decided to come to the United States—what more could be said?

RECORD—From Hollywood standards there is too much story and not enough plot * * *

Yet it has the flavor of old Paris, characters that a Dickens might have penned, and its scenes are as grotesque in composition as a Hogarth sketch.

TIMES—Probably one of the most genuinely sophisticated that has shown lately. There is nothing especially pleasant about it, but there are many subtle bits of realism that will delight the picture-goer who is in search of grown-up entertainment.

"The Old Fool"—Hodkinson World, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—Nothing extraordinary about the plot * * * nevertheless it holds your interest throughout. E. D. Venturini has handled the direction exceedingly well.

"Peter the Great"—F. P.-L.
Karlton, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—Emil Jennings, as Peter I, Czar of Russia, shows a remarkable versatility in the handling of a part which calls for a display of brutality and tenderness, bitter hatred and love, voluptuous dissipation and clear-headed planning, strength and cringing remorse.

NORTH AMERICAN—The background of the czar of all the Russia's domestic life is detailed and realistic.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—Emil Jennings is one of the few actors who can trifle with serious history and produce a good result. * * * With deft acting and skill that is a joy to watch he reveals the Czar's personality, * * *

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—The picture is worth seeing if only from the point of view of a desire to watch Emil Jennings place another * * * new mark several yards further on upon the road which may some day lead him to America, * * *

"Shadow of the East"—Fox
Fox, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—"The Shadow of the East", * * * is another of those silly and ridiculous pictures of Arab love which followed in the wake of the popular "Sheik."

NORTH AMERICAN—"The Shadow of the East" is a sentimentally extravagant piece by the author of "The Sheik," F. M. Hull.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—* * * a desert picture full of the heart-throbbing scenes * * *

"Sherlock, Jr."—Metro
Allen, Cleveland

PLAIN DEALER—* * * "Sherlock" is considerably better than "Our Lady of the Snows." * * *

Loew's State, Los Angeles
(Week Ending May 3)

DAILY NEWS—* * * undoubtedly that it is guaranteed to be—"his fun film"—

EXAMINER—It's one of those film which is a few marvelous—marvelous is used advisedly—gags are built up and ed closely to the situations in the comedy. EXPRESS—Funny? This photoplay riot.

HERALD—Buster Keaton is proving the best laugh insurance is a certain amount of money always set aside in the pocket with which to buy tickets every time a Keaton comedy is shown.

RECORD—* * * amusing and in ways original. It hasn't the connected story "Our Hospitality" and it hasn't the gaggun succession of gags that Keaton's comedies used to have, but it has a lot of fun in it.

TIMES—The picture seems to be funnier than "Our Hospitality," measuring up to the standard of "Three Ages."

"Shooting of Dan McGrew"—Metro
Colonial, Indianapolis

STAR—"The Shooting of Dan McGrew" is good old melodrama, served up with garnishings. There are fancy cabaret scenes, a man chase, revenge and murder, told by some fine views of the northern landscape and their like.

Alhambra, Milwaukee

JOURNAL—All the elements of melodrama—that's what makes the material in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew."

NEWS—It's melodrama and that in itself is all right but the salt and drop of "snow" scenes and some of the acting veiled heavily toward the burlesque at times was so crude that it was laughable.

"Singer Jim McKee"—F. P.-L.
Capitol, Philadelphia

PUBLIC LEDGER—* * * it depends upon a story of peculiarly intriguing quality both from the standpoint of freshness and originality of twist. * * *

"A Society Scandal"—F. P.-L.
Capitol, Montreal

STAR—The combination of a scandal and gorgeous gowns attracted crowds to the Capitol. * * *

Palace, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—The picture commands interest from start to finish and some of scenes were made in aristocratic localities of New York. Some superb gowns worn by Miss Swanson.

THE LAWFUL CHEATER

About Hollywood

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Hollywood—Fred Niblo, of whom is none better in the Hollywood picture colony, has been the recipient of many honors during the year of his latest effort, "Thy Name Is Woman" at the Mission.

The opening night found one of the most representative audiences of the present picture folk attending, and in the evening, a testimonial was given to the director at the Mission.

Satisfied with this, the Wampas arranged a little dinner of their own for Niblo, and then the Wampas led through the downtown streets to the Mission to see the picture.

Universal opened a new stage a few weeks ago, said to be the largest indoor stage in captivity. That itself deserves a few lines, but the dance that was arranged to form-open the stage meant a lot to Universal City.

Nearly 2,000 of the staff of Universal City and their friends were present. And the spirit that was apparent during the evening throughout the crowd showed conclusively that Universal had done more by this stunt to gain a closer contact with the workers, than anything that had been done in years.

Carpenters, electricians, etc. took an interest in pointing out important stars or players to their wives and friends.

Charlie Chaplin kidnapped Sid Grauman and carried him many miles from Hollywood!

It is not a press agent's yarn, either. Charlie is making a picture based on the Alaska gold rush. We had heard that Sid Grauman could give plenty of material, in view of the fact that Sid had been in the rush north. So early this week Charlie drove out to Grauman's Hollywood and dropped in to have a chat with Sid. The latter walked out to Charlie's car—when he was suddenly seized and thrown bodily into the street.

The next heard of Sid, he was five hundred miles north of Hollywood, being for Truckee, where Chaplin is to shoot his snow stuff!

Bill Russell is back in Hollywood and again appear before the camera. He was not very far away, but he did not listen to picture offers.

For he's a racing enthusiast, and a stable parked at Ti Juana during the winter meet just finished. And had many of his horses carry off place honors during the meet.

Mal St. Clair, who recently directed "The Telephone Girl" series for F. B. O., will direct the next Warner picture with the dog, Rin-Tin-Tin. And Bill Seiter, who has developed a fast in the past year, has signed for the next six months to direct for Universal.

Only among relatives. Not among friends. But in your business procedure. It means a difference. Not only in tangible dollars and cents. But in those things which build for a finer understanding and a better appreciation of the fellow's problem. The man working in your business. Exemplified, for instance, by the vaudeville Managers Protective dinner Monday night. Vaudeville folk from far and near—and motion picture exhibitors who are interested in vaudeville as well as in pictures. They found a spirit of co-operation and helpfulness which proved an inspiration. Many of them were members of the M. P. T. O. Others were what is known as "outsiders." But they were all exhibitors—all have the same problems. All face the same difficulties.

If the spirit they witnessed, the atmosphere which enveloped that dinner meant anything to them it should have inspired this thought: that the only way to get anywhere with the vexing problems that harass and disturb the picture business must eventually be straightened out by arbitration. sooner or later the legs of all must go under the arbitration table. Can't we have some sort of an organization in pictures such as they have in vaudeville? And if not, why not?

Producers want current literature and current material. That seems natural. What the public wants a producer wants to give. But does the producer want this type of literature? What the President of the American Booksellers Asso. told delegates at the convention now on in New York: "There is too much new fiction worthy of a permanent place in literature." That is one of the reasons for the attitude of the Hays office to the current literature and literature. It is not only unworthy of a permanent place in literature; it is unworthy of either publication or distribution. No, we're not an old man. We know something of the

Flock of New Names Added to List of Entries—Many, Prominent Exhibitors

Yesterday was spent in rounding up tardy entrants for the Spring Golf Tournament. It was something that resembled a clean sweep. No less than twenty-two new names were added to the list, bringing the total number up to seventy. That's nothing. Watch how they flock in.

The first drive yesterday was aimed at the exhibitor group around town. It was worth the effort, because after it was over, many had declared their intentions of going out to Sound View on June 4. Whether they play golf, pinochle or just have lunch and dinner doesn't matter so much. The point is they will be there.

Billy and Harry Brandt, Louis F. Blumenthal, Bernard Edelhertz, Sam Berman, Charlie O'Reilly, Leo Schwartz, Charles Steiner, Lee Ochs—all of them—will be out. The next move was lunch over at the Astor where the process of eating was interrupted to corral more entrants. Results as follows:

Independent Producers and Independent Exhibitors to Work in Closer Harmony—Cohen's Address

Sydney S. Cohen was the chief speaker yesterday at the last of the special luncheons given by the Ind. Prod. & Dis. Asso. until next Fall, at the Astor yesterday. In closing he invited President I. E. Chadwick to be the guest of the M. P. T. O. at Boston, and to bring some of his members to the convention. In turn Chadwick expressed the hope that there would be closer co-operation between the members of the M. P. T. O. and the independent producers and distributors.

In part, Cohen said:
"Because of the intricacies in this industry of ours, it is possible for certain factors within the business to consolidate many things into as dangerous a trust or monopoly as could possibly exist and to accomplish this purpose in such a manner that many of the more astute minds in the country would not be aware of it."
"The only ones who generally seem able to stand together in this industry are the ones who are bent on centralizing and controlling it, so they can make and shape the general policies of the business to suit their own needs."
"It is the old story of an organized minority."

Famous Charges Unfair Competition Against Artclass on Use of "Ten Commandments" in Advertising

Action was filed yesterday in the Supreme Court, by Famous Players to restrain Artclass Pictures Corp. from using the words "Moses and the Ten Commandments" in advertising "After Six Days." In its suit, Famous maintains that the featuring of "Moses and the Ten Commandments" in the advertising of "After Six Days" is unfair and works injury to the plaintiff's picture, "The Ten Commandments."

From the papers filed there are, joined with Artclass as defendants, all the state-right buyers, including Louis Weiss, Adolph Weiss, Max Weiss, Edward Grossman, Standard Film Attractions, Supreme Photoplay Company, Kerman Films, Inc., B. & W. Booking Office, and Charles Lalmiere.

It is alleged that Weiss Bros. and Artclass purchased in 1922 a fifty-three reel picture produced in Italy and bearing the title, "The Holy Bible in Motion Pictures," and through an agreement with National Non-Theatrical M. P., Inc., distributed it to churches and schools in one reel a week, and that they continued to distribute and advertise the picture under the original title as a

New Fiction Unfit
Booksellers' President Denounces Trend in Current Literature—Opposes Censorship
Much of the current new fiction was denounced as "unfit" and "unworthy of a permanent place in the home library", by Simon L. Nye, president of the American Booksellers' Ass'n. in an address at the 24th annual convention of the organization. Several hundred booksellers from all parts of the country attended.

"It seems that the publisher, striving in keen competition, aims to see how many, not how worthy, books he can publish in a given period," Nye said. "He is responsible for that class of retail customer who now considers a book that is three or four weeks old behind the times. Almost without exception, a book of fiction that has been published three months practically is dead, forgotten, awaiting its removal to the bargain tables."

Newspaper Opinions

"Between Friends"—Vitagraph
Rivoli

AMERICAN—* * * I consider "Between Friends" the best thing that J. Stuart Blackton has made in a long, long time. * * * first-rate entertainment.

DAILY NEWS—* * * Just as the characters in this Robert W. Chambers story were cheap and unreal, so are they in the film.

* * * Mr. Tellegen suffers, oh, how he suffers! And Miss Nilsson, as the wayward Jessica, dies early in the film.

EVENING WORLD—* * * isn't such an awful much as films go. * * *

* * * to us the story was draggy and one that would never have been missed had it never been placed on the screen.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * It seems to us like an awful lot of nothing at all and the only player who is interesting is killed off in the first reel.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—It is many a day since Mr. Blackton has made a better picture. * * * Not only has he handled a strong story with intelligent dignity and repression, but he has skillfully avoided an interpretation which easily could have made it objectionable to the censors and the censorious.

POST—* * * How anything so frightfully poor, so hilariously ridiculous and generally terrible could ever be screened at all, much less shown at a Broadway house, passeth comprehension. It's so thoroughly atrocious that the problem of trying to review it staggers the mind of ye reviewer.

Lou Tellegen is at his terrible worst. * * *

TELEGRAM—* * * It is a typical Chambers story, not too close to life to disturb any film fan by its excessive realism. * * *

TIMES—* * * A picture of dubious merit which may have a certain element of popular appeal. * * * The narrative contains many queer ideas and in the end does not seem to get anywhere. Everything that is on the boards to happen is suddenly changed and what may have been mistaken for delicate and subtle touches has been inserted. * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * It is at the best a weak sister and not at all of the calibre of screen production qualified to show at one of the Broadway pre-release houses. * * *

From a drawing standpoint at the box-office it does not appear that "Between Friends" is going to pull anything like the usual week's business at the Rivoli.

WORLD—* * * a racy and sophisticated society drama, quite artificial and untrue, but so superbly directed and acted as to be absorbingly interesting. * * *

Sounds like what is known as a "box-office attraction." It is, but it is more.

"The Chechahchos"—Asso. Ex.
Cameo

AMERICAN—* * * It may be educational, but that does not keep it from having romance, adventure and a murder or two.

To balance this, we have some glacier scenes that are remarkable. * * *

EVENING JOURNAL—* * * There are blizzards; views of Mount McKinley, said to be the only photographs of the high peaks; melodramatic dance hall scenes; the pilgrimage at Chilcoot Pass, and a scene of boats crossing the rapids that makes one forget the greater-than-ever flood scenes introduced in other epics. * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * The story doesn't amount to much and we never before saw any of the people who play in it. Somehow it held our interest, however, even at the end. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * Later when Summer comes * * * there will be, without doubt, an even better reception awaiting this story, which is worked out amid the snowy wastes, mountains, glaciers and ice locked rivers of the North. * * * Louis H. Moomaw, the director, has caught the atmosphere of the country as he has told the tale of the first stampede over the Chilcoot Pass. * * *

POST—* * * It would be a great thing for movie-goers if all the fillums were as beautiful scenically. * * *

It's only when you come to the human material that the picture slips. * * *

Some of it is very amusing, some of it is exciting, and all of it is delightful from a scenic and photographic point of view. * * *

TELEGRAM—* * * It is a typical film story, with thrills and thunders. There is much more to grip the attention than the story itself.

Here are superb scenes of Alpine beauty in the Richardson Highway, fascinating pictures of the perils of the snow trails, and the terrible majesty of Alaskan glaciers sweeping down into northern seas.

TIMES—While some of the scenes of snow and ice are of interest and the race between dog teams across the white desert is thrilling, the actual story * * * is by no means a masterpiece. * * *

* * * It is merely an excuse to show some beautiful Alaskan snow scenes; perhaps if one can look upon it as bloodthirsty melodrama of the snows, it may be mildly diverting. * * *

WORLD—* * * Its scenery is gorgeous. Its outdoor pictures of snow and ice and glaciers and mountains and sleds and dogs and men are fascinating. * * *

Out-of-Town

"Girl Shy"—Pathe
Missouri, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—The new comedy is funny. With Lloyd's personality and pep the picture is outstanding in comedy values.

STAR—Harold Lloyd continues to go himself one or two better with each successive picture, the case in point being "Girl Shy,"

* * * TIMES—Harold Lloyd was never better in any of his productions than in "Girl Shy," * * *

"The Enchanted Cottage"—1st Nat'l
Grand Central West End Lyric
St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—It is different and genuine, a picture anyone will like and one that may set up some new records for the theaters which are presenting it.

POST-DISPATCH—Richard Barthelmess has been quoted as saying he did the best work of his career in "The Enchanted Cottage," * * * but in this instance Richard seems to be right.

STAR—The picture is a tour de force, a triumph of artistry and mechanics, but it is not entertaining.

TIMES—The scenes are wonderfully well filmed, and show the master-touch of Director John M. Stahl. Barthelmess does some wonderful acting. * * *

"Nellie, The Beautiful Cloak Model"—Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan
Kings, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—While it has been freely adapted to the screen, its melodramatic high lights have been retained and its thrilling moments kept the chills chasing up and down one's spine while it is being unrolled.

POST-DISPATCH—There never was on land or sea or stage or screen a melodrama like "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model," which is sending thrills of every description through audiences. * * *

STAR—* * * it is a curiously interesting piece of work with at least one hair-raisingly melodramatic wallop.

TIMES—* * * proves, by the crowds which it has been drawing the public desires the old melodrama.

"A Son of the Sahara"—1st Nat'l
Strand, Cincinnati

POST—The situations in "A Son of the Sahara" are very apt to become confused in the spectator's mind with the events of any number of other sheik pictures and stories.

TIMES-STAR—Both as a play and as a production, "A Son of the Sahara" surpasses all of the recent flock of Oriental and "sheik" pictures.

TRIBUNE—"A Son of the Sahara", which opened at the Strand yesterday, is a good picture for entertainment.

"Three Miles Out"—Asso. Exhibitors
New Grand, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE (Morning)—Throughout this seafaring melodrama, Miss Kennedy succeeds in injecting a pleasing personality into the role of a wealthy society debutante, who is tricked by a distressed rum smuggler.

TRIBUNE (Evening)—Same.

"Three O'Clock in The Morning"—
Burr-S. R.
Tivoli, Washington

TIMES—* * * It contains little of the rabble of trashy devices which cinema directors employ traditionally to indicate the younger generation, and has comedy in good measure. Few photoplays outside the costume class have been produced more lavishly.

"Three Weeks"—Gold.-Cosmop.
Century, Baltimore

AMERICAN—* * * has been fashioned into an entertaining and pictorial photodrama. * * *

Capitol, Cincinnati

POST—By the way, our opinion of the picture is that it must be an improvement on the novel, because of its beautiful scenes and its acting, but it takes far more than that to make a poor story a good film.

TIMES-STAR—Whatever one's ideas about the story itself may be, however, one must give Mrs. Glyn and the Goldwyn officials credit for having made a beautiful production.

TRIBUNE—* * * has passed beneath the keen scalp of the censors and comes out cleansed as by fire, and all that is left of the vivid, flaming, passionate story written by Miss Glyn is an ember and that a cold one.

Stillman, Cleveland

NEWS—Elinor Glyn's little passion flower has emerged from the censorial sterilization so pale and anemic that it has lost much of its fervor.

PRESS—The movie really belongs to the period in which the book was successful. Romantic love is expressed in elegant gestures, accompanied by heavings of the shirt front. * * *

PLAIN DEALER—The screen should have little place for this kind of silly and erotic twaddle. * * *

The backgrounds are pretty, even gorgeous—but you can't make silk purses from little acorns. * * *

Ohio, Indianapolis

STAR—The thrills and gasps which "Three Weeks" imparted in 1908 are missing in the film. The glamour of old has been replaced by a prim English respectability that should offend no one.

Sun, Omaha

NEWS—* * * follows Elinor Glyn's story closely enough to shock those who would be shocked by the book.

* * * your first impression will not be of the moral tone, but of its beauty. Settings are regal, yet simple, not bewilderingly complex. * * * No new tricks of photography. Simple exquisite detail.

WORLD-HERALD—Some will be disappointed. Some will not. It will depend upon your point of view.

The production is magnificently presented.

"Torment"—1st Nat'l
Colonial, Detroit

TIMES—The plot has been cleverly interwoven about the affairs of a band of international crooks who are brought from one country to another and finally to Japan in time to suffer from the earthquake.

"Thy Name Is Woman"—Metro Metropolitan, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 3)

CALL—The story has a background of Spanish splendor with thrilling escapes and love scenes.

CHRONICLE—* * * a three-cornered battle of love and wits which has been made into an absorbing photoplay.

"Why Men Leave Home"—1st
State, Cleveland

PRESS—The movie suffers from cision. At times it acts as tho it w to be a Cecil DeMille spectacle w million dollars worth of bathroom fix At other times, it acts as tho it want be a deep problem play.

PLAIN DEALER—This picture has given intelligent direction and it is play intelligent actors.

You don't need much more than th recommend it to you.

Palace, Montreal

STAR—It is a diverting and innoc story—as told on the screen by the ducer.

Grand Central, Lyric, Capitol
St. Louis

POST-DISPATCH—Marriage, l mooning, and even the possibility of natal influence, are treated with a ligh which crosses the boundary line bet legitimate farce and cheap vulgarity.

STAR—This photoplay is a common complication of obvious contrasts. It i a searching probe into the problem gested in the title.

TIMES—* * * it is film well worth ing. It is full of good entertainment laughs, but carries a lesson with it. to see it.

Metropolitan, Washington

POST—A celluloid apostle, evidently secreted to the task of telling the wide w and points south why so many marr go ker-flop.

TIMES—Unusually directed by M. Stahl, this picturization of a Hop stage success, is dedicated to "the American husband, and his patient w. * * * as it is, the independent theatres are be- asked rental prices by independent distor- without any pressure put behind their pictures, commensurate with those obtained by companies which not only advertise nationally but exert tremendous force in exploitation. To command these prices which would enable you to merchandise your product more profitably, you have got to sell an exhibitor more than several spools of celluloid bearing a lurid title, and which you tell us will 'mop up' for us. You must sell us something for which a demand has been at least partially created, or join with us in creating a demand.

"During the past 18 months only two concerns in this territory who could in anywise be classed as 'independents' have deviated from this old custom. They are F. B. O. who by virtue of intensive, and intelligent exploitation have 'put over' several features which have made money for the exhibitor, not because they were better than features which Apollo, Merit, Commonwealth, Vitagraph and others are releasing; but because a real demand was created for them. The other company is Universal, who by presenting a couple of outstanding features and letting the public know about same, have done the same thing. By these intelligent business methods they have made the exhibitor want their pictures, and they have made the public want them too, and the public is the element we are trying to please.

"With the absorption of the theatres that one circuit has been indulging in in this territory, they have added to their purchasing power and almost all but one or two of the independent distributors in this territory cater to them wholly and entirely not thinking that if these people continue to absorb theatres and extend their activities in this territory, there will be a closed market for these independent distributors. You people must learn soon that there are other theatre owners who have play dates for you beside 'Mr. Circuit'.

"Through the gradual development and progress of our industry, evolutionary moves will provide a way to eliminate the many parasitical influences in the business at this time. There are too many in-between-middlemen between the producer and the exhibitor of a picture, and these influences are too highly geared, resulting in needless waste. The cost of operating of theatres is becoming too burdensome and the theatre owner's back is not strong enough to bear the strain of the weight that is being placed upon him and the breaking point is being reached."

Preceding Sydney Cohen the Editor of the FILM DAILY spoke. Some of his ideas as to the interdependence of the independent producer, distributor and exhibitor, will appear in an early issue.

serial and without reference to either Moses or the Ten Commandments for several months, until it was announced by Famous that Cecil B. DeMille was producing "The Ten Commandments".

Then, it is charged, the Weiss Bros. determined to make a theatrical production of their picture and, after re-editing and cutting down the film to about twelve reels, advertised it as "After Six Days."

It is further charged that the Weisses to confuse the public and capitalize on the DeMille picture, arranged for special showings of "After Six Days" in Boston and Chicago, while DeMille's "Ten Commandments" was playing in those cities.

Ralph A. Kohn issued a statement yesterday which said, in part:

"It seems peculiar that 'After Six Days' first was released as a non-theatrical serial and then, as we are informed, played in New York at, among other places, the Fifth Avenue Theatre, 110th St. and 5th Ave., and at the Freeman Theatre, Freeman St. and Southern Blvd., the Bronx, both neighborhood houses, and that as soon as DeMille's 'Ten Commandments' established its tremendous success the owners of this picture suddenly decided to road show it, using new advertising that featured 'Moses and the Ten Commandments.'"

Louis Weiss, speaking for Artclass said:

"I welcome the filing of this action. There has been a lot of goings in the dark and I welcome the bringing of this matter into the open where a court can decide who is right in this matter. I once before charged Famous Players with backhanded methods. I repeat that and merely want to again say that I rejoice in the suit."

Files Double Suit

Damages Involved in Action Against Selznick and Officers of American Releasing

Per Licari, as trustee of the American Releasing bank, has filed suit in the Supreme Court against the Selznick Distributing Corp. and former officers of the American Releasing Corp., for $350,000 from each and for an order directing that all the property transferred by the American Releasing to the Selznick Distributing, valued at this sum be returned.

The complaint alleges that on May 1, 1923, American Releasing had 20 branches, was distributing 50 pictures and had contracts with a number of exhibitors to whom $100,000 had been advanced, and which was to be returned to American Releasing out of distribution proceeds. It is alleged the corporation had $4,000 in the bank, and owed $375,000 to exhibitors. The complaint asks a judgment against Walter E. Greene, president; Mark Connell, treasurer; Leo J. Rosett, secretary of American Releasing, on the ground of transferring the property to Selznick they stripped American Releasing of all its property and it became insolvent.

Selznick issued the following statement:

The suit by Licari, as trustee in bankruptcy of American Releasing, to set aside the contract of May 22, 1923 with Selznick Distributing Corp. and to recover damages, is intended to take the regular course of the law suits. Selznick Distributing

Mary Won't Do "Peter"

Piracy Evil Grows

Practice Malignant in Central Europe and Baltic States, Exporters Report

An increase in piracy through Central Europe and the Baltic States is reported by a number of exporters who declare the practice is growing more and more pernicious.

The office of William M. Vogel has a great deal of trouble with "The Kid". It is alleged that the Chaplin picture has been shown in theatres in Constantinople, Athens and in Riga although the picture has not been sold for those territories. At various times, pirated prints have shown up in Roumania, Poland, Turkey, Bulgaria, Greece, Latvia, Esthonia, Lithuania and Russia. Vogel has been diligent in tracing the unauthorized copies to their sources, but has not been able to secure any convictions. This is largely due to the fact that Middle Europe is divided into so many new states, each governed by its own laws.

United Artists have experienced trouble with "Robin Hood", particularly in Poland and, it is understood, Metro has had difficulties with "The Four Horsemen" and "Scaramouche" in some of the countries named above.

The Hays office has been working on the problem for several months. Efforts are being made to co-operate with the State Department at Washington on methods that might tend to lessen the practice. The point made in exporting circles is that the showing of pictures pirated into territories immediately decreases the value, even if the illegal use is stopped by legal means.

Julanne Johnson Going Abroad

Through the Edward Small company, Julanne Johnson has been signed by Paul Ebner and Ernest Wolff, German producers, to appear in a picture to be made in Germany.

"Souls Adrift" for Selznick

Application was made yesterday in the Supreme Court for the appointment of Nat Lewis as guardian for Jackie Coogan, in the suit for damages he is about to bring for the wrongful use of his pictures in advertising. The application was made by his mother, Mrs. Vivian R. Coogan of Los Angeles.

The first suit for $10,000 is brought against Charles E. Weyand & Co., Inc., the concern being charged with having made use of Jackie's picture for advertising without the knowledge or consent or approval of Jackie or his mother. The second action, also for $10,000, is against the Adams-Bach Hankerchief M'fg. Co., Inc., on a similar allegation.

Newspaper Opinions

New York

"Why Men Leave Home"—1st Nat'l Strand

AMERICAN—* * * Alma Bennett again is given a disagreeable role * * * A saving grace * * * is the comedy and Mary Carr as the Grandmother. * * * you will not be bored, but you will not feel that the solution of why men leave home is adequately solved.

DAILY NEWS—* * * The picture is supposed to prove a number of things, among them the fact that matrimonial tiffs should not be taken seriously. (The same applies to the film.) Mr. Stone and Miss Chadwick perform as creditably as they can, in the circumstances. Alma Bennett is a pouty office vampire, a libel on all good private secretaries.

EVENING JOURNAL—* * * the situations provoke a hilarious comedy, the sort to delight a motion-picture audience.

Stone is an excellent actor, with a quizzical acceptance of his part that justifies all his actions; Miss Chadwick and the rest of the cast is well chosen; the story is human, understandingly told and deftly directed.

EVENING WORLD—* * * and expurgated film version of the recent Avery Hopwood stage success and really, in our estimation, makes mighty good screen material.

You won't make the slightest mistake by choosing "Why Men Leave Home" for an afternoon or evening. We wouldn't have missed it for worlds.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * With a few of those titles removed and a few of them rewritten, "Why Men Leave Home" might be another "Marriage Circle." Praise can go no further. And yet we doubt not that those titles are a slight concession to the public.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—Louis B. Mayer has a winner on his hands in "Why Men Leave Home" * * * It is not a lurid movie as the title would suggest, but an amusing, witty photodrama, cleverly contrived in its adaptation * * *

* * * The cast, too, is splendid.

Sick!

From a well known independent exhibitor located in the East: "I have been a pretty sick man for the last 8 months devoting very little time either to my business or anything else, and with the changes that have arisen in this business through individual bookings and the fact that the independents are forced to buy about twice as much film as they can use in order to get a date this thing has been one of the rasping conditions upon my noodle.

"To an independent exhibitor who desires to run theaters and does not control the film or the zone which he is in, the detail work is enormous, and I am up to a point combined with sickness and age, that I can't stand the pressure".

POST—* * * It's pretty true to life—some life—and there's a moral in it that's as much needed today as it is ancient. It might be said in passing that the film version isn't nearly as breezy as was the stage play.

Lewis Stone and Helene Chadwick play the leads and the work is good, though nothing to write home about.

SUN—* * * is an extended comic strip, proving through many somewhat amusing scenes and a collection of surprisingly inane captions * * *

Laying the theory aside, one is apt to find the film very amusing.

TELEGRAM—* * * Without any cost to credulity, Mr. Stahl has produced a picture that rings so true to life that it is uncomfortable. With the assistance of clever actors and actresses, he truly holds a mirror up to his audience and whether or not they like what they see within is up to themselves.

TIMES—* * * a competent piece of film work with which the censor has been rather lenient. It has its sighs and its laughs, its suspense and its satisfaction. It is an entertaining photoplay for adults, a serio-comedy in which allowances must be made for pantomimic license. * * *

ing Corp. is advised by counsel that the suit cannot be successfully maintained.

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * It is an unusually sane and intelligent film story, not sensational, but bright and human. There is a little too much non-essential detail, but that seems to be movie fashion which may not be violated. * * * far superior to the average feature in that it strives for little of the hectic and therefore attains much of the dramatic. * * *

WORLD—* * * those who expect to find shocking disclosures as to why husbands run away from their wives deserve to be told that it falls quite a bit short in details.

It is a slow-moving, rambling, at times, really humorous continuity, * * *

Out-of-Town

"Sporting Youth"—Universal Lyric, Cincinnati

POST—An auto race, chucked with thrills, kept an audience intense with excitement at the Lyric * * *

TIMES-STAR—Its only attempt is to be entertaining, and it succeeds remarkably well.

TRIBUNE—Some of the racing scenes are honestly thrilling. The picture is not without comedy, either.

"Trouble Shooter"—Fox Monroe, Chicago

HERALD & EXAMINER—"The Trouble Shooter" is a picture to be seen, and as far as I can recollect it is the best of the Tom Mix adventures.

"The Unknown Purple"—Truart Gifts, Cincinnati

POST—The settings are elaborate and the story is constructed to please those of a detective disposition.

TIMES-STAR—A clever mystery play which holds the interest of the spectators grippingly from start to finish * * *

TRIBUNE—If you delight in the impossible, if you like to see a mystery picture, then you will want to see the "Unknown Purple," * * *

"When A Man's A Man"—1st Nat'l Garrick, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE (Morning)—A notable cast enact the story in a highly satisfactory manner. * * *

Excellent riding sequences and numerous episodes are interspersed throughout the picture.

REVIEWS

By DANNY

And reviewers. What they are worth to readers of a trade paper. Or are they worth anything? Martin Quigley—straight shooting, hard hitter that he is, comes out flatly in the current issue of The Exhibitors Herald, and says reviews aren't worth tinkers damn—and he intends to throw them into the discard.

Well, Martin; you're going to give the publishers of the other trade papers something to think about. That's true. Meanwhile, we are going to keep on reviewing pictures. Not going to argue the points you make—many of them are excellent. And we're going to keep on doing our best to get them right. It's true that even the highest standard of reviewing efficiency will—at times—err, slip. Infallibility is one thing—honesty, good judgment, sincerity of purpose, another.

But oh, Martin, how your brother trade paper publishers are going to slip!

One of the reasons we intend continuing reviewing pictures is this: once in a while the Coast propagandists start smooching. It percolates East. Yep; it's "the greatest of all great pictures ever made." You know the rest of it. And finally it arrives. And it looks as if it grew on one of those Hollywood lemon trees. We're not going to mention names. But that sort of propaganda must have an offset.

Take a look. See what Paul Lazarus. And the rest of his Imperialists promise. And then do some thinking. We're doing a lot of it. And we're going to think out loud about it in tomorrow's issue. Because it's a mighty big idea, and—well—wait. Meanwhile, if you have any ideas about it; shoot them in.

Sydney Cohen, commenting on some of our ideas expressed to the Independent Producers. Pointed out that some of it was "misinformation" but that happened frequently in the little old paper about the MPTO of A. Yes, it has. That's openly admitted. But there's a reason, Sydney, and you, better than anyone else,

Gov't Aid on Piracy

State Department Asks Foreign Countries to Help When Assistance is Sought

The State Department at Washington, through the efforts of Will H. Hays has promised to assist American exporters in thwarting the illegal practice of pirating which is apparently gaining headway in a number of foreign countries, notably those in Central Europe and the Baltic States.

Assistant Secretary of State Leland Harrison has informed Hays that instructions have been issued to all diplomatic and consular offices throughout the world to co-operate with American film representatives when pirated prints make their appearance.

The assistance of proper authorities in those countries will be sought in an effort to check the evil. The representations will, of course, be made in an informal manner, but the experience of persons familiar with ethics in the consular service indicates that the request will be observed as fully as possible.

Fox Studio Inactive

The Fox Eastern studio will remain inactive, as soon as Elmer Clifton completes editing "Crossed Wires". Just when additional pictures will be placed in work here is in doubt.

Four productions, all of them now completed have kept the plant quite busy. These were "It Is The Law", directed by J. Gordon Edwards; "The Fool", directed by Harry Millarde and "The Warrens of Virginia" and "Crossed Wires" which Elmer Clifton directed.

It was declared by an individual close to the Fox organization yesterday

Attack Distributors

Northwest Exhibitors Aroused Over Alleged High Rentals and Dealings With Churches

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Minneapolis—The M. P. T. O. convention at the West Hotel opened with a bitter attack by members on alleged excessive film rentals and unfair practices indulged in by First National in Minnesota and the Dakotas.

Threats of drastic action were made by exhibitors if First National did not cease to lease pictures to churches and non-theatrical organizations, which exhibitors declared, cut seriously into their business.

A special meeting of franchise holders and open market buyers was called to which First National executives have been invited to hear and defend the charges made by Northwest showmen. Efforts will also be made, it stated, to compel other exchanges to cease renting films to non-theatrical buyers.

In this connection a report was circulated, which stirred up much ire, that "The Covered Wagon" was being leased to fair associations for summer showings. A special committee was appointed to investigate the matter and take action.

Concluding the first session the Northwest M. P. T. O. went unanimously on record as favoring affiliation with the Allied States Assn., of which Al Steffes is chairman. It is thought that Al Steffes is practically certain of re-election as president of the Minnesota M. P. T. O.

E. A. Eschmann, sales manager for First National declared yesterday that in all dealings his salesmen were instructed to deal with exhibitors first. He explained that regular picture theatres were always given first consideration and that only where an exhibitor refused to book a picture at a given point, were negotiations entered upon with churches or non-theatrical exhibitors.

No More Reviews

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Chicago—In an editorial issued in the current issue of "The Exhibitors Herald," Martin J. Quigley announces his intention to run no more reviews of motion pictures in that publication. This, undeniably, is the important editorial announcement which he had in mind in a recent advertisement. The editorial goes into length as to the reasons for this move, saying in part:

"The Herald will no longer make the absurd pretense of reviewing motion pictures from an entertainment

Imperial Enters Field

Lazarus, Berman, R. A. Walsh and Others to Sell Pictures Direct to Exhibitors

The formation of Imperial Pictures Corp. was announced yesterday to sell pictures direct to exhibitors through the creation of approximately one hundred theatre centers throughout the country. The personnel of the organization, follows:

Paul N. Lazarus heads the company as president; Raoul A. Walsh is director-in-chief; A. C. Berman, first vice-president; Eugene H. Roth, second vice-president; Arthur S. Friend, secretary and general counsel; Kenneth Hodgkinson, treasurer and general manager; Cresson E. Smith, general sales manager; George W. Stout, general manager of productions, and Charles H. Hickman, assistant production manager. These executives make up the Board of Directors. Lazarus, Berman, Hodgkinson and Smith were associated for some time in United Artists.

In explaining the plan, Imperial said: That instead of dealing with exhibitors through a distributor and through a chain of exchanges, Imperial will deal direct with the exhibitor, selecting approximately one hundred theatre-centers as its points of contact.

Each of the centers is surrounded by a territory in which hundreds of theatres operate. These theatres naturally follow the lead of the first runs of the theatre-center. All territories have been so arranged, geographically, that they are of equal theatre population; that is to say, each of the hundred centers is surrounded by a territory practically equal in theatre going population to every other territory.

Oppose Filming Barred Books

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Milwaukee—At a special meeting of the Board of Directors of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin, a resolution was unanimously adopted requesting producers to refrain from producing any and all pictures, whose story or scenario may be based on books barred from circulation by public libraries.

Newman Leaves for Northwest

M. H. ("Mike") Newman, supervisor of Universal theatres in Portland, Seattle, San Francisco, Salt Lake and Los Angeles left for Portland yesterday with stopovers planned in St. Louis and Kansas City where the company maintains houses. He said conditions in the Northwest were satisfactory, just that.

Instead of selling only one run, Imperial will sell to its exhibitor-purchasers the entire exhibition rights for their territory for a period of years. The picture will in turn be rented, by the exhibitors themselves, to other exhibitors throughout the territory. Imperial will not participate, in any manner whatsoever, beyond the original flat-price purchase of the exhibition rights.

In this connection, Imperial said: "It will be seen at once that under this plan of selling, the heavy toll now paid by exhibitors for distribution disappears. There is no frightful waste for selling cost to be covered. A picture costing $150,000 to produce does not have to be sold to exhibitors on an exhibition value of $500,000 in order that the producer and distributor may make a profit, regardless of what happens to the exhibitor.

"Because of the equality of the territories in theatre population, the price for each picture has been nationally standardized.

"The production cost has been fixed in advance for the pictures. If the cost of any picture exceeds the fixed production cost, the selling price to the exhibitor will not be changed. Imperial will bear the extra production cost, and not the exhibitors.

"If, however, the actual production cost of any picture is less than the fixed production cost, the territorial purchasers will each be rebated their pro rata share of the saving, and all users of the production will naturally save accordingly.

"Twelve productions, of uniform price, to be delivered one a month, are provided for in our first contract.

"We shall not ask exhibitors to buy stock in our company.

"We shall not ask exhibitors to pay us any advance deposits."

The fact that R. A. Walsh becomes director-in-chief may mean that he will supply several of the twelve pictures promised in the first contract. Roth is to make his headquarters in Los Angeles where he will work on production. Local offices have been opened at 522 Fifth Ave. and a coast branch in the Stock Exchange Bldg. in Los Angeles.

standpoint for the business guidance of exhibitors because—IT CANNOT BE DONE."

In an effort to secure the reaction of trade paper publishers and editors to this drastic move they were asked for a statement. Neither Wm. A. Johnston, publisher, nor J. S. Dickerson, the managing editor of the Motion Pictures News, were available, both being out of the city. There was no one else authorized to speak for publication.

George Blaisdell, editor of The Exhibitors Trade Review said:

"No one denies a review is a one-man opinion, but some opinions are more highly considered by some men than are others. An exhibitor follows a reviewer from week to week, and he soon learns whether that reviewer's mind travels along lines similar to his own or otherwise.

"The man away from the key centers wants news about a picture—he can't get into town to see it himself—and he must lean on somebody.

"I think Mr. Quigley is making a very interesting experiment, for it is an experiment. My observation over a dozen years leads me to believe he is making a false step—but time will tell.

"I believe a well conducted review department is perhaps one of the two most important sections in a motion picture trade paper. If it isn't, and if Mr. Quigley can demonstrate that it isn't, he will have performed a service."

Robert E. Welsh, editor of the M. P. World, said that inasmuch as he had not seen the editorial he did not care to comment upon its contents until he had time to digest it.

Speaking in general terms on the subject of what should or should not be done in a trade publication he declared:

"I do not feel called upon to enter into an argument on a subject merely because Martin Quigley has spent many years trying to handle it and finally admits that from his viewpoint IT CANNOT BE DONE."

Suit for $18,500 is also based on a note of Sig Schlager. The second suit is for $16,500. The answer alleges that the Amsterdam Corp. failed to lend the amount agreed upon the Luxor Pictures Corp. and for this reason, it became impossible for Luxor to complete the pictures in question, and they became worthless.

The Morning Telegraph says:

"'The Fighting American' is sprightly comedy and contains a real airplane thrill."

The N. Y. Herald Tribune says:

"When Carl Laemmle offered $1,000 for the best scenario submitted by a college student, and then chose 'The Fighting American', he chose both wisely and well. It is one of the best travesties on time-worn cinema situations that we have seen in some time, and we enjoyed every minute of it. Whoever wrote 'The Fighting American' deserves a medal all by himself."—Harriette Underhill.

The N. Y. Times says:

"One might set it down as pleasant nonsense."

The Daily News says:

"'The Fighting American' is quite mad, it is amusing. Besides, any picture with Mary Astor is worth looking at."

Newspaper Opinions

"Triumph"—F. P.-L.

Fenway, Boston

TRANSCRIPT—Rather, it falls in the category, the commonplace; in that great limbo of photo-dramas which are seen only to be forgotten.

Madison, Detroit

FREE PRESS—People who never read the story will like it much better than those who have read it.

Lovers of an interesting story capably acted and presented with the usual DeMille lavishness will find much to admire and enthuse over.

NEWS—"Triumph" contains an interesting plot, and is faultlessly produced and acted, but if events of the kind described ever happened in real life the whole world would go mad.

TIMES—Little remains of the original manuscript except the title.

However the splendid cast of Paramount stars have responded with excellent results to the De Mille megaphone.

Grauman's Million Dollar, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 3)

HERALD—"Triumph" is De Mille at his best.

Strand, Omaha

NEWS—DeMille missed an opportunity. It's elaborate, typically DeMillian, without being overdone in that direction.

WORLD-HERALD—We like the way this interesting story is adapted, the way it is acted and the way it is directed.

"Under The Red Robe"—Gold-Cosmop.

Park & Mall, Cleveland

NEWS—If the pomp and glory of the kings impresses you; if you get a kick out of duels and have a mania for intrigue, then "Under the Red Robe" is your dish.

PLAIN DEALER—All the king's horses; all the flash of the ladies' silks and all the lavish outlay of money represented in its making, do not make "Under The Red Robe" go. It has everything but life and vitality.

"The Woman On The Jury"—1st Nat'l

The Chicago, Chicago

POST—It is probable that few who see the picture will bother to analyze its curious logic, or lack of it. They will be content to enjoy the emotional thrills, to laugh at its comedy and to enjoy its acting, which is very good of its kind.

TRIBUNE—Sylvia Breamer, in the leading role, would be my idea of why the picture should not be shown.

She gives a lifeless, uninteresting portrayal.

The director could have got a lot more out of it than he did, it seems to me. Certainly he had an able cast—with the exception named.

Circle, Indianapolis

STAR—"The Woman on the Jury," which opened at the Circle yesterday, is a stern, unflinching drama of life as it is lived in a sealed jury room.

Wisconsin, Milwaukee

JOURNAL—It is on the whole a tensely dramatic production that will keep you interested from start to finish.

NEWS—Added to an interesting story, cleverly directed, is a splendid cast including Sylvia Breamer, Bessie Love, Mary Carr, Frank Mayo, Hobart Bosworth, Lew Cody.

Rialto, Omaha

NEWS—stage story translated to the screen. It loses in conversion, although the cleverest hits are subtitled. It gains in pantomime and vision.

WORLD-HERALD—An interesting bit of life, realistically presented, tensely dramatic and well directed.

"Women Who Give"—Metro State, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE (Morning)—It reveals constantly increasing suspense, culminating for pictorial effect, in tremendous scenes of a storm at sea and a rescue by life boats.

TRIBUNE (Evening)—Same.

Loew's, Montreal

STAR—The deep-sea fisherman is reproduced with a fidelity bound to evoke admiration from those who know the type. In fact, the characterization is stronger than the story.

Regent, Rochester

DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE—gorgeous vistas of sailing ships upon the briny deep.

Despite two thousand excessive feet of film fine photography and a good cast manage to keep the spectators' interest throughout.

HERALD—The writer does not wish to imply that this is in any way a "rip snortin'" intense picture. It is not. But it does wax rather emotional in parts and these little touches of laughter help considerable. One must also mention the excellency of the photography. Some of the storm scenes, at sea, are remarkable.

JOURNAL—an entertaining and enlightening story. The sea scenes are probably the best things in the picture. The effects are oftentimes really stirring. The storms are numerous, occurring each time the action of the drama reaches a high pitch.

TIMES-UNION—Well cast, well directed and well staged, will bring you extreme delight if you are one of those many whose blood runs quicker at the sight of heavily rolling waves and dashing foam and spray.

day that cessation of activity in the East presages nothing unusual. He pointed out that when the local plant was built, it was not part of William Fox's plans to make a large number of pictures in the East. Most production was scheduled and is now planned for the Coast plant where a large number of units are busy. Every year, there occurs a period of inactivity at the Eastern plant and whether it will be of any longer duration this year than before, is a matter yet to be determined.

It is interesting to note that, because of the fact so much independent production is planned in and around New York during the next few months, those employees who would have been without jobs ordinarily as a result of the shut-down will be ab-

Fight Competition

Minnesota Exhibitors Determined to Oppose Churches—Steffes Again Elected

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
 Minneapolis—The chief topic of discussion at the two day session of the P. T. O. of Minnesota was the question facing Northwest exhibitors the form of competition from churches and non-theatrical exhibitioners are in the making for a co-operative scheme with exchanges to break the practice as far as possible. Exhibitors consider such competition direct and serious menace to their investments.

A special committee of ten headed by Al Steffes took up the question of "Over the Wagon" booking to fair associations in the territory and extended a promise from the Paramount exchange manager, Jack Raver that the company will not book this or any other pictures outside of regular picture theatres without the express permission of the exhibitors elected.

A resolution was passed requesting J. O. Lukan, First National manager to inform his own office that exhibitors considered rentals demanded by company exorbitant and that reductions were desired.

Al Steffes was elected president of the unit for the seventh time. Theodore Hays was elected vice-president; Ed Hitchcock is the secretary and Harry Green, treasurer.

Abroad on Indefinite Stay

Myron Selznick who went abroad to supervise the production of "The Passionate Adventurer," will in all likelihood remain in England for some time, in charge of production of the Graham Cutts company. The pictures will probably be released through Selznick.

One Lubitsch for Paramount

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
 Los Angeles—The picture that Ernst Lubitsch will make for Paramount will be "Forbidden Paradise," with Pola Negri starring. The arrangement was made with Warner Bros. and covers only one production.

Fox Convention in June

The annual Fox sales convention will be held in June, the dates as yet not set. A number of the foreign managers will be in town for the sessions which usually run a week.

Brulatour, a Bank Director

Jules E. Brulatour has been elected a director of the Chelsea Exchange Bank.

Beier Resigns

Nat Beier has resigned as manager of the W-B Exchange, effective May 31.

"Lab" Men Meet

Members of the Allied Laboratories, Assn, Inc. held a meeting Friday night to discuss the recent Federal Trade Commission ruling against that body and Eastman Kodak. The laboratories will file a notice of assent.

Burr Plans 3 Hines' Features

C. C. Burr intends producing four features for 1923-1924 and of that number, three will star Johnny Hines. One will be "The Speed Spook." The fourth picture will be "The Shame Dance," by Wilbur Daniel Steele.

"Ten Commandments" in Detroit

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
 Detroit—"The Ten Commandments" is booked for an eight weeks' run at the Detroit O. H., starting in September.

Virginia Exhibitors to Meet

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
 Richmond, Va.—The M. P. T. O. of Virginia will hold a meeting at the Arlington Hotel, May 20-21.

Thompson, Schnitzer to Coast

Major H. C. S. Thompson and Joe Schnitzer leave for the F. B. O. studios in Hollywood in a few days.

Another Hugo Story

Universal Big Fall Picture to be "The Man Who Laughed," Starring Lon Chaney

Although no announcement has been made by Universal concerning the nature of its big picture for next season, aside from the fact that Lon Chaney will be starred, it is understood that the story is another Victor Hugo novel, "The Man Who Laughed."

Universal intends spending approximately $1,000,000 on the picture. The large exteriors will be built near San Francisco, according to present plans, and the picture will go into work in the summer. The Hugo novel is a powerful one. The picture is sure to be one of contrasts. The novel offers ample opportunity to show the dissolute life of the nobles and the debaucheries of the court at Versailles, on the one hand and the wretched conditions of the common people, on the other. Chaney's characterization will, in all likelihood, be an extremely interesting one. In the book, the man who laughed earned that cognomen because his face always bore that appearance, as a result of scars inflicted upon him by French justice for a criminal act. The novel is highly dramatic and offers ample opportunity for spectacular effects in mob scenes and sets. At the same time, the tale is heavy, replete with many horrible incidents.

Estelle Taylor, Meighan Lead

Estelle Taylor will play opposite Tom Meighan in "The Alaskan". Miss Taylor was originally cast for the lead in "Feet of Clay", the next Cecil DeMille picture, but she was thought to be ideally suited for the Meighan film, and so the change was decided upon. She will, however, return to the DeMille unit later, to be featured in "The Golden Bed" and others that DeMille will make.

"Passion Play" Here

Picture Made by Buchowetzki in 1922 to Be Road-Showed—Freiburg Players in It

A film version of "The Passion Play" is in this country, controlled by Passion Play Prod., Inc., of 130 W. 46th St. W. A. Schwartz declares the picture will be road-showed in a number of important cities, beginning June 15.

Immediate plans include New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Detroit, New Orleans and Dallas. It is understood that later on Doing a message carrying act. To the small exhibitors. In the sticks. Regarding which Eddie says:

There is too much attention paid to the big key city exhibitor and too little to the small town exhibitor who is in the majority and who needs more assistance than the man in the key city because he has an efficient Advertising and Publicity Department.

There is only one way to find out the needs of these little fellows and that is by actually going into the territory and discussing their problems with them. No man holding a job in the New York office can be successful unless he knows territorial conditions and the only way to find out is to get out into the field and meet the little fellow.

At the Independent Producers luncheon. A few days ago. Sydney Cohen demanded more co-operation and putting the picture over stuff. From distributors. To the exhibitors, other than

Show Film of 1890 Origin

The Berlin manager of the Fox organization happened upon a short strip of film which he sent on to New York. The picture which is now here is said to be the first motion picture ever made, according to Fox, dates back to 1890 and shows scenes of Prince Bismarck. The inventor is claimed to be Max Skladanowsky who is said to have perfected the first projection machine in 1888.

Employment Better

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Washington—The falling off of employment in the New England textile mills in April has been more than offset by the increase of activity in many industries in the current month, according to a report published by the Dept. of Labor.

Increase in employment has been reported in the following industries; steel, road construction, building trades, automobile manufacturing, automobile repair, radio, silk manufacturing, collar industry, linotyping, hardware and metal work. A slight surplus of labor exists in wholesale establishments and clerical occupations.

The Goldwyn answer denies that Maeterlinck ever delivered any scripts as he claimed he had. The company also says it paid him $6,300 in royalties.

It is said the Freiburg Passion Play antedates the Oberammergau players by three hundred years.

Small Towns

the first run men. Well, Sydney, you're right. But take the tip. Get Eddie Bonns up to Boston. Let him tell some of his experiences. Let him tell some of the things he managed to help out on. Yes; in a way it's a sort of an advertisement for Metro-Goldwyn, but what of it?

THE IMPERIAL PLAN

Interesting. Very. Whether Paul Lazarus and his associates can get this over remains, of course, to be seen. They should. There will be a lot of criticism of the idea—there must be. Some of it will be sound. Much faulty because of lack of knowledge of the facts. But this is surely so: any plan whereby the cost of pictures can be reduced to the exhibitor must have attention. The Imperial plan calls for this—at least so the promoters of the idea say. It remains for the testing out in fact. Then all of us will know a lot more.

Don't overlook this: that the idea of having a given number of pictures go to a group of exhibitors was the basic idea on which First National was planned. Back in the old days by "Manny" Mandelbaum of Cleveland. The material difference of the Imperial idea and the old FN idea is that there is no franchise problem involved.

FIRST RUN OPERATOR A JOBBER

Paul Lazarus likens the first run operator in a given community to being a jobber—in that unless he puts the picture over in his neighborhood it is hard sledding to get it by. That's a well known and admitted fact despite that some pictures have made good even when denied a first run showing. So if Mr. First Run Exhibitor takes to the Imperial idea he becomes a jobber in fact. Don't forget that several years ago the Warner policy was almost along this line. They sold the first runs, put the pictures over, and then disposed of the remainder of the territory to some state right operator. This will be the idea of Imperial. After the first run buys the right to the 12 pictures Imperial doesn't care what he does with the product. He can show them in his own houses, rent them elsewhere, or do what he pleases. Imperial will have their money in, the exhibitor the print; the transaction will be closed.

If pictures can be merchandised on this plan there is no reason why Imperial—or someone else—cannot release more than 12 pictures a year. The question is can it be done?

But after all the plan is but a plan. The big thing to be evolved therefore is not alone the idea; but the result. And the result of any plan in this business is pictures. And only pictures. Let Imperial make 12 good pictures and the weaknesses of the idea—if there are any—will quickly be readjusted.

But without good pictures, box office attractions, no plan is worth a darn. The most inspiring phase of the Imperial idea is that something new is promised for next season—and another producer is in sight. That's always encouraging—especially in these days of closing—in and concentration.

THE 100 ZONE IDEA

Why hasn't someone thought of it before? Why must the distribution idea of pictures remain where it was when Zukor started? There is much more possible in the 100 zone idea as to distribution than in the old state rights lines. It takes little figuring to see this. All of you figurators planning how to get Bill Johnson's thousand smacks for the best distribution idea might well think this over. No copy right on the thought, either.

THE HAREM OF HADDON HALL

When the rain came pouring down. Early in the week. They covered up the plaster bust of Mary Pickford. At the Criterion. And one of the near wits said: "Ah I see they have the harem of Haddon Hall; all veiled and everything."

"THE AGE OF INNOCENCE"

By EDITH WHARTON

Book publishers are born gamblers. Life to them, commercially speaking, is just one hazzard after another. They review an author's work, like it, publish the book and—wait for returns. If the first issues "catch on" with the public, its success is assured. If not, its doom is equally certain.

Publishers long have competed for the works of Edith Wharton. Miss Wharton has a knack for writing "best sellers." She not only knows life in its many aspects, but she knows her fiction-reading public and its demands. As a result her novels always are among the most widely circulated books of the day.

In 1920 Miss Wharton's "THE AGE OF INNOCENCE" was awarded the Columbia University Prize as the best novel of the year depicting American life. Hundreds of thousands of copies of the book were sold and even today it is among the best sellers on the stands.

Great though it is as a novel, "THE AGE OF INNOCENCE" is even greater as a motion picture story. It has drama, romance and adventure and behind it all the gay glamor of New York's social life.

Ideally cast and faultlessly produced, this production easily takes its place among the best of Warner Bros. TWENTY "Screen Classics" for the year 1924-1925. Its title has tremendous box-office value; its exploitation possibilities are unlimited. You'll want to show this attraction and your patrons will want to see it.

A Statement To The Motion Picture Industry

By—Arthur N. Smallwood

Certain interests in the motion picture industry are seeking to discredit the Producers Distributing Guild and the P. D. G. plan of distributing motion pictures by making personal attacks upon me, my record and my integrity.

The P. D. G. Plan of distribution offers far-reaching benefits to the exhibitor and the independent producer which must be admitted by anyone who has made a careful study of the situation. It is the biggest step forward ever taken in the motion picture industry to insure independent exhibitors and producers against EVENTUAL MONOPOLY by interests which are slowly but surely strangling independent producers and exhibitors to death.

There is nothing in my personal record of which I am ashamed and I can look any man in the eye and tell him where to go. I have been more or less associated with the motion picture industry since 1909 and no man can point to a dishonest act on my part, in or outside of the motion picture industry, since or before that time.

I can offer sworn testimony by competent witnesses to prove that my dealings with my fellow-men have always been actuated by the highest motives and ideals. I am in the motion picture industry to stay and I am going to win and succeed in this business.

As a Whole... MORE HUSBANDS AND WIVES AND THEIR TROUBLES. NICELY MADE PICTURE AND MAY AMUSE BUT STORY IS PRETTY FAR-FETCHED.

Star... Pleasing as always but hardly the right type for role of woman who borrows other women's husbands. Does her work nicely at all times and sure to please.

Cast..... Robert Gordon not suitable as Miss Vidor's husband although he, too, handles the part capably. Others Rockliffe Fellowes, Violet Palmer, W. J. Irving, Alpheus Lincoln, Earle Williams, Charlotte Merriam.

Type of Story... Comedy-drama. Nancy Burrard refuses to accompany her husband to South America, and, while apparently very much in love with him, decides to amuse herself in his absence by borrowing the husbands of her friends. She meets a major who believes she is a widow and after paying her a great deal of attention, proposes. Without telling him the truth, she refuses him. Later on she receives a more violent proposal from a friend's husband, a famous surgeon, with whom she has flirted merely to have the opportunity of turning him down and taking away some of his conceit. Several other milder affairs occur and finally Nancy becomes the innocent victim of another husband who pays her attention just to make his wife jealous. It is at this point that Nancy's husband returns but he's easily convinced that Nancy's escapades were quite harmless and Nancy herself is cured of borrowing husbands. The average audience will probably find the adventures of Nancy quite original and amusing. Florence Vidor's striking personality does a lot to help a fairly weak plot over the dull spots and a good production is another compensating feature. If not taken too seriously the theme is sufficiently interesting to hold most audiences.

Box Office Angle..... Count on star and her ability to hold an audience if you figure on showing this one. The story may amuse if they don't pick it apart for absurdities.

Exploitation..... You'll probably find that this title will bring many in. It suggests the marital tangle that always appeals to a certain majority, women in particular. You might make a special appeal to them and use catchlines saying: "Mrs. Housewife, are you the borrowing kind? If you are there's a new angle on this pastime. See it for yourself in 'Borrowed Husbands', Vitagraph's latest release, starring Florence Vidor."

"The Danger Line"

Film Booking Offices

As a Whole... JAPANESE STARS COME BACK IN THRILLING DRAMA OF EUROPE AND THE ORIENT. LIKELY TO REGAIN THEIR POPULARITY AND A STRONG FOLLOWING.

Stars... Have splendid roles and do fine work. Tsuru Aoki bound to interest women especially, since she appears both in modern clothes and native attire. She's pretty in both. Hayakawa does some heavy dramatic playing in the war sequence that brings him back in his own forte.

Cast..... Suitable.

Type of Story..... Drama. It is several years since the Japanese star, Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuru Aoki, have been seen in films in this country. They have been making pictures abroad, of which "The Danger Line", made in France, is the first to be shown here. The fact that it is a European production should not influence American audiences against accepting the star's return since the picture is in every way up to modern standards and presents Hayakawa and his wife in an interesting story, well handled and artistically produced. The theme contains splendid dramatic action, a thrilling climax, showing the Japanese Navy at war, and has been given a thoroughly attractive setting. The photography is excellent and there are many very beautiful shots. The theme deals with the love of a Japanese wife for her husband, a loyal Naval Lieutenant. An American woman, in the absence of the Lieutenant, amuses herself by teaching his wife European manner of dress and custom. The husband is pleased with his wife's adaptation of European dress but worried because he believes she is in love with a British officer. The latter accompanies the Lieutenant for observation purposes, when the former's ship goes off to war. During a skirmish the Japanese is wounded and the Englishman takes his place, and is killed. The Lieutenant returns to his wife satisfied that she is loyal.

Box Office Angle.... Good dramatic offering and should bring in the many former admirers of the Japanese players.

Exploitation.... Play up the names of Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuru Aoki. Tell them this is the first of a series of new productions which they have made. Use a trailer showing Madame Aoki in modern clothes and bits containing some of the more picturesque settings contained in the picture. Tell them it is good to look at and that the stars do very good work. The admirers of Hayakawa will be well pleased with his performance.

As a Whole DOMESTIC RELATIONS PLOT THAT OFFERS RATHER ENTERTAINING PICTURE WITH GOOD CAST AND CERTAIN AMOUNT OF AUDIENCE APPEAL THAT SHOULD MAKE IT POPULAR.

Star.... Good in the part. Has role that is surely going to give the "conservatives" in your audience a bit of a shock but they'll get over it if they wait for the ending. Gives a good performance and should please.

Cast.... Norman Kerry suitable as the other party to a part-time marriage. Cast adequate.

Type of Story... When Fannie Hurst, the novelist, married in 1920 she gave out a statement expressing her philosophy regarding married life and offered as her idea of a perfect working agreement between husband and wife, the theory of part-time marriage. Miss Hurst believes, or did at that writing (she hasn't committed herself in print lately), that to sit opposite the same man at the breakfast table for seven mornings a week is likely to prove irksome after a time so she and her husband worked out a plan whereby they were to breakfast together only on certain mornings and each maintain separate apartments and retain their own friends and, incidentally, their individualities. And Dorothy Farnum has worked out the idea in "Daring Youth" only to prove that it won't work. Alita, the bride, instead of enjoying the liberties which her self-imposed freedom affords, is angered because her husband doesn't become jealous and insist upon the conventional married life. The plot is bound to seem absurd to a conventional minded audience but they'll feel compensated by the ending which proves Miss Hurst's dope is all wrong.

Box Office Angle.... Here's a picture that should start a great deal of controversy. Miss Hurst's article did when first printed. Revive it and get their attention.

Exploitation.... Post the town with large ad sheets reading: "Do you believe in part-time marriage? Can a man or woman marry and be happy while retaining the liberties that was theirs prior to the marriage ceremony? See the problem worked out in 'Daring Youth' with Bebe Daniels and Norman Kerry." Show a trailer well in advance and put the above query to the end of it. Promise the home pest argument agitator some food for discussion. The plot offers plenty.

As a Whole..... FINE OPPORTUNITY IN CLOSING REEL BUT BETTER EDITING NECESSARY TO WHIP THIS TO SHAPE.

Cast... Hardly anyone with knox-box-office value in this. Depends entirely upon pictorial appeal.

Type of Story.... They had a good chance in making this first Alaska production. Someone missed, probably the director. The story deals with the adventures of the gold-seeking mob and the frenzied climb over Chilkoot Pass into the mountain section of this barren region. A woman is separated from her husband following a shipwreck. The child is taken care of by two miners in the end marries the younger. Meanwhile, the mother, trapped to an unhappy position by a gambler, is reunited at the end with daughter, when the villain is killed.

The closing reel showing the tragic death of the villain as he is thrown over the edge of a craggy ice field is sublimely realistic. The last reel gives a great opportunity for putting this picture over. The story needs a lot of editing to whip it into much better shape. Make it first-class in audience appeal.

It is to be regretted that the producer or director failed in developing the opportunity. This might easily have been a very big picture.

Box Office Angle.... Should work out excellently for hot weather business but a discerning crowd will want a story put together in much better form.

Exploitation.... Deal with the fact that this is the first all-Alaska picture ever made. Tell how it shows the chase for gold and a trailer showing the tragic end of the villain. This will surely bring them back. It is great audience stuff.

A big talking point is the splendor of the production. The scenes on the glacier and among the long shots are realistic to the last degree. Mention the fact that when the late President Harding was in Alaska, he visited the town making the production. Try to get the Pathe News material showing the trip. This should serve to arouse interest in the picture.

If you are running this during the very hot weather weather probably will come this summer always has—you should be able to do very interesting things in way of lobby displays. This is one of the best snow pictures of the season.

Type of Story...Comedy-drama.

ut equally divided on comedy drama. The first half is ab-bed chiefly in much good cockhumor dealing with escapades Bill, a tipsy, good-natured felwhose luck with the horses vides a livelihood without his king for it. These early reels get story off to a rather slow start, ng devoted to long close-ups, it gains in speed as the develop-nt progresses and the latter half ers interesting, and in the climax, er tense dramatic situations t are thoroughly well done both acting and direction. The clix threatens to brave a tragic ling when the dream ending ils the illusion but probably es the story as far as the genl public is concerned since it n't gotten to the point of appving of unhappy endings. Lily, heroine, leaves a drunken father s keeps him busy most of the ie and Lily threatens to leave

Cast...Dorothy Revier good as the Romany heroine and not without a certain degree of feminine appeal.
Snowy Baker right hero for the job. Role gives him plenty of opportunities to get over his usual line of stunts. He has a duel, several scraps and the ever popular rescue chase in which she saves the girl he loves. Baker is always capable of this sort of part.
Others in the cast: Otto Lederer,
Armando Pasquali, Countess D'
Lanti, Edwin Cecil, Fred Kavens..

Type of Story...Drama. When Ynez, a Romany lass, reaches the marriageable age her father decides that, since his farm lands are not bringing in the returns that they once did, it would be a good idea to display the girl's beauty along the Riviera in hope of enticing a rich husband. Leaving a gypsy suitor at home, Ynez goes off and shortly the father is made a generous offer. Meantime the girl meets an American soldier who saves her life, when she feigns drowning, and who follows her back to Romany as does the rich bidder. The rich man employs a famous swordsman to pick a quarrel with the American in hopes that the latter will be killed in the duel. Instead, the jealous gypsy lover, aiming at the American, kills the rich man and kidnaps Ynez. Hero rides to the rescue with the usual ending—marriage. There is little out of the ordinary in the story but it has an interesting setting, a good cast and a good production to help cover up the weak spots so that probably it will get over without any great difficulties. There is good pictorial appeal and some effective action and thrills along in the latter reels that should appeal to a majority.

Box Office Angle...Good average attraction with enough good points to cover up the weaker ones. Atmosphere of story, cast, and certain good bits of pictorial appeal will please.

Exploitation...You might make it clear, in view of the title, that this isn't a costume picture. They may expect one when they read the title.
Tell them it has to do with an American hero who refused to fight a duel until it was a matter of preserving his honor and winning the girl he loved. If you think they know Snowy Baker you might use his name. Show them a trailer containing bits of the res-

TERTAINMENT FOR AMERI-CAN AUDIENCES.

Cast...Some bits that include rather fair acting but most of it is un-convincing and greatly overacted.
Make-up is very poor and players are never properly photographed.
No especially outstanding performances. Title role played by actor who is almost entirely lacking in force.

Type of Story...Biography. "The Life of Dante," another product of European studios, offers interesting subject matter for a higher class audience, those interested in the classics among which there is Dante's famous "Inferno". For these people the film may prove satisfying if for no other reason than it presents a graphic account of the adventurous life of the great poet, Dante Alighieri, from his early life until his death in 1321. As a matter of general entertainment the picture cannot be classed as suitable for distribution. The average audience will hardly be interested in the life of one whom probably most of them knew nothing about and to whom "Divina Commedia" means no more than the "Inferno".
And it must be the events pictured, rather than the manner in which they are pictured, that will hold an audience. The production, though spectacular and built upon a large scale, is far inferior to several other spectacles coming from Europe.
There are mob scenes to be sure but they are only mildly thrilling.
Poor photography, improper editing and too liberally translated subtitles are other handicaps in this production.

Box Office Angle...Not suitable as entertainment. It is interesting from a historical standpoint and will appeal to certain people who like historical spectacles and will accept the picture for the subject matter contained in it. For educational purposes it should be especially good. The name should mean considerable in bringing in high class patronage.

prominent names. Ruth Dywer badly miscast as Countess Olga and Joe Girard a scheming Russian, Alphonse Martell and Jay Hunt also implicated in the plot to get the countess' fortune. Kenneth McDonald a stunt hero who is likeable.

Type of Story...Comedy-drama.
Given a Russian Countess for the heroine and a Yankee soda clerk for the hero you can readily guess the rest and nothing but what you expect does happen. "After a Million" presents one of those athletic heroes who performs all sorts of stunts and miraculous fetes in order to befriend the little Russian countess who is in dire trouble due to the attempts of certain of her Russian friends to do her out of a fortune by telling her that if she marries an American by a given time, the money will be hers and she can aid the stricken people of her native country. At the same time it happens that if the Yankee hero reaches a certain bank by a certain hour, he too will inherit a fortune. With two fortunes and a wedding ring you couldn't expect anything but the usual happy ending. Minus the absurdities of a hectic plot, and taken from a standpoint of the action afforded, probably "After A Million" will please an average audience. Where they like stunt heroes who perform dizzy fetes such as jumping from railway trestles to auto tonneaus, climbing up the sides of sky-scraper, and the like, it should stand even a better chance. Kenneth Mc-Donald affords plenty of thrills in his series of knock-'em-dead escapades.

Box Office Angle...Fair. Where you know your patrons favor stunt heroes who go through a variety of breath-catching thrills in order to amuse them, the picture should prove thoroughly satisfying.

Exploitation...Not a bad title by any means and might readily serve to bring in the title shopper who is always ready to bite at a title that promises a thrill. Surely there's a thrill in going after a million. Play it up with catchlines:
"What would you do to win a million? Would you go through the perils that the hero in 'After a Million endures? See for yourself."

Short Subjects

"Going to Congress"—Will Rogers—Pathe

Subtle, But Funny

Type of production... 2 reel comedy

As is usually the case with Rogers' comedies, "Going to Congress" is extremely funny in its subtleties. Big town audiences will enjoy it without doubt. Rogers is seen as Alfalfa Doolittle, of a small mid-west town, who has never done much but sit around the stove at the country store and tell all comers his ideas on how the country should be run. He is finally elected to run for Congress. His speeches before the election, his campaigning tour and his final arrival in Washington are truly funny. The film ends with an amusing bit. Arriving in Washington, he is accosted by a pretty young woman who flatteringly tells him that she loves Congressmen and that her grandmother was kissed by one. After Will kisses the young lady, he finds that his watch is gone. Proceeding up the street toward the Capitol, another girl asks him the time. Glaringly he says, "Go ask your grandmother!"

Pathe Review No. 21

Delightful Reel

Type of production... 1 reel magazine

Picturesque views of old trails in New Mexico open this issue of Pathe Review. Next comes a most artistic and interesting study of the making of miniatures in wax. Jumping thence to a hillside in old Japan, the natives are seen making charcoal for sale in the market, while still another jump takes the spectator to Tunis where colored and colorful scenes of the "City of Secrets" are shown.

"The Cat's Meow"—Sennett—Pathe

Here's a Winner

Type of production... 2 reel comedy

Harry Langdon does exceedingly good work in this. He's funnier than ever before. He is seen as the very timid sweetheart of a sweet young thing whose imposing mother is the head of a purity league the purpose of which is to clean up the slums. "The Cat's Meow" is a cabaret and dance hall of most doubtful nature. Langdon and his girl on a slumming party go in to look it over. The comedy ensuing is really funny. Langdon's facial expressions put it over in great shape. The second reel shows Langdon appointed policeman by the purity league to clean up the slums and incidentally "The Cat's Meow." The chase stuff is different and funny. Don't miss this one. Get it sure.

"Delivering the Goods"—Century—Universal

A Clever Dog

Type of production... 2 reel comedy

Pal, the very clever dog, makes this enjoyable. He is in front of the camera most of the time, which is a good thing for the comedy. Spec O'Donnell works well with him as the young clerk in his father's grocery store, which as usual is very much shot to pieces before the final fade-out. The sequence in which Spec and Pal deliver the baskets of groceries to the different customers and the one in which the horse runs away with the wagon and Spec in it, are the best in the film.

"Dizzy Daisy"—Mermaid—Educ'l
Good for Any House

Type of production... 2 reel comedy

There's plenty to recommend the showing of this Mermaid comedy. First, it was produced under the supervision of Jack White, and has a goodly supply of his novel stunts—this time in the form of a motorboat chase wherein one of the boats is cut in half but still keeps on going—then a first-rate cast headed by the always amusing Louise Fazenda and including Lee Moran, Otto Fries, Cliff Bowes, Dick Sutherland, Virginia Vance and others. Louise is seen as the dumb daughter of a fisherman who is so tough he blows the railings of his porch away every time he spits. A jewel robbery, and a trained seal, among other things, help to keep the interest from flagging.

"Lunch Brigade"—Cameo—Educ'l
Has Rapid Action

Type of production... 1 reel comedy

Sid Smith, Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance get mixed up in a cafeteria in this Cameo comedy. The tempo of the action is rapid, with food that is blown, slung or stolen the theme. Contains quite a few laughs. The finish is quite novel—Bowes runs after his rival, Smith, who is perched upon an immense gas balloon that has rolled out of a gym. The balloon rolls up and down hill but finally comes to a stop at a curb where a small fire is burning. In the explosion that follows only the hats of the two men are left. It is a welcome change from the usual battered derelicts which generally emerge from wrecks of this type to greet the audience with bewildered looks.

By DANNY

They change as much in pictures as in clothes. At least Adolph Zukor thinks so. Say—“A play, or a book popular a decade ago, would not fit the present day scheme of things in picture making. They would be much out of fashion as clothes were in style several years ago. People demand that their entertainment shall be as up to date as their clothes. Many of the pictures we have scheduled for the coming season are based upon plays and books which are current successes. It would be useless, futile, to attempt to do otherwise.”

Well, that's true. To an extent, anyway. And yet several days ago I tried to see a picture based upon a melodrama that was produced years ago and was an outstanding success. The picture—“The Fire Patrol”—proved a box office winner is almost certain. Full of me'o-hokum, but sure fire picture material. Understand it is going out on the right market. Also understand one of the most important of the national distributors wanted to release it but Chadwick said “no.” Wanted to see the independents. And boy, some box office. Hats off to Hunt and Berg. Another coming young-

There are a lot of books and plays current today that won't be worth salt a few years from now. But there are a tremendous lot of books and plays written years ago which, made properly, brought up to date in treatment and handling, will pay in out. You can bet the roll on that.

John Iris is stepping out. His “Mid Transit” is a step in the right direction. Just as was his “Main Streets” from all over the world. It is the type of short subject ignored too long, and passed aside by the people. There is a world of interest in such material. The trouble of it is that there isn't more of it. There must be reams of it, reels in the libraries of the older comedians. Why isn't it dug out?

Frederic G. Lee Dead

Prominent Banker and Famous Players Official Succumbs to Long Siege of Ill Health

Frederic G. Lee, chairman of the finance committee of Famous Players and a member of the board of directors died at his home in Bronxville, N. Y., Friday night. Funeral services will be held this morning at eleven o'clock.

Mr. Lee was fifty-one years of age. Those who knew him declared him to be an indefatigable worker. About four years ago, his health began to fail him and it became necessary for him to retire to a sanatorium for a time. He never fully recovered.

Mr. Lee first met Adolph Zukor when connected with the old Broadway Trust Co. at Broadway and Eight St., and it was Lee who advanced Zukor's first loan. Later, Lee became associated with the Irving Trust Co. of which he became president and when the Irving Trust was absorbed by Irving National, Lee eventually became a vice-chairman of the board of directors. His duties were highly important and concerned the advance of credits. In January, 1921, he withdrew from his various financial affiliations to join Famous where he occupied a position of considerable importance until he died.

Mr. Lee was held in great esteem by his associates at Famous Players. Adolph Zukor said on Saturday:

“I feel that the industry has lost a very close friend.”

Dear Danny:

It's too bad the revolution is not over, they seem so hostile to everything American over here. There's a fellow named Tilley who don't know it's over and thinks Cornwallis is still at Saratoga. Well my Mediterranean cruise is at an end and since I left the Sunny shores of France I've gotten thawed out. That's why I couldn't write more letters from Monte Carlo, my fingers were frost bitten. Well London is (Continued on Page 3)

The company has paid 8% regularly on preference stock but no dividends have been paid yet on the common stock.

European Market Improving

England is slowly but surely recovering from the slump of a few months ago, says D. J. Mountain, of Richmond Pictures. British exhibitors, he adds, are looking forward to an excellent summer and by the fall expect business back to normal.

American pictures are becoming popular in Germany, and there is a demand for films of the better grade. Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, the Balkan States and Russia are showing a great improvement, Mountain's statement goes, while within the next six months American distributors may look forward to the best season they have had since the close of the war.

East Becomes Active

New York Studios Busier Now Than for Some Time Past—Many Independents

Observers of the trend in production are of the opinion that activity in and around New York has reached a point without equal for some time past. There seems to be a diversity in opinion on how present production here compares with other years. It is agreed that there is more work under way and planned this spring than at this time last year and in some quarters, it is believed that current production is the heaviest since 1920.

Technicians are in demand. One producer last week was called on to permit his painters and electricians work on another production. Apparently there are enough stage crews to handle the volume of business. The only plant of any proportions that is about to close is the Fox plant, the studio force of which will probably be absorbed by other units.

The Paramount studio in Long Island City is a barometer by which activity in the East is usually gauged. This time last year, there were only two companies at work. Now there are four, headed by Irvin Willat, Alan Crosland, Joseph Henabery and Allan Dwan with R. H. Burnside and Frank Tuttle to start later.

At the Biograph plant, one stage houses the “Born Rich” unit of Eminent Pictures. This will be released by First National. The other stage is being used by Eastern Prod. making “Her Own Free Will,” the first Helene Chadwick picture for Hodkinson. The same studio will be used for “Trouping with Ellen,” an Earl Derr Biggers story for Miss Chadwick.

At the Whitman Bennett studio near Yonkers, Banner Prod. recently formed by S. J. Briskin and George H. Davis is producing its first picture with Hope Hampton and Lowell Sherman in the cast. Burton King is directing; release will be state rights. Whitman Bennett is preparing to start a picture there of his own very shortly.

At Tec-Art on East 48th St., Christy Cabanne is making “The Lawful Cheater” for Murray Garsson and Associated Exhibitors while Ivan Abramson is scheduled to start on a new Barrymore film for Chadwick Pictures next week.

The Metro Studio on East 61st St., houses the Benny Leonard unit, making two reels for Reputable Pictures.

tures made for the coming season. That will be a lot—an awful lot. Let's hope many are good. Otherwise the 200 won't count. At least very much.

The death of Frederic G. Lee will be a loss—a great loss to Famous Players. And especially to Adolph Zukor. Lee gave Zukor his first real start. When he was cashier of the old Broadway Trust. And from then on Lee became much interested in pictures—and Zukor. That the latter was able to tempt him from an important banking position to join Famous is incidental. Lee was probably the first bank official in this country who saw the possibilities of motion pictures—and supported them.

I. the Hurley-Totten company intends making several series of comedies and some five-reelers.

A company known as Paul Whitcomb Prod. intends producing "The Pearl of Orr's Island", by Harriet Beecher Stowe in Boston shortly.

Coast Active

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—The spring production peak is expected to be reached in about a month. Famous Players, Universal and Fox are working full blast, preparing for the first of their fall releases. Pictures to be released during the summer months have practically been completed.

The Goldwyn lot at Culver City will be an extremely busy place in about a month, or just as soon as Louis B. Mayer co-ordinates the Metro, Goldwyn and his own directors and draws up a production schedule.

F. B. O. and the Hollywood studios are housing a lot of independent units that lease space as their needs develop, because of the fact that Goldwyn has refused to handle any more of this class of business.

Stromberg Units Busy

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—The various units in which Hunt Stromberg is interested are busy. Priscilla Dean is about half way through "The Siren of Seville" which Jerome Storm is directing, while Harry Carey has just completed "Tiger Thompson," his third for Hodkinson.

The Corinne Griffith unit is in the third week of "Single Wives". Charles R. Rogers, who is interested with Stromberg expects to leave for the East in June.

Pathe Acquires "Maud Muller"

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—It is understood Pathe will distribute "Maud Muller", produced by Renaud-Hoffman, the unit that made "Not One to Spare".

Charles R. Rogers who placed the latter picture with Hodkinson has made a long term arrangement to handle future Renaud-Hoffman output.

Universal to Feature Gareth Hughes

Gareth Hughes will be featured with William Desmond by Universal in "Desert Love", a western directed by Ernest Laemmle. The picture was originally filmed by Universal about five years ago under the title, "Overland Red", with Harry Carey.

for HODKINSON RELEASE

Newspaper Opinions

"Beau Brummel"—Warners
Strand, Milwaukee

SINEL—For though the picture has a fine and costly background and a well known supporting people, it is more as the Beau, whose name has since become synonymous with the ultra in masculine that is the dominating feature.

"Bluff"—F. P.-L.
New, Baltimore

(Evening)—A not unentertaining picture around a workable idea that should have produced something better than it did.

"Boy of Flanders"—Metro
Strand, Minneapolis

—Jackie is exceedingly vivacious in a picture in which he portrays as a ne'er-do-well in a Dutch village.

BULLETIN (Morning)—As a vagabond, down upon by the inhabitants of the village, Jackie has a role that suits him.

BULLETIN (Evening)—Same as morning edition.

"The Breaking Point"—F. P.-L.
State, Boston

SCRIPT—Mr. Brenon as director, can be held accountable for the way in which the harrowing tale is told, for details which he has borne on his back as to make the improbability of the ending stand forth like a nightmare.

McVicker's, Chicago
ALD & EXAMINER—"The Breaking Point" is persuasive in the same degree that the earlier novel was persuasive; that she piles up so many coincidences and believing powers of an average man are severely strained.

"Midway After Dark"—Warners
State, Minneapolis

BULLETIN (Morning)—The brilliancy of animated signs flashing from out of a dark sky, the endless processions of motes, the lavishly decorated shop windows and the nocturnal revelers are authentic of the "Great White Way."

"A Chapter From Her Life" Clune's Broadway, Los Angeles

(Week ending May 10)
MINER—"A Chapter From Her Life" has a fine flavor of novelty and is a picture that many men, women and children will enjoy to the fullest.

ESS—"A Chapter From Her Life" is a picture—that is, a child runs away from Jane Mercer is the little girl's off-name. Her performance in this photo will endear her to the majority of who see it.

"Partnership of Miles Standish"— Asso. Exhib.
Strand, San Francisco

(Week ending May 10)
LETIN—A praiseworthy effort is the transplantation of Longfellow's epic "The Courtship of Miles Standish."

AND POST—The audience which filled the theatre were in no wise disappointed in the film fare offered them.

MINER—Lots of people who seldom see the movies will undoubtedly be attracted by "The Courtship of Miles Standish" as it is a picture taken right out of the best Colonial history and it merits mention of all who delight in that history.

S—The entire spirit in which "The Courtship of Miles Standish," Charles Ray's recent picture was conceived, is of the highest praise.

"Cytherea"—1st Nat'l
Chicago, Chicago

RICAN—The picture is nicely staged and photographed; with some colored views, dream sequences, of particular interest. Save for the Cytherea angle, this would be a regular triangle picture, no doubt, but a great many.

HERALD AND EXAMINER—There was irony rather than open preachment—and I think I like my "lesson" that way. * * * The story seemed to me strangely honest for the screen.

TRIBUNE—I'm keen for the picture. It's a handful of life. It's a study in contrasts.

Circle, Indianapolis

STAR—Joseph Hergesheimer's story of a romantic fascination, engendered by the mysterious repose of a lifelike doll, has been brought to the screen in the form of an excellently directed adult picture, "Cytherea," which opened at the Circle yesterday.

"Daddies"—Warners
Grand Central, West End Lyric,
Capitol, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—"Daddies" is a story primarily for the grown-ups, but its cast includes the appearance of some exceptionally cute kiddies. The humor is wholesome.

POST-DISPATCH—The comedy possibilities and the excellent juvenile buoyancy of the stage play "Daddies" have been well preserved in the screen version. * * *

STAR—"Daddies" is a sugary concoction of comedy, well done and sustained to a sentimental conclusion. * * *

TIMES—No better film than "Daddies" has been seen in St. Louis this season.

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall"—
United Artists
National, Washington

HERALD—"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" has all the elements needed for delighting an audience. There are thrills, wonderful vistas, magnificent settings, and more important than all else, the charming caprices and moods of the ever-lovely Pickford herself. * * *

POST—"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" is a masterpiece of approval bestowed by applause and exit comments mean anything, then this little queen of the silver screen has achieved the crowning triumph of her career.

STAR—The star's right to this distinction was never more triumphantly demonstrated than by an audience that literally packed the house in defiance of the storm.

TIMES—The hoydenish, effin Pickford is still with us in vengeance but it is a subdued Pickford, reflecting the best direction of her career, surrounded by a cast whose talents sparkle like a Peggy Hopkins brooch.

"Enchanted Cottage"—First Nat'l
Arcadia, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—"Enchanted Cottage" is a Pulitzer prize for great movie acting, Richard Barthelmess, who is the featured player, would have little competition.

INQUIRER—A lovely world of illusion constructed by love from sorrow and unhappiness is visualized on the screen in "The Enchanted Cottage." * * *

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—From beginning to end, the story runs on relentlessly without becoming sordid or mawkishly sentimental. It is a pleasure to note the total absence of hokum. It is simply told and there are no digressions to detract from the interest in the theme.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—All in all, we would say that "The Enchanted Cottage" will be one of the outstanding pictures of the year. * * *

"Excitement"—Universal
Cameo, San Francisco

(Week ending May 10)
BULLETIN—"Excitement" has many big laughs, but the principal appeal is the great number of thrills. There are more stunts in this production than in four or five ordinary pictures.

CALL AND POST—The play is clever in that much of the time the comedy is subtle, which keeps the audience chuckling, while there are other places with big laughs.

CHRONICLE—It is high speed—very high speed—romance, with overtones of farce and undertones of melodrama.

NEWS—The title of the feature picture at the Cameo is a trifling misleading. * * * Laura La Plante has little * * * excitement * * * and the audience get but a little.

"The Galloping Fish"—1st Nat'l
Madison, Detroit

FREE PRESS—"The Galloping Fish" is a picture which swept through the auditorium attest the fact that Mr. Ince has added a laugh-maker to the list of comedy classics that will tickle the resiliencies of millions during the months to come.

NEWS—Mr. Ince's fondness for water stuff again finds an expression in "The Galloping Fish," a sticky sort of a slap-stick comedy. * * *

TIMES—The theater was filled during Sunday's business hours with one sustained shriek of laughter.

"Half a Dollar Bill"—Metro Lyric, Minneapolis

JOURNAL—As drama, "Half a Dollar Bill" is sentimental, episodic to the degree that it resembles a patchwork, and highly improbable, but as a picture of episodes it becomes an intensely amusing moving picture.

STAR—Anna O. Nilsson's latest picture, "Half a Dollar Bill," is interesting offering. * * *

TRIBUNE (Morning)—"Half a Dollar Bill" is a picture that is amusing and dramatic. * * *

TRIBUNE (Evening)—Same as morning edition.

"Hoodman Blind"—Fox
Readers Hippodrome, Cleveland

NEWS—Here is an old and forgotten stage play made into an entertaining motion picture. It is a good old melodrama written in the days when an author who had two ideas didn't save one of them for his next picture.

PLAIN DEALER—"Hoodman Blind" is one of those pictures which interests in the darkness of a theater or projection room—but doesn't bear up under cool analysis out in broad daylight.

"The Humming Bird"—F. P.-L.
New Astor, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE (Morning)—In the role of Toinette, an Apache girl, regenerated by the war, Miss Swanson gives a thoroughly sincere portrayal.

TRIBUNE (Evening)—Same as morning edition.

"Law Forbids"—Universal
California, San Francisco

(Week ending May 10)
BULLETIN—Baby Peggy gives a truly remarkable performance and there are times when the grown-ups in the cast are relegated to the background.

CALL AND POST—"The Law Forbids" is a directly told drama, picturing the alluring cabaret life and the great institution of motherhood with equal fidelity.

CHRONICLE—"The Law Forbids" is one of the best child pictures that has been shown in a long time, for it has credibility and interest, and the child is not pushed forward out of all reason.

EXAMINER—"The Law Forbids," at the California, is a rather forced story of a playwright who separates from his wife and is being vamped by the leading woman in the theatre producing his new play when his 4-year-old child comes to the rescue and leads him home.

NEWS—Baby Peggy in "The Law Forbids," delighted large audiences with her winsome, cherubic gifts at the California yesterday.

"Lilies of the Field"—1st Nat'l Crandall, Washington

HERALD—Interwoven with a narrative of romantic charm in a vein of mother love that lends the play dignity and impressiveness.

POST—The development of the story is punctuated with much humor, * * * but is by no means devoid of tremendous dramatic power in the later climactic scenes wherein Miss Griffith proves herself an emotional actress with an unsuspected command of mimetic expression.

STAR—A strange mixture of mother love and glorified "lilies of the field," denizens of New York's gorgeous, gilded upper set of the underworld. * * *

TIMES—Corinne Griffith, in the role of a devoted mother and a tricked wife, does her best work. * * *

"The White Moth"—Metro
Loew's State, Los Angeles

(Week ending May 10)

EXAMINER—A tale of jangling cross purposes, of embittered marriage, and finally of real love which wakes out of mingled trials and dangers.

EXPRESS—"The White Moth" is pure tinsel. Its characters are highly artificial and their movements and the reasons therefor are scarcely less than implausible. There is beauty, of course, in many of the settings. * * *

HERALD—"The White Moth" is not a thoroughly clean and wholesome entertainment. * * * Barbara La Marr does the finest work of her exceptional career. * * * Credit is due Conway Tearle. * * * To Charles De Roche. * * *

NEWS—"The White Moth" is not a thoroughly clean and wholesome entertainment.

RECORD—"The White Moth" is one of Tournour's best pictures, if not the best.

TIMES—Maurice Tournour seems to me like a bad little boy peeking around a corner and yelling "yah-yah" at a policeman. His picture has such very, very naughty touches in it. * * * It is about as brave and daring and true to life as a tin soldier.

"White Shadows"—Selznick
Garden, Milwaukee

SENTINEL—"White Shadows" is handicapped by a ridiculous story written by none other than the rather well known playwright, Michael Morton.

For fighting Firpo Jack Dempsey received $500,000. The job was completed in three minutes and fifty-seven seconds. At that rate Dempsey earns;

$2,109.70 a second

$126,582.00 a minute

$7,594,920.00 an hour

$60,759,380.00 for an eight hour day

Tex Rickard paid Dempsey the tremendous sum of half a million dollars for one appearance and cleared an enormous profit.

Jack Dempsey, the two-thousand-dollar-a-second box office attraction in Universal's FIGHT AND WIN pictures is ready to earn an enormous profit for you.

If he is worth $126,582 a minute in the ring—what's he worth in your theatre for twenty-four minutes every other week for ten weeks?

Clem's Ocean Trip

a quaint old place where every night after dark the populace play a game called "find the movies". Here's how its played. Eight people gather at a given point and then each one starts out to find a moving picture theatre. The first one that locates one, is the guest of the last one to find one. Today I met some fellows who have been playing it for nine nights now and no one has won yet. But these English are a tenacious lot and they are going out tonight again. Once the game is started it has got to be played till there is a winner. The government here decided that summer would start on March 23, but I guess they didn't take heaven into their confidence for it hasn't started yet and I sail for good old Pneumonia next Saturday and it looks like I'll have to go all the way to Alaska to find spring breezes.

I met Ernest Fredman here; he's editor of a film catalogue like yours only with more pages and which takes up so much of his time putting it together he ain't got time to play golf and go to Bermuda like you, then again he says he don't have to go to Bermuda as they sell it everywhere here. But he's a fine fellow and I wouldn't be surprised if he was an American somewhere inside.

He gave me a luncheon at the Trocadero cafe yesterday and I met a swell bunch of Englishmen. There was Colonel Bromhead and Jeffrey Bernerd and the two Wilcox boys from Wardour Street (that's pronounced Water St.) and Reggie Ford and John Graham and Percy Phillipson of First National and Ralph Pugh, in fact it was a luncheon of the all men in Great Britain who was too smart to try to make pictures over here, but who were also smart enough to run rental offices.

Then Hope Hampton and her new hubby (now slightly used) got here and gave us a farewell party and I made a speech about everything in general and nothing important and Arthur Clavering and Ben Hicks and any number of swell guys and women came and then Lady Beresford White whose husband owns a new color process, was there. Well we had what is called a "good time by everybody".

Freddie Martin of Famous Players is the real live publicity man over here. He is very modest which will keep him from being a good man in America and it took John Graham to tell me how Freddie worked up the idea of bringing Indians over to the opening of the Covered Wagon. He's a smart press man OK, only he makes a terrible mistake calling his stuff letter press.

I find business good in all the theatres which don't play Foreign productions. The others, of which there are none open now, are not doing so good.

I was going to write an analysis of the English film market but its too much work mailing you a letter with only one line of writing so will say good bye.

Best ever to the trade over there.
Yours, CLEM.

Europe, Bad Offender

Piracy Most Prevalent There—Chipman Tells of Some Interesting Experiences

The piracy evil has played some peculiar tricks with pictures controlled in foreign fields by Chipman, Ltd., which controls the Metro Pictures for some of the European countries. Roy Chandler of that organization recently returned from Europe and in speaking of his experiences over there said release of "The Four Horsemen" in the Balkans was held up because of the present prevalence of piracy.

"We have had no reports," Chandler said, "of this trouble from either our South American or Australian offices but in Europe they think nothing of making dupes of anything they want. Italians are continually showing pictures in Jugo-Slavia and Greece for which they have no rights. Our Constantinople office reports that the exhibitor dares to pay only a slight increase over the price of the print, and if a picture is successful several other prints immediately appear in the territory and kill his business. This was the case when I was in Turkey two years ago investigating the situation personally, and evidently conditions have not improved.

"We have not released the 'Four Horsemen' in the Balkan territories for the present owing to this danger.

"Spain and Portugal also think nothing of pirating pictures. Recently the 'Prisoner of Zenda' was being shown in the principal theatres of Lisbon and when I took the matter up with the owner of the clandestine print together with our Spanish agent and the Metro Paris office, he merely laughed and the picture continues to be shown throughout Portugal in spite of legal efforts to stop it."

PICTURES

By DANNY

There will only be as many good pictures. As there is good material. Never one more. Big spectacles may come—yes. Fine production will lift mediocre material—yes. But in the final analysis if you haven't the story you are going to be in trouble. Or money making pictures. That goes all the way across the board.

That's why Carl Laemmle's announcement. As to the Universal reform registers. At least with ours sincerely. Laemmle says he doesn't know how many "great" pictures Universal will make. The "lemons" *** will be shelved." And while Laemmle doesn't say the material is the important point we do.

Another producer—one of the cleverest of the business—whose record last season was outstanding: Dick Rowland. And Rowland says this: "We are digging all the time for material. That's the answer to money making pictures. As many of these as we find we will produce. Or contract for. And not one more."

If producers generally would work that basis we would have a lot much better pictures. Samuel Goldwyn has proved this within the last year. No idea of how many—how good. No distributor in the world can promise any given number of good pictures. His producer will make them—as many as he promises. No one starts out to make a poor picture. And you want to remember this when you book. And keep open time—if such a thing is possible—in these days of block book-

Well, there's a national soldiers' bonus. In a tax sense, it will bring its reactions; any such expenditure is inseparable from the question of taxation. But, remember this and write a black mark for memory.

Never sell the United States "short". Never in all our national history has our country had so much money and never, in all history, was so much of that money in the hands of all of the people.

Please Mr. Producer—one and all you—see "Broadway After Dark".

Combine Offices

Goldwyn, Ltd., Merges With Jury's Imperial Pictures In England—New Company Formed

Details of a merger, worked out during the brief stay here, last week, of Sir William Jury, were made known yesterday when it was announced that Goldwyn, Ltd., of England, and Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., had been combined into one organization. Goldwyn has, of course, handled that company's products in Great Britain, and Jury's Imperial, controlled Metro distribution there.

A new company, to be known as Jury-Metro-Goldwyn, Ltd., will be organized to act as distributor for Metro-Goldwyn pictures throughout England.

Names Flock in for Spring Tournament—George Blair's Camera Arrives

Flocks of new entries for the Spring Golf Tournament hit the office yesterday. It was a busy day and the young lady whose business it is to index the names in their proper pigeon-holes says she only had time to get as far as the 116th name and had to let it go at that.

And so will be found below the names of the first one hundred and sixteen. There are more but these will appear later. Everything is shaping up very nicely for the event. George Blair's Kodak has arrived from Kodak Park and it's a beauty. Certainly a prize worth striving for.

All ye golf enthusiasts, pray for good weather.

Bonus Passes

And with it Hope for Admission Tax Repeal Wanes, According to Well Posted Representatives

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Washington—With the Senate passing the soldiers' bonus bill over the veto of President Coolidge many well-posted Representatives are of the opinion that this action will seriously obstruct the repeal of many of the taxes for which relief had been planned. Among these is the admission tax affecting motion picture theatres, where it was fully expected that on all admissions of 50 cents and under the tax would be repealed.

At this moment it is very early to attempt to anticipate what action, if any, will occur regarding the tax repeal, but with the enormous amount needed for the soldiers' bonus it is believed all tax repeal will be seriously impeded, if not completely blocked.

Sydney S. Cohen of the M. P. T. O. of A. had no comment to make yesterday relative to the possible effect of the bonus bill upon admission tax repeal.

Will H. Hays could not be reached for a statement.

"On Oct. 31, 1923, a special dispatch from Washington to THE FILM DAILY said in part:

"If the soldiers' bonus bill was killed there might be some hope for the repeal of the admission tax. Those politicians favoring the defeat of the bonus bill would like to see the picture people take up this idea—they need propaganda in the effort to kill off the passage of this measure."

"Girl Shy"—Pathe
Orpheum, Chicago

AMERICAN—For in "Girl Shy," to an higher degree than in "Why Worry?" a thoroughly amusing thing, and with much excitement as in "Safety First," but less strain on the nerves.
ST—Again Harold Lloyd has based a play on ideas rather than buffoonery and he has made a production which is amusing and seldom silly.

Criterion, Los Angeles
(Week ending May 10)

AMINER—It is, in the story fabric it just as funny as his last film, "Why Worry?" But it is much faster and certainly twice as many gags.

PRESS—This latest comedy of Harold Lloyd's is, if anything, in a more perfect creation, and equally full of laughs.

HERALD—This is Lloyd's first picture as own producer, and the vehicle reveals abundance of wit and laughter.

WS—Drew from the Saturday evening spectators such healthy, hearty cheer that the walls of the Grand Avenue were actually seemed to rock.

CORD—"Girl Shy" has the essence of it: Youth, Loye, Laughter—and all

MES—The time has come for all good things to goers to laugh again. They'll laugh long and famously this time. For even a man with a lifelong grudge would have had time resisting Harold Lloyd's "Girl

"The Goldfish"—1st Nat'l
State, Cleveland

WS—Having of late taken a flight at every type of role but the one for which she is best suited, Constance Talmadge "The Goldfish" returns to the part that is responsible for her elevation to screen empress, the flapper.

AIN DEALER—Other than two titles would not jar the ear at all if spoken, "The Goldfish" is nice, light, amusing celluloid.

Wisconsin, Milwaukee

ADER—It is a wholesome comedy, one in which Constance can do justice to, and she plays the part of a flapper to the amusement of all who have seen it.

NTINEL—It is not as hilarious in film as in the footlights, for the plot is pretty and the best situations are decided farce.

"The Guilty One"—F. P.-L.
Metropolitan, Los Angeles
(Week ending May 10)

AMINER—This Joseph Henabery production opens up as a sure-enough problem picture. Only about the middle do things happen that are very dramatic. After that there's a lot of fireworks.

PRESS—"The Guilty One," a smart little vignette *** excites widespread comment for it presents powerful truths in a deft manner.

HERALD—This screen production is by far better than was the stage version. No apparent reason for it—the story is followed religiously—other than that Joseph Henabery, who directed it, seemed to get more out of the story than did the director who staged the play.

NEWS—"The Guilty One" is an interesting mystery murder film drama. ***

TIMES—I really forget who the guilty party was, I got so tired suspecting before we found out. The only interesting man in the story died early.

"Miami"—Hodkinson
Fenway, Boston

TRANSCRIPT—*** The picture is about as stilted as a three-legged horse and limps along like a convict after a day's work on a good granite rock pile. And, worst of all this, Betty Compson is at her most hopeless.

"Mlle. Midnight"
Allen, Cleveland

NEWS—*** Does contain a goodly share of action and a remarkable amount of color. The sets are excellent and no part of the picture bores the spectators.

PLAIN DEALER—The romantically-inclined fan will be entranced by this exotic star. ***

Alhambra, Los Angeles
(Week ending May 10)

EXPRESS—Petite Mae Murray becomes a sun-burned senorita of Mexico in "Mademoiselle Midnight." *** That, however, does not deter her from giving her usual vivacious, imitatively gay characterization of a dancing debutante.

HERALD—*** Mae Murray, seen in her latest production, proves she can be just as gorgeous in an outdoor setting as in a rich and tapestried interior.

Garrick, Minneapolis

JOURNAL—Mae Murray and a squadron of movie Mexicans furnish the thrills of "Mademoiselle Midnight," and any Mae Murray follower will cheer her through the mazes of her new opus.

STAR—You simply want her to walk out of the screen, and while you are perfectly well aware that she won't, you think it is a great pity, for Mae Murray in person would be somebody well worth seeing. ***

Columbia, Washington

HERALD—Mae Murray, the screen's most gorgeous butterfly, brings her latest and dramatic starring production *** in "Mlle. Midnight," a vivid romantic drama of modern Mexico.

POST—With languorous and beautiful Mexico as a background and a thrilling story of love and intrigue set in it like a jewel, Mae Murray has the best role of her career in "Mlle. Midnight." ***

STAR—Mae Murray fans will not be disappointed in it, as the story offers the star opportunities to exploit her "line" quite creditably.

TIMES—*** A vivid romantic drama of modern Mexico.

NEWS—"Excellent" meaning the photography.

"Luxurious," an adjective describing some of the scenery shots.

"Terrible" meaning the picture as a whole.

PLAIN DEALER—There you have the story. Not a new one and far from startling. Here it is lavishly mounted and interpreted by a fine cast of players, numbering Lon Chaney, Dorothy Mackaill, Conway Tearle and Ricardo Cortez. The result is a polished, superb production of a pretty pallid tale.

TIMES—As the press agent has said there are more and greater risks taken in the filming of this production than in previous William Fox specials.

Redecorating the Cosmopolitan

Extensive alterations are being made at the Cosmopolitan theatre, preparatory to reopening the house in August with "Janice Meredith." Among the alterations will be a new floor designed to improve the acoustics of the theatre. A new marquis is to be installed. A new curtain, designed and painted by Joseph Urban, will be a decorative feature. Chairs are to be completely refurnished. The theatre, in its new dress, will carry out the Colonial note which is already emphasized in the architecture.

Pathe Films Rum Runners

Beginning with issue No. 41 Pathe News will show, in successive installments, the inside story of the rum runners. Chartering a fishing schooner, Emanuel Cohen, editor and a staff of cameramen went fifteen miles off the coast of Massachusetts, and visited the fleet of rum runners anchored there. The true character of his vessel was carefully disguised. The cameramen were hidden under tarpaulins and in that way secured the material.

J. D. Williams Expects Him to Start

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

London—J. D. Williams has told Ernest W. Fredman of "The Film Renter" that he expected Rudolph Valentino to start work for Ritz
Pictures in August. Fredman, quotes
Williams as saying that, despite reports linking Valentino and Adolph Zukor on future pictures, he (Williams) will distribute the Valentino pictures through Ritz.

"J. D." says Fredman in "The

Talks of "Trust" in France

Jake Wilk, back from eleven months in France declares that Broadway is not the only spot where a "closed" theatre situation exists. Wilk said that those producers who failed to play with two or three leading French renters might as well take their pictures "and play them up an alley". He said pictures in color were in vogue all through Europe and mentioned two Williamson under-sea pictures that had attained great popularity in England, "The Wonders of the Sea" and "The Uninvited Guest". Wilk said his most important piece of business in France was the purchase of the rights to "The Hunchback" for Universal.

In announcing Kane's resignation,
Mr. Lasky expressed keen regret at

Tax Repeal Set

Regardless of Bonus, Unless the President's Veto of Entire Tax
Bill is Sustained

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Washington—Passage of the Soldier's Bonus bill can have no effect on individual items in the revenue bill.
The conference committee, which is now working on the latter, is confined in its activities to the limits of the measure as passed by the House and Senate. In-as-much as the House and Senate are in accord on the tax cut with respect to admissions and the elimination of the seating capacity taxes,

nothing will prevent these changes from becoming effective except a sustained veto of the bill by the President.

The two items most distasteful to the President—the Jones graduated tax on undistributed corporate profits, and the publication of tax returns—are apparently to be settled by the conference committee in a way which will be satisfactory to the Administration, thus lessening the chances of President Coolidge vetoing the measure when it reaches him.

The question of raising any money required for cash payments under the bonus bill, need not be taken up by Congress until the next session, as such cash payments are not to be made until after March 1, next.

Up-State Theatre Purchased

W. N. Shirley, managing director of the Farash Theatre Co., Inc., of Schenectady advised THE FILM
DAILY by long distance telephone yesterday that he acquired the Barclay in that city. This gives the company four theatres there, the others being the State, Strand and Albany.

Can't Wire Films

American Telephone Co. Experts Think Motion Pictures Cannot Be Transmitted That Way

There have been a number of claims advanced that motion pictures will eventually be transmitted by wire or radio. C. Francis Jenkins, a Washington inventor of considerable reputation has been at work on such a plan for some time and declares he has been successful in causing a moving hand and other moving objects to appear roughly outlined in light and shadow, following radio transmission.

Another such claim has been advanced by an English inventor. Now, however, it becomes known that experts of the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. who have succeeded in transmitting photographs from Cleveland to New York over a telephone wire are of the opinion that the same method cannot be used as applied to motion pictures.

The telephone engineers found that they could send 25 or more dots of light so swiftly one after the other that to the eye they seemed to be simultaneously. These dots could be disposed in a pattern. Light and shadow effects could be produced on a coarse scale, roughly resembling motion pictures. It would take hundreds of thousands of dots of light of this kind, it was said, to give genuine radio motion pictures. The prospect of shooting prizefight pictures from the ringside to radio audiences, or of transmitting synchronized pictures with opera or other entertainment, was said to be simply nil.

Craal, Newport News, president; I. Weinberg, Lexington, vice-president; Harry Bernstein, Richmond, secretary-treasurer, and Jake Wells, Richmond, and F. W. Twyman, Charlottesville, members of the board of directors.

Following the meeting, the exhibitors visited the local exchanges. The music tax settlements and general business conditions were discussed briefly.

Sydney S. Cohen, who states that he has resigned as president of the defendant, sent in an affidavit that the money advanced by True was only to be repaid out of the sale of stock and from profits. True denied this, and said that he has a further claim for $2300 for loans and $20,000 for salary.

"Broadway After Dark"—Warner's
Rialto

AMERICAN—* * * The play was probably heavy, cumbersome melodrama without a saving ray of sunshine, while the picture is such good entertainment we sit and wonder how it was possible.

One reason it was possible is that Monta Bell held the directorial reins. * * * DAILY NEWS—If you are not already initiated into the ways and wonderments of the so-called Smart Set you'd better take a look at "Broadway After Dark," * * *

EVERNING WORLD—* * * Anyway, it is a frank and thrilling melodrammer and one that will make the folks in the small towns "Oh!" and "Ah!" and mutter what a terrible place Broadway must be after all. * * *

* * * The film will probably "knock 'em cold" in the small towns.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * a long stride in the right direction. It pleases us immensely and if any there be who does not like this * * * we shall be glad to take him aside and show him where he is wrong.

* * * Every one in the cast deserves a medal for his good work. Monta Bell directed the picture. He deserves two.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * The Owen Davis play has received excellent handling by both the scenario writer and Monta Bell, the director. * * *

* * * Improbable it may be, but it is also highly entertaining and provides an hour of laughter and absorbing interest. * * *

POST—* * * an interesting film, but it gives you the same feeling that you get when watching one of these slow-motion pictures. It hasn't enough speed or action or whatever it is that makes good pictures hold you breathless while they zip along. * * *

Still, there are two things * * * which make it stand out above a good many other films we have seen * * * the acting, and * * * Norma Shearer, * * *

SUN—* * * once you get into the spirit of the thing, it fairly fascinates you. * * * "Broadway After Dark" is entertaining.

TELEGRAM * * * you will have glimpses of club life, the goings on in cabarets, exciting parties in studios. * * *

TIMES—* * * a pseudo-melodrama lightened with stretches of really good comedy. * * * The story is of the old variety, but the picture has been so skillfully handled, especially in the injection of funny situations, that one forgets to grieve at the heroine's plight. We venture to say that it is a production which will be immensely enjoyed. * * * Monta Bell directed this production, which makes an unusually good entertainment. * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * looks like 100 per cent money getter in almost any type of theatre. It is good jazzy hoak with the punch to put it over at the box office. * * *

WORLD—* * * It is pretty sickly stuff * * * and still the picture is going to be immensely interesting to persons who have heard all about and never seen the Great White Way. * * *

With due credit to Mr. Bell, the director, for a perfectly fine piece of work, considering, there isn't a great deal in it to wring the heart or send you up shouting. * * *

"The Goldfish"—First Nat'l
Rivoli

DAILY-NEWS—* * * All the charming vulgarity of our divorce laws creeps naively into the unfolding of the artless tale.

Which is to say that "The Goldfish" is funny and bad mannered. Zasu Pitts, * * * Mr. Mulhall * * * and Edward Connelly help to enliven the scene. Talmadge fans will find it without a flaw. There are enough closeups of the star to satisfy the most devoted admirer.

EVERNING WORLD—* * * "The Goldfish," is a far more enjoyable picture than it was a play. In fact, we think it is one of the best things, if not the best, that Constance has done. * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—"The Goldfish" has been badly cut and it seems a shame, for if the scenes were reduced to exclude repetition the * * * picture would be a mighty good comedy. * * * and so the picture drags along instead of bounding along as it should do. The story is too full of holes to bear a scrutinizing gaze. * * *

POST—* * * While you may not exactly like the subject matter of it—we didn't—there's no getting away from the fact that it's full of laughs and good acting and Connie Talmadge, which would seem to be about enough for one picture.

Miss Talmadge is prettier than ever, * * * TIMES—As a light comedy, * * * "The Goldfish," * * * is one of those refreshing entertainments one enjoys while viewing and forgets soon afterward. * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * Projecting for 78 minutes, the feature inclines to pall as it approaches the closing footage. The simple expedient of cutting should remedy that blemish.

It pleased at the Rialto, and it will do likewise in any of the better houses for those who pass through the gate to see it.

WORLD—* * * The film version has made it even more innocuous and added a dash of slapstick, hilariously played by Zasu Pitts. Constance Talmadge prances through the role of the much married Jennie * * * very prettily. * * *

"The Love Master"—First Nat'l
Capitol

AMERICAN—* * * rather ordinary melodrama, but my two canine friends relieve it from being just a picture. Anyone who loves dogs will enjoy seeing the romance. * * *

EVERNING WORLD—* * * There is not, in our estimation, a more natural actor on the screen than this wonderful dog and it is a decided pleasure to see him work. * * *

* * * is by far the best dog-star picture we ever saw. It is our advice that movie-goers do not miss it.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * we never yet have seen one of his pictures that did not seem far too long. * * *

* * * we like it better than any of the others because it has plenty of comedy and some excellent titles. We especially like the scenes in which no humans interfere. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—A picture with Strongheart is always refreshing. It has none of the stereotyped conventions which so often comprise celluloid drama, but it establishes a field of its own. It has the tang of the great outdoors—the appeal of wild things. * * *

POST—* * * His work in the picture, "The Love Master," again shows his remarkable intelligence and camera technique, though the story doesn't give him as much of a chance as some he has worked in. The film is pretty good, on the whole. * * *

TELEGRAM—Strongheart, * * * makes a big hit in * * * "The Love Match" * * *

TIMES—* * * The interesting scenery coupled with the sympathetic actions of the two dumb animals prop up a weak and dragging narrative, which by careful editing and cutting could be considerably improved.

* * * Laurence Trimble, the director, has centered his attention on the dogs without giving as much heed to the story as he should have done. * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * is far from being the best story that he has had on the screen. It is a long, drawn-out and tiresome tale that is entirely disconnected and very weakly knit together. * * *

Where the dog is used to make personal appearances the picture will get over, but as general entertainment it is poor stuff. * * *

WORLD—* * * Strongheart * * * is a magnificent dog, one quite apart in sense from any canine ever placed on exhibition before. And still, the story, an improbable and rambling piece, seemed far beneath its star's own requirements. * * *

"The Spirit of the U. S. A."—F. B. O.
Lyric

EVERNING JOURNAL—Mary Carr and Johnnie Walker are again united in a throbbing heart-interest story and are well cast. * * *

Mrs. Carr does some appealing acting as the mother. * * *

EVERNING WORLD—* * * It is another one of those mother pictures. * * *

But when Mary Carr plays the mother and Johnny Walker plays the son, there is bound to be a lot of good acting and barrels of tears. * * *

* * * It is a picture well worth the seeing if you want to cry a bit, smile a bit and laugh a bit.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * will bring its producer and distributors great financial profit if the millions who weekly attend the motion picture theatre of this country still love their hoakum strong and undiluted. It has all there is and then some. By that is meant that "The Spirit of the U. S. A." is a flag play. It is a mother play, and Mary Carr is the mother. * * *

TELEGRAM—* * * Like his other popular films, "The Spirit of the U. S. A." was written for him by his mother, Mrs. Emilie Johnson, who admits that the passing of the late President Wilson inspired her to write this "mother-patriotic picture" which glorifies mother and son love.

"The Woman on the Jury"—1st Nat'l
Strand

AMERICAN—* * * a mystery story with a mystery unfolded in the beginning. Even so, it is good entertainment, and does not lose any of its value. * * *

"The Woman on the Jury, while no great contribution to the artistic success of the "fillums," is a rattling good box office attraction. * * *

EVERNING JOURNAL—* * * The photoplay has a compelling theme and resembles in every detail the stage play of the same name. Striking scenes are well portrayed, though at times exaggerated. * * *

EVERNING WORLD—* * * a corking good picture; so good, in fact, that we are going to see it again. Seldom have we beheld a picture with such a cast. * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—It is far away from being a good picture. The story never interested us very much and it doesn't seem to prove anything; and leaving Sylvia Breamer in the title role certainly doesn't help matters any. * * *

The lighting or the printing was so bad that it made even Bessie Love look old and ugly. So the picture registers zero as far as we are concerned.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * those who want to see a tense dramatic story, splendidly acted by an unusually notable cast * * * should go to see it. It will hold them, once the plot gets going, to the final fadeout. * * *

POST—* * * While the story requires some padding to make it stretch to feature length, it contains such tense dramatic situations flavored with a little spice, and is so admirably acted, that it makes a mighty fine picture. * * *

SUN—* * * one of the best melodramas presented at the local movie emporiums during the season. * * *

TELEGRAM—* * * Here is an ideal melodrama * * * with a story that catches the attention from the beginning and holds it steadfast until the final fadeaway. * * *

TIMES—* * * It is an instance where the narrative survives in spite of much exaggerated acting, poor direction and an overdose of unnecessary close-ups. As for the subtitles, they are hardly marvels of originality or terseness.

Lew Cody * * * is quite capable. * * *

WORLD—* * * There is a naive disregard for abstract justice in the theme which is amusing or shocking according to your reactions toward abstract justice. * * *

The film was acted according to the best Pinero traditions with Sylvia Breamer and Lew Cody heading the cast.

Out-of-Town

"The Rendezvous"—Gold-Cos
Strand, Detroit

FREE PRESS * * * From the point of view, the picture is one of that Neilan has made; in technique, photography, and in lighting, it is and compelling.

NEWS—It is well off the beaten path with vibrancy and color and is taining in spite of its inconsistent situation.

TIMES—Marshall Neilan in "The vous" which opened at the Broadway Sunday has produced a picture sur with Russian atmosphere, tense with full of strong emotions.

"The Song of Love"—1st Nat'l
Olympia, Boston

TRANSCRIPT—* * * Tendency to * * * spreads rapidly to other men the cast and ultimately to the audience "Song of Love" degenerates by successive stages ever more swiftly into the "Saharan drama" that was outmoded "The Sheik."

"Through the Dark"—Gold-Cos
Strand, Montreal

STAR—An intensely exciting "Blackie" film with San Francisco's world as a background is presented under the title of "Through the Dark." story has a good moral.

TRIBUNE—* * * Anything in which Anna Nilsson plays a part is essentially interesting. Miss Nilsson is charming in her role as "first love."

"Tiger Rose"—Warners
Strand, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—As for Miss Ulric, she gives an interesting performance * * * the girl of the north who drifted into the from "way up north." She has a trick of her own.

"Triumph"—F. P.-L.
Walnut, Cincinnati

TRIBUNE—The way in which the girl loves the man she loves proves to be the chief feature of interest in the picture.

Alhambra, Milwaukee

SENTINEL—Although it is melodrama, its situations have been so cleverly handled that there is no hardship in following the maze of complications that beset the heroine before love's path is clear.

Missouri, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—* * * Filled with ornate sets and figures. Gaudy scenes of color, lavishness of costume and revel, and human touch, gives "Triumph" a very good reception.

POST-DISPATCH—The excellent work of actress Joy and Rod La Rocque in the picture has much to do with the successful exploitation of a story. * * *

NEWS—* * * The film is a very good one's entertainment.

"True As Steel"
California, Los Angeles

(Week ending May 10)

EXAMINER—If he isn't setting out with the idea of making it great, he at least is trying to make it real. A genre of the upper middle class in our picture, you might call this, his latest picture from his own pen and megaphone.

FREE PRESS—Rupert Hughes has given a very interesting and entertaining view of business in its effect upon the relations of men and women in "True As Steel." * * *

WORLD-HERALD—Rupert Hughes wrote "True As Steel," a charming little story with life dispersed throughout its length and breadth.

NEWS—Rupert Hughes, well-known manufacturer of cinema puzzles, succeeds so ably in mystifying those who try to solve his latest invention, which he has had patented under the label, "True As Steel."

RECORD—"It's the little things that count," one sage remarked. So it is with the picture written by Rupert Hughes. He adds color to his photoplays by bringing out human interest touches that are generally omitted.

NEWS—* * * "True As Steel" doesn't do anything—not even that the major can't do a remarkably fine or clever picture attempt.

Rialto, Washington

NEWS—It is a story of human, living characters, who live natural lives in a natural way. There are no spotless heroines, there are no godlike heroes. * * *

"Twenty-One"—1st Nat'l
Regent, Rochester

DEMOCRAT AND CHRONICLE—Richard Barthelmess can give even a rather hackneyed picture, such as is the one in which he came to the Regent yesterday for a week's engagement, a pleasant flavor and a good deal of appeal.

WORLD-HERALD—To the director of this picture, whatever he is, the writer has striven for some way to discover his name, go several leaves of the hay leaf crowns that justly go to Richard Barthelmess and Dorothy Mackail giving the screen an entirely delightful and most entrancing photoplay, "Twenty-One." * * *

JOURNAL AND POST EXPRESS—It isn't much to the story—it appeals just because it is so human and every one acts so much as you would expect him to.

NEWS-UNION—"Twenty-One" which is shown at the Regent Theatre is not bad entertainment, though it is not so good a vehicle as that always sincere and talented actor Richard Barthelmess is entitled to.

"Vagabond Trail"—Fox
Moon, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—There are enough original twists in the plot of * * * "The Vagabond Trail," * * * to make this western story entertaining, even to those who care little for this type.

"Week End Husbands"—Equity
Karlton, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—Without a doubt, Mr. Average Movie Fan will find "Week-end Husbands," now showing at the Karlton, entertaining enough. There is sufficient action and just about the right amount of romance and love tossed into the lot.

INQUIRER—* * * Is the old movie story of marriage with a new name. It is aimless and lacking in interest.

NORTH AMERICAN—It is a bootlegging tale that travels a gilded but moral way from the Atlantic coast to Paris.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—* * * Is based upon the well-known triangle situation in which the charming young wife plays with the affections of the other man while her husband is busy making enough money to keep her in luxuries.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—If one is willing to pass over the fact that a poison case is cured by the use of a stethoscope, the picture will be found quite entertaining.

"When A Girl Leaves Home"—Asso.
Ex.—World, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—An all star cast that really is an all star cast and a dominating love theme makes Associated Exhibitors' picture, "When a Girl Loves," * * * interesting.

Kings, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—* * * A remarkable cast, a most interesting background and theme. * * *

POST-DISPATCH—Swift action starting in Russia and moving on to even quicker tempo in the United States make a thrilling, if sometimes distracting and disquieting melodrama. * * *

STAR—* * * A somewhat incoherent but never dull drama of many characters and mixed emotions.

TIMES—Agnes Ayres, as a sentimental daughter of Russia, assumes a wistful role. * * * The title, so apparently intended to attract attention, does not at all reveal the real worth of the picture.

"The Whipping Boss"—F. B. O.
Olympic, Chicago

HERALD AND EXAMINER—"The Whipping Boss" could scarcely be described as a pretty film because most of its events demonstrate man's brutality to man, but for its purpose it is reasonably effective.

JOURNAL—"The Whipping Boss" is a neat and interesting showing of adventures in cruelty, successfully put down by the Legionnaires. It has the punch of promising drama, abundant action and that fair indispensable—love.

"The White Sister"—Metro
Capitol, Montreal

STAR—With Lillian Gish in the role of the heroine of Marion Crawford's charming novel, the production is more than a dramatic love story; it is an inspirational picture of the beauty of sorrow and sacrifice. * * *

"Why Men Leave Home"—Warners
Capitol, Cincinnati

TRIBUNE—A clever satire on modern married life in which a man neglects his wife after only a year of marriage forms the basis of the plot of "Why Men Leave Home." * * *

Rialto, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—The production is filled with bubbling chuckles and here and there a big laugh. It is a very sparkling comedy which in the beginning pokes sly fun at the women.

"The Woman on the Jury"—1st Nat'l
Capitol, Detroit

FREE PRESS—A photoplay that should be listed among the best of the 1924 releases is "The Woman on the Jury." * * * It is one of the most gripping film plays offered to Detroiters in many weeks.

NEWS—A gripping climax staged in a jury room * * * gives "The Woman on the Jury," at the Capitol this week, a distinctly new film situation of powerful audience appeal.

TIMES—* * * Is filled with tense dramatic situations that grip the interest of the audience to final fadeout. And it has its lighter moments with some genuine comedy furnished by Ford Sterling.

are there any? In keeping house open during the hot summer months? If not; why they kept open? Just a few the questions propounded by operator of one of the largest circuits in the country. Who? no. But think over what he s. "Isn't it about time," he queried, "that we forgot thinking small ways? Keeping the houses open year was all right during 1900. It's different now. And why don't operate accordingly? Why don't follow the legitimate, and close down during the hot weather? It would mean a lot. First we would save money—and thus make money.

"Secondly we would rest up our people, our patrons, and make them hungry for good pictures in September. What do they get as 'entertainment' in the summer months? Pictures we won't play any other time. Exhibitors won't pay real prices for summer shows; distributors hold back consequently anything worth while; and the public is sour of what they see.

Meanwhile, with operating costs mounting we are up against it. One reason they mount is that all help out our theatres feel we must need to keep open 52 weeks a year. They make us pay through the nose. Our big houses cost $25,000 a more to operate today than four five years ago. In wages alone—mechanics, electricians, operators, etc. we ran 40 weeks and laid them you would find things different."

Lot of truth in this. And you know it. But where will you find the Hero. Who first starts closing down in summer. Not so long as his opposition remains open. He isn't going to give that bird a chance. To steal his business. Nixy; no; NOT!

Conferees on Revenue Revision Bill Decide Not to Change Items Affecting Industry

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Washington—The conferees on the Revenue Revision Bill came to an agreement on that measure yesterday. No changes have been made in the items of direct interest to the moving picture industry.

It is anticipated by Chairman Smoot, of the Senate Finance Committee, that the report of the conferees can be wiped into shape in time to have it acted upon finally in the Senate on Saturday and in the House on Monday.

Discussing the bill as it now stands, Senator Smoot declared that while it is not what he would like to have it, in its present form, it is not so bad and he hopes that the President will find it possible to sign the measure.

Theatre Competition

By Producers-Distributors and Non-Theatrical Exhibitors to Be Discussed at Boston Convention

To more definitely and specifically establish and protect the position and interests of the exhibitor against the constantly widening competition of producer-owned theatres and non-theatrical institutions of all kinds will be one of the bigger tasks to be discussed at the Boston convention of the M. P. T. O. A. next week.

Exhibitor officials report that there is so much to be done and so short a time to do it in, that the program laid out has been revised so as to bring forward the highly important elements and thus have time to consider essentials.

They declare that every hour of May 27th, 28th and 29th will be devoted to important exhibitor business at the Copley Plaza convention hall. It is expected that a considerable portion of the work will come into the meeting fairly well shaped because it has been considered so much in detail by the state and regional bodies. Sydney S. mitted to state officials the subjects likely to form the basis for definite action and asked that they be considered carefully so as to arrive at entirely practical conclusions at the Boston meeting without unnecessary delay.

The producer-owned theatre is held to be one of the problems in the industry. M. P. T. O. officials believe the situation not only involves unfair competition but also brings to view a public menace in a possible centralized control of the screen. It is believed that definite action will be taken on that subject by the convention delegates.

"Another line of procedure", said an M. P. T. O. A. statement yesterday, "will be the laying of plans for the strengthening and development of state and regional bodies. With membership in the national organization direct and with strong affiliations in every state, through National M. P. Day participation and other activities the work has finally assumed a complete nation-wide aspect and these new conditions must be met and processes evolved to keep pace with the latest developments. The utility of state and regional bodies must be brought to a higher standard in legislative matters especially to completely protect the interests of the theatre owners."

The formation of grievance boards, to consider the direct complaints of exhibitors and suggest lines of action for state and regional bodies, will be one of the subjects discussed. This question is said to be operating well in certain sections of the Middle-West.

Canadian affiliation will be discussed to extend and develop the commercial and social relations between Canada and this country through screen publicity. A large delegation will be present from Canada.

Sydney S. Cohen leaves for Boston tomorrow to arrange for the meeting of the board of directors on Monday. He was advised by wire from Glenn Harper that the Los Angeles delegation would leave today with instructions to support a presidential candidate "in harmony with the present administration".

Mae Murray in "Mademoiselle Midnight," will be the feature at the Capitol next week.

less than they should and can afford to pay". That, it seems, is the sore spot.

"You say that such an exhibitor—the one who doesn't pay all he can afford—is a hog; Mr. Pearson calls him a thief. Then you say the words aren't harsh enough.

"Of course you and Mr. Pearson know exactly what you're talking about. Like plenty of other little exhibitors, I, imagine, I don't. So I ask:

"Is the measure of the worth of a picture what an exhibitor can afford, and that only?

"And what can he afford? 20%? 25%? 30%? And how can he know exactly, or even nearly, how much that is before he plays the picture?

"If he pays more, is he a philanthropist, or is the fellow who gets it then a hog and a thief?

"Does the mere production of a picture—say a good picture—necessarily entitle the producer of it to a split of the gross in a theatre everywhere?

"How does the distributor know so infernally well just what an exhibitor should pay? Or is he just bluffing about knowing, and calling names on his guess?

"Last fall a salesman came in here and wanted $835 for a certain good picture in a little town. Afterward it played there on percentage, and grossed a little over $600—good business in that place. Was he a hog for asking? a thief if he'd gotten it?

"Mr. Pearson talks of the exhibitor being the only retailer getting $1.00 for something which costs him 25 cents. Bunk. The retailer sells his stuff today or keeps it until tomorrow. His stuff comes to him all ready to deliver. Isn't the music something an exhibitor sells with the film? Doesn't he render other services beyond that of the usual retailer. Isn't he more like a manufacturer who makes up a product by assembling parts made by someone else? Certainly he can't sell the product he buys without a lot of service no other retailer would consider. Any other retailer who gives his whole proposition to just one product for a day or a week?

"And what about the hog who wants more than his share; is a guarantee set infernally high, plus 50% of the gross over three times that guarantee, is that just fair, or is it a hog's part of the gross on a picture? That proposition comes from Mr. Pearson's company.

"I'm not getting away with anything, and I'm not considering myself hit by the name calling spree you fellows are having. Don't want to be called names, so I just ask these questions to find out what's expected."

ROCHESTER—For those who like to see very frank, passionate love-making, with the primitive softened by grace and culture, Elinor Glyn's film production of the noted romantic novel entitled "Three Weeks" is recommended.

ROCHESTER—As it is, it palls and bores one with its vapid and untruthfulness, both to the Near East kingdom and to life in general. JOURNAL & POST EXPRESS—The picture is a highly romantic tale of an old order, with a good deal of emotional heaving and crashing, and surprisingly interesting in the most part.

BEAT HEAT

By DANNY

How to do it. As Nat Roth in figures it. And gives a dozen reasons—and suggestions—as to how. Worth thinking about. And following out. "Look big attractions," says Nat, "if you want to draw people away from the beaches and outdoor sports." Fine—if you get the pictures. And while this may be difficult. Don't forget this: there are always a lot more than averagely good pictures about. Only you have dig them out.

When he suggests the use of fans—if you have a cooling plant—because of the psychology of covers they bring; the use of seat covers; purchase of cool, cheap, white forms for the ushers; and the use of wicker furniture and green plants in the lobby. His idea of free lemonade is mighty good, and that exhibitors should change the front of their house fine. Use green and blue lights and never red or orange—good. The idea of selling tickets to the entire family at special rates worth while also, and particularly good is the idea of advertising how the theatre is.

This winter like spring weather has been a God-send to many exhibitors. It has held business up, at any rate—except where industrial conditions have affected the community. Lay your hands on the best pictures possible for June and July. Handle as few of the "poor sisters" as possible. And for the love of your bank roll when you have a weak one slide it by. Make no promises. And build your show with good short stuff.

Boston promises to stir something. The program is carried out. And there is a real discussion. As to properly owned theatres. This is always a good topic. For national exhibitor conventions. If the discussion is constructive—good. If it is only going to be a hammer and tongs attacking the big companies, get nowhere, then it will be a waste of time.

Talk continues circulating. Of the plan to get 6,000 days of booking time. Through one

Frank Rembusch Has Something to Say Regarding Poor Pictures

Frank Rembusch who runs a chain in Indiana, like Bob Wilby, of Alabama, has something to say about the "exhibitor combination" idea. What Rembusch overlooks saying about so called "big" pictures that are lemons is worth reading. Here it is:

"I have been reading those direful tales of producer complaints against exhibitor combinations and I am moved to utter a word.

"When the picture business goes bad, that's the time for Old Alibi to put on a new suit of excuses and explain the whole trouble. The usual thing is for the exhibitor to put

Braden, Not Brady, a Director

In the announcement of the newly elected directors of Metro-Goldwyn pictures it was stated that Col. Jasper E. Brady had been elected to the directorate. This was an error. Wm. Braden, formerly a director of Goldwyn, was elected to the Metro-Goldwyn board, and not Col. Brady.

the blame of poor business on the producer, or visa versa. The latest alibi for financial loss on the part of producers is the claim that exhibitor combinations, wholesale bookings, etc., is forcing down prices. This is the most alibiest of them all.

"But, no, no. That is not the trouble. No one can ever make me believe that the exhibitors have any such organization whereby they can force prices down. This will never happen. If it does, then know that the Millennium is here. Why not face facts. Let's be honest in the matter and we will get somewhere. There never has been a time in my long experience when the exhibitor has not paid every dollar he could scrape up for good pictures and he always will. He will always do this for at least one reason: To keep his competitor from getting the picture.

"What is ruinous to all of us is paying big prices for little pictures.

"Every time we buy a group of pictures we buy them on blue-sky salesmanship. The producer shows us a lot of pretty booklets of how wonderful their 'conceived, but unborn child well be'—especially in the box-office.

"I have experienced that of these big specials only one out of eight are up to the sales talk. This is the thing that is putting us all out of business. We are first oversold, then we over-sell our patrons.

Sees Entertainment Lack

Here are concrete examples:

"At the beginning of last season a certain picture was touted sky-high. The reviews on it were good, especially as to the gorgeous settings, etc. Recently I played the picture for a three days' run in a small town and it died the death of a dog. I began to examine to learn what was at fault. I had never seen the picture so I helped to fill the empty seats and took a good look. I had a perfectly miserable hour and a half looking at a sordid, inane, asinine story of some half lewd people groing through a lot of divorce and unhappy situations that would make any ordinary mortal wish there never was a picture show in existence.

"I paid $150 for the picture and took in a gross of $132. If I could have seen the picture when I bought it, it never would have gone on my screen as a precious gift.

The next two days were off days and to rest up the town, I had a little picture—a Universal Star Series—that did not cost much. It had no big sets. Just a little outdoor picture with Gladys Walton. But there was more entertainment in one reel of this little picture than in the eight reels of the feature preceeding it. I paid expenses on the little picture and pleased my patrons, while I lost a couple of hundred on the big feature.

"So you can see when an exhibitor takes a whipping like this on a big feature, he soon begins to get hard-boiled on the big feature propaganda. It has got so we cannot believe anything we read about big pictures unless we personally look. There are two reasons why the prices of pictures are going down. One is that we have been fooled so many times that we cannot believe any one any more, and the other one is that we have paid out so much big money for little pictures that we have no money left to experiment further.

"Another instance: About a month ago we played a so-called big picture, by a great director, for a week's run in one of our cities. We had done everything for the picture anyone could do. We opened up to about two-thirds of our regular business and the second day it dropped to zero. I again investigated personally. As I entered the theatre, it was a delight to see the decorations to boost the picture, but when I looked at the empty seats I almost passed away. I asked the orchestra leader, 'Why don't they like our theatre this week?' The answer was, 'Look at the picture.' I did. If I could have seen that picture before I bought it, no amount of money could have let it come to my screen.

Entertainment, Entertainment, Entertainment that's what we want and have not. Big pictures that are big pictures we are always ready to pay for, but those half baked, would-be big pictures with costly sets, and beautiful clothes and fine manners, all without entertainment—without the soul of pictures—entertainment—that's what ruins us.

"When it's a little picture, let's buy it as such. If it's half way, just between a big one and a little one, sell it for that kind. When it's big, all right, we will support it. But, by heck, we exhibitors are not going to pay out our good money for a lot of anticipated big ones that are just imitations anyhow. And we have all of us found out this thing about the same time and that's why we refuse to be held up paying big prices for little pictures.

"No exhibitor combination has brought this about. Just our tearful experiences. I can take a little picture and buy it right and put on something extra with it, build it up, please my patrons, and make money, but when I get in one of those eight to twelve reelers that is quoted as big, paid for as big, I am ruined, because it's too long—too tiresome—too costly, and you cannot afford to add more to the overwhelming amount, and it is impossible to do anything but to try to force it over, take a good whipping and swear by all that lives and has gone before that I never will do it again.

"Entertainment, Entertainment, Mr. Producer, please give us pictures that entertain and your exhibitor combinations will pay you more than any individual can or will, alone."

Those who find genuine pleasure in fine acting, direction of more than passing interest, sets in fine taste and good to look at, and a story which practically eliminates the hackneyed sex stuff and gives glimpses of real human emotion and idealism will leave the theatre satisfied.

Special to THE FILM DAILY
Los Angeles—The Motion Picture Producers' Ass'n has formed a holding company which will produce. Sam Hoff, acting for Grand-Asher has a contract to distribute six pictures to be made by its members. Phil Rosen is president of the organization; Roy Clements, president; George Sargent, secretary and members of the board: Clark Badger; Reginald Barker, Will Leedine, and Paul Powell. The plan is the one taken up with some time ago. Several members of the Eastern branch of P. D. A. also discussed the Sydney S. Cohen left Friday afternoon for Boston to arrange for the pre-convention meetings of the executive committee of the M. P. T. O. A. at the Copley-Plaza.

Aside from mapping out the probable course of the convention which officially opens at 11 o'clock on Tuesday, there still remains a number of details to be cleaned up relative to the program. All of these matters will be straightened out before the opening session.

Paramount In Strand

Four Pictures in Addition to "Beaucaire" Get Bookings There—A Precedent
An unusual booking deal has been closed between Famous and the management of the Strand, under the terms of which a total of five Paramount Pictures will play that house. As noted, "Monsieur Beaucaire" has already been booked for August. It will remain there several weeks perhaps three. The other four pictures will be "A Sainted Devil," the second Valentino; "Sinners in Heaven" which Alan Crosland is now directing with Bebe Daniels and Richard Dix in the leads; "Spring Cleaning" in which Betty Compson will be featured and "The Enemy Sex," a James Cruze Prod., featuring Miss Compson.
This is the first time in the long history of the Strand that any group of Paramount Pictures has broken into that theater.

Boston

Next week Boston gets on the map. The MPTO annual convention. Minus, it is true, many figures heretofore important in exhibitor convention circles. The leaders of the Allied group will be conspicuous by their absence: Steffes; the Michigan crowd; Theodore Hayes; Col. H. B. Varner; Jake Wells; and others. Marcus Loew will not attend—unless something causes him to change his mind at the last moment. Neither will Zukor. And so the party will be left entirely to those who have faithfully followed the banner carried by Sydney S. Cohen.

With no intent to criticize; with no desire to open old wounds; might this be asked: how far can a national exhibitor organization go that is so divided? And how far can it get? The chances are the Allied group will not be mentioned; in all probability they will be ignored. And that Marcus Loew—who has faithfully attended these conventions for years—will not be present, may not cause a ripple. But when the convention gets down to business it will be interesting to see what will happen. During the past few years the great bulk of the time has been consumed with electioneering; with political problems, and delegates, who might have carried home something to aid and stimulate them in their

So far as the M. P. T. O. of New York and the T. O. C. C. are concerned, the Boston convention is non-existent. Officially, it was stated for the latter body that the T. O. C. C. was not interested, in view of the fact that it is not affiliated with the national organization. Of course, a number of exhibitors who are members of the T. O. C. C. are going to Boston as members of the M. P. T. O. A. but it is explained that they will attend purely as individuals.

Billy Brandt could not be reached for a statement late Friday, but from a general knowledge of the relationship between the state body and the national organization, it can be said that the attitude there is similar to that of the T. O. C. C. toward the Cohen group.

There's an Avalanche Coming in August, Boys!

It's an avalanche of pictures such as this industry has never seen or heard of before. It's an avalanche of super-hits that will send box-office figures sky-high and bury former records in the dust.

It's PARAMOUNT'S FAMOUS FORTY, and the first one comes to you on August 4th!

On that date you'll get "MANHANDLED," in which GLORIA SWANSON gives a performance so far surpassing any she's ever done before, including "The Humming Bird," that there's no comparison. A riotous comedy-romance produced by Allan Dwan. A gold-mine of the stuff that gets the coin. And a bear of a title!

If you attended the special showing at the Rialto of Zane Grey's "WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND," I don't need to tell you what a marvel this first all-color feature picture is. The book has sold over a million copies. The picture tells you why.

Then there's RUDOLPH VALENTINO in "MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE," also coming in August. Boys, here's a road show if there ever was one! Almost any other company would present it themselves at $2 top. Paramount offers it direct to you.

And here's a hot tip: Have James Cruze's "THE ENEMY SEX" screened for you whether you book it or not. It will give you some very pleasant entertainment. If, after seeing it, you're able to walk away without wanting it, you're not the showmen I think you are!

August alone brings these Big Four to you and, in addition, POLA NEGRI in "Compromised," "UNGUARDED WOMEN" (Crosland production with Bebe Daniels, Richard Dix), and "CHANGING HUSBANDS" (supervised by Cecil B. De Mille).

August will be a big month for exhibitors who ride with the Paramount Avalanche.

For Paramount underwrites August with its reputation!

"After Six Days"—Weiss Bros. (Special Showing) Chicago

NEWS—"After Six Days" will take rank with many people as the best presentation that has been made in photoplay art of scenes from the Bible.

Circle, Cleveland

PLAIN DEALER—This film attempts with no little success to portray certain parts of the Old Testament, and while the original script is by far the better of the two, a great deal of that ancient spirit has been transferred to the celluloid.

"Beau Brummel"—Warners Stillman, Cleveland

PLAIN DEALER—Two major points * * * impress the reviewer. The one is John Barrymore's acting as "Beau Brummel" and the other is the method of story telling.

PRESS—John Barrymore never did better for the movies than in his impersonation of Beau Brummel.

Eastman, Rochester

DEMOCRAT AND CHRONICLE—Of course, John Barrymore is the actor extraordinary who lifts the screen characterization of the titular role, an obviously difficult one, to the heights of pantomimic splendor.

HERALD—No fewer than eight striking character portrayals are offered by John Barrymore, the distinguished American actor in the title role of "Beau Brummel." * * *

JOURNAL AND POST EXPRESS—In fact, it would be difficult to think offhand of any one who could take the part of Beau Brummel and turn it into such a living, vital personality as (John Barrymore) did on the screen yesterday.

TIMES-UNION—"Perfection" seems to be the only word adequately descriptive of the impersonation by John Barrymore of Beau Brummel. * * *

"Between Friends"—Vitagraph Gifts, Cincinnati

POST—Striking scenes of gay night life in the artists' quarters of New York City and a good cast make "Between Friends" * * * a fair bit of entertainment.

TIMES-STAR—* * * An adaptation of Robert W. Chambers' story, is a sincere and impressive effort, aided by an excellent cast.

"Birth of a Nation" Garrick, Milwaukee

LEADER—* * * retains to a considerable degree the appeal it registered when first presented about 10 years ago.

NEWS—Although "The Birth of a Nation" was produced about a decade ago, and hundreds upon hundreds of pictures have come and gone since, this epic has lived and by its big reception at the Garrick Sunday, it has proved that it is one of the best ever and never will be forgotten.

SENTINEL—* * * The story is as thrilling now as when it swept millions into the fold of picture fans; the cast is more to be appreciated than before. * * *

"Broken Hearts of Broadway"—S. R. Fox-Washington, Detroit

NEWS—The reckless young millionaire who gives dinner parties for chorus girls, and uses gold vanity cases with hundred dollar notes enclosed as favors, is back on the screen again.

TIMES—The picture, abstractly speaking, would compare in a way to the old type of melodrama that not many years ago was a favorite with the less gentle patrons of the legitimate stage.

"Code of the Sea"—F. P.-L. Metropolitan, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 17)

EXAMINER—But there's a picture on the screen that is a big enough piece of work to stand by itself, with or without vaudeville and even with or without a beautiful theatre. It's an altogether first-rate piece of work. "The Code of the the Sea," it's called.

EXPRESS—"The Code of the Sea" rises to supreme heights of self-sacrifice and moral grandeur. Subtle, indeed, is this intense study of psychology of fear * * *

HERALD—Although Rod La Rocque scores another triumph in "The Code of the Sea," * * * he is closely seconded in the cast by the work of beautiful Jacqueline Logan.

RECORD—The picture is melodramatic and colorful, with plenty of time and money spent in putting a punch into the big storm scenes.

TIMES—Shiver my timbers, but the good old ocean sure does boil and swish in "Code of the Sea!" You can fairly hear its roar down at the Metropolitan this week.

"Conductor 1492"—Warners California, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 17)

EXAMINER—The chances are ninety-nine out of a hundred that you'll get enough laughs to last you a while.

EXPRESS—* * * Johnny Hines fixes up a lot of old timers in the gag game into a melodramatic farce, depending upon the action to gloss over imperfections of story and direction.

HERALD—It starts with a grin and ends up with a laugh and the distance in between is packed full of smiles, chuckles and all the rest of the Joy family.

RECORD—"Conductor 1492" is a delightfully irresponsible bit of light opera. It consists of a plot bubbling over with gags and Johnny Hines.

TIMES—Pull down your trolley when you get as far as the California Theatre this week. It will cost you more than a nickel to see "Conductor 1492," but it's worth it.

"The Confidence Man"—F. P. Capitol, Detroit

NEWS—Thomas Meighan supplies the screen with so many fine pictures that an occasional drop into mediocrity may be passed by without a great show of indignation. * * * Has been produced from a formula that has been going the rounds for years.

TIMES—Honest hokum, and the magnetic acting of Thomas Meighan, put over "The Confidence Man" at the Capitol theatre to the evident satisfaction of large Sunday crowds. * * *

Palace, Montreal

GAZETTE—This melodramatic plot * * * might seem to furnish a poor vehicle for an actor with Mr. Meighan's reputation and talent, but what really is the case is that Mr. Meighan makes of the film a really entertaining and worth while picture.

STAR—The story of the "Confidence Man" is a simple one, not devoid of a certain element of improbability, but relieved from any charge of melodrama by the fidelity with which the principal characters have been drawn. * * *

"Cytherea"—1st Nat'l Rivoli, Baltimore

AMERICAN—You'll be surprised when you discover how artfully they have transferred "Cytherea" from book to screen. * * * the exotic, beautiful and rarely interesting photoplay. * * *

SUN—It provides a sex drama of average merit presented in a fairly interesting manner.

Wisconsin, Milwaukee

LEADER—* * * made a decided hit with everyone, especially the love sick maidens * * *

JOURNAL—Let it be said here for Mr. Fitzmaurice that he has translated Cytherea to the screen with a remarkable combination of strategy and fidelity.

SENTINEL—It is a tale of mature men and women—and intended likewise for mature consumption, dealing as it does with the unconventional romance of a married man who leaves his studly, unromantic wife to elope to Cuba with a social leader.

"Daughters of Today"—1st Nat'l California, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 17)

CALL & POST—"Daughters of Today," playing a single week's engagement at the California, fairly hums with jazz, flappers, sheiks, kisses and the utter abandon of wild youth at its gayest.

CHRONICLE—It's a hectic life they lead—midnight bathing parties, craps, sessions at the most notorious roadhouses, dancing and many more of the present-day means of entertainment.

EXAMINER—"Daughters of Today" deals with the flappers' problems—as a certain producer sees it. College professors and those interested in higher education wouldn't like the picture.

NEWS—None of it is as bad as we've been led to expect. In other words, the dissipation of wild youth are shown discreetly and without undue sensationalism.

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall"— United Artists Auditorium, Baltimore

AMERICAN—Fed up as I am on costumes, courts and the courage that goes with them, I enjoyed "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" a good deal more than I expected to.

SUN (Evening)—It is, to be sure, the sort of picture that adapts itself most admirably to Pickford's particular histrionic equipment.

SUN (Morning)—Even the perils of Pauline pale before the many trials and tribulations of this sixteenth century British maid.

Garrick, Minn.

TRIBUNE—(Morning)—From the opening scene to the final closeup all the color, charm and romance of the Elizabethan age are portrayed with wealth and art of today.

TRIBUNE (Evening)—Same as morning edition.

"Floodgates"—S. R. (Special Showing) Chicago

TRIBUNE—Melodrama spangles the picture with lurid sparks. * * *

Merrill, Milwaukee

LEADER—The film will keep you spell-bound from start to the end. The scenes were taken in and near a small town in the Adirondacks.

NEWS—The flood scenes, the breaking of the dam, is by far the biggest, most thrilling, stupendous climax ever worked out.

SENTINEL—They've opened the floodgates of melodrama as well, in this picture whose climax is a magnificently staged and photographed episode of the blowing up of a dam and the ensuing release of pent up flood waters.

Capitol, Philadelphia

NORTH AMERICAN—John Lowell appears in the stellar role, giving a performance of considerable strength.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—The underlying theme is the eternal struggle between capital and labor, but there are an abundance of thrilling situations which justify its being classed as melodrama. The biggest thrill accompanies the dynamiting of a dam.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—* * * a lively melodrama of conflict in an Adirondack lumber camp, is the feature this week.

RECORD—One of the most spectacular flood scenes that has been shown upon the screen is the thrilling climax of "Floodgates" * * *

Cameo, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 17)

CALL & POST—There are plenty of thrills in "Floodgates," * * * It is a likely melodrama of conflict in a lumber camp and offers much beauty in its scenic "shots" the Adirondacks having been used in the location "shots."

CHRONICLE—"Floodgates," at the Cameo Theatre this week, ought to be good melodrama. Certainly the ingredients which go into it are tried and true.

NEWS—In spite of violent action, fist fights, the deep-rooted hatreds that belong with the melodramatic play, it is still satisfactorily human, believable, and, at all times, sincerely played.

"The Goldfish"—1st Nat'l Chicago, Chicago

HERALD & EXAMINER—Cast upon the screen, "The Goldfish" seems a lot better than it did behind the footlights. It is louder and funnier, and that is just what it should be.

TRIBUNE—Hoydenish, sparkling pantomime is Miss Constance Talmadge's contribution to "The Goldfish" in which this week she is delighting optiences. * * *

"Innocence"—C. B. C.—S. Broadway, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 17)

EXPRESS—Cruelties of circumstantial evidence are dwelt upon in a highly dramatic yet amusing way in "Innocence," * * *

HERALD—While this may not be the picture, it is one that will make money for its producers, as it hits the average tanger's weak spot.

The situation, although essentially "Twin Beds," takes on a seriously dramatic tone in scenes of second climbing, fist fights and carnivals. The picture is replete with tense scenes.

TIMES—* * * aside from being ordinary in theme, has a few highlights more than usual interest.

"King of Wild Horses"—P. Randolph, Chicago

JOURNAL—But there is swift drama novelty to the glorious animal in the of the scene, with glimpses of untrammeled byways and craggy points such as you of going to when your best girl says

"Ladies to Board"—Fox Apollo, Indianapolis

STAR—Mix is one of William Fox's valuable assets. This genial young star probably never heard of High which is capitalized in the absence of a look toward heaven and an impish hush—but he has managed to turn a veritable procession of good box office pictures.

"Let Not Man Put Asunder"— Fay, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—There are a number of society incidents during the progress of the story and these have been done with skill of purpose and lavishness of scenic element. Both of the principals did excellent acting in showing the fallacy of divorce.

"The Lightning Rider"—Hd New Grand, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE—(Morning)—Many situations are unfolded. * * * TRIBUNE (Evening)—Same as morning edition.

"The Marriage Cheat"—1st Nat'l Strand, Cincinnati

POST—If you don't bother yourself with what might have been, "The Marriage Cheat" will prove a good entertainment.

TIMES-STAR—"The Marriage Cheat" is a gripping triangle story acted and beautifully produced.

State, Cleveland

PLAIN DEALER—* * * the film not extraordinary, is exciting, in a way of places a little improbable, but always the average in entertainment qualities. PRESS—Laska Winters makes her debut as a South Sea Island girl in "The Marriage Cheat."

She has life, freshness and spirit makes the role of South Sea Islander seem real in "The Marriage Cheat."

Loew's State, Los Angeles (Week Ending May 17)

EXAMINER—Thrills and excitement for every spectator of the Thomas H. In production, "The Marriage Cheat." * * *

EXPRESS—"The Marriage Cheat" is an unusual feature film, is unusually handled; * * *

HERALD—The story is all absorbed in the theme of triangle love. Marmont is cast in the role of a man who teaches Christianity at a far-flung mission post of the island.

RECORD—It's beautifully filmed John Griffith Wray seems to have the story effectively, and the tropic (which comes up whenever anybody's doors) is convincing, and the shipwrecking.

TIMES—I cannot say that this is a devised or very probable plot, but do not question the situations too soon you will find the tempestuous action in it.

'The Uninvited Guest' Offers Strong Thrills, Good Undersea Photography and Romantic Interest

By GEORGE T. PARDY

THERE'S a little of everything required to appeal to the popular taste in this picture, wonderfully artistic photography, sharp-edged melodramatic thrills, sentimental interest and excellent acting by a fine cast. Director Ralph Ince deserves unlimited credit for his masterly work in handling the production and "The Uninvited Guest" takes rank as a sure-fire box office attraction suitable for all classes of theatres.

For once we are given a story with South Sea atmosphere that doesn't stick to the time-worn trail. Suspense runs high, you can't guess what's coming next, the action swings into the top-notch speed right at the start and keeps going merrily to the finish. Add to this the unfamiliar beauty of the underwater shots in natural colors, easily the best effects yet attained in this phase of screen development and the result is a picture as unique as it is entertaining.

But in making this appeal to the patron's sense of the rare and beautiful; Director Ince has not failed to profit by the old Shakespearean adage—"the play's the thing!" His story isn't sacrificed to mere pictorial charm. It's frank melodrama, alright, but put across with such spectacular punch, and crammed so full of exciting situations that it runs as smooth as a clock and holds the spectators on the keen edge of expectancy up to a well turned and satisfactory climax.

Among the big scenes may be mentioned a red-hot scrap between the hero and brutal Jan Boomer, the demise of the villain in the clutching coils of a giant octopus and the burning of the ship, the latter a peculiarly vivid bit of realism. The tropic stuff is, of course, the best part of the film, but even when the action shifts to a more civilized clime, interest in the fortunes of the principal characters is still maintained.

You needn't be afraid to go the limit in promising your patrons novel and satisfying entertainment when exploiting this feature. Emphasize the entrancing beauty of the undersea scenes with their natural color effects, stress the fight between villain and hero, the battle with the octopus, the story's romantic force and general melodramatic excellence. And play up every member of the cast, with especial notice paid to the work of the new-comer—Jean Tolley.

"Men"—F. P.-L.
Fenway, Boston

ANSRIPT—Save for Miss Negri's tent, glamorous, physical charm and er rediscovered vivacity these closing nees would pall. At it is, they make azard the opinion that Mr. Buchowetski umbed to the idea behind his forth- g film with Miss Negri, and "Com- sed."

Capitol, Cincinnati

ST—The work of Dimitri Buchowetski ecting "Men," Pola Negri's picture, e Capitol Theatre this week, adds to elief that America is far in advance of ees in photoplay productions.

fails even to make the picture compre- ble.

MES-STAR—While interesting as a arative study, it is somewhat disappoint- s an entertainment.

Alhambra, Milwaukee

WS—Pola is the whole picture, which uch of a picture as far as being a e vehicle for Pola is concerned. She o good for a story of that type, * * *

NTINEL—There is an irresistible gla- about Pola Negri, not the pink and white ness of the ingenue, but the bold beauty woman who has lived, that makes it possible to accept her as the heroine story in which all men are victims of a or her.

Strand, Omaha

ORLD-HERALD—She comes closer to ork in "Passion," than in anything else as done since she came to this country.

Missouri, St. Louis

LOBE-DEMOCRAT—Pola Negri, in her e, "Men," reaches the same standard first attracted the American public to and made her seem the most desirable e foreign stars.

ST-DISPATCH—Leaving immorality aside, there is a distinct strain on un- lity in this piece. * * * There is a re- able scene, the students' carnival, a eepiece of picturization.

AR—If the effort reflects little on Buch- zki, it does emphasize the talents of i for she certainly gives a semblance of y to a lot of the most impossible situ- es ever assembled into one sequence.

MES—The picture is slow and the con- y is rather poor. It jumps at the be- ing as though it had been cut a great since the making, and it is difficult o what it is about until it is well under

Columbia, Washington

ERALD—In it Pola Negri again reveals flaming emotional force that character- er enactments in "Passion" and "Gypsy d."

DST—The motional power that Pola i, * * * displayed in such outstanding ections as "Passion" and "Shadows of e" is actually eclipsed by the Pola Negri ashed before audiences * * * in "Men."

AR—The foreign touch of Dimitri Bu- etski, director, is distinct and impelling Men," playing at the Columbia Theatre week, in which Pola Negri portrays lie of a girl who sought revenge on the ulime sex for attempted injustices at their s in her early life.

"Miami"—Hodkinson
Kings, St. Louis

LOBE-DEMOCRAT—"Miami" is one of e best pictures the screen has had in a long e, and Betty Compson does some of the t work of her career as Joan Bruce.

OST-DISPATCH—There are wild par- wild rides, wild gambling houses and e wild swimming * * * and the ending atisfactory for her and for the audience.

AR—* * * unfolds a rapid-fire tale of e-power motors, sleek yachts, palatial res- e and clubs, white beaches, bootleg or and wild parties in the millionaire ny at the Florida resort.

IMES—The film is mostly a display of es and pretty clothes, and has little else to k of. The plot is rather weak, but will ce. The settings are nearly outdoors, ch is a relief from the usual line of stu- scenery.

"The Moral Sinner"—F. P.-L.
Karlton, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—The sentimental part of the is well carried, but to think super-thieves ld try to burglarize in the manner illus- ed seems somewhat ridiculous.

s a whole, however, the picture is enter- ing.

INQUIRER—The fault lies both with the adaptation and the cast. The latter gives the impression of being unutterably bored and enact their parts in a listless and dispirited fashion.

NORTH AMERICAN—The play is smooth, exciting enough, but direction and acting have made it melodrama in more than name only.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—Dorothy Dalton walks off with all the honors of the picture. The acting in the scene of the fire is excellent, but some of the close-ups are too long.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—Dorothy Dalton does her best in the title role, and her characterization of Leah, an unwilling accomplice of her dishonest father, provides probably the chief interest of the picture.

RECORD—Dorothy Dalton, as Leah, daughter of an Austrian crook, has done much better work in other productions where were opportunities suited to her screen ability.

"My Man"—Vitagraph
Downtown Lyric, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—The picture is going over with a bang and the crowds attest to Miss Miller's growing popularity.

"Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model"

Strand, San Francisco

(Week ending May 17)

CALL AND POST—* * * Not a single dull moment, action from start to finish and all of the suspense, thrills and chills of old time melodrama. * * *

CHRONICLE—It is remarkably well done, suspense timed exactly right; cast admirable and working hard for the success of the melo- drama and production beautiful in every way.

EXAMINER—* * * Is obviously what it is—a melodrama of the first water. The Goldwyn Company has taken some of the curse of improbability off the film by indulging in some good comedy.

NEWS—It never claims to be anything other than a story to please, a tale to while away excitingly an idle hour. This it does no less well on the screen than it did for many a day on the stage.

"The Next Corner"—F. P.-L.
Regent, Rochester

DEMOCRAT CHRONICLE—This pic- ture of necessity go down in the history of films as an example of what a poor scenario, or a poor director, or both, can do to a perfectly good cast.

HERALD—In watching it, one feels that some motion picture producer or director had a superfluity of stars standing about the studio and simply had to use them to keep down overhead expenses, or some such thing.

JOURNAL—The naturalness of Miss Mac- kail's acting bespeaks for her a high intelli- gence which should carry her far.

The story itself is ordinary enough.

TIMES-UNION—* * * provides a reason- able amount of entertainment and its story manages to hold the interest even though one does not feel that a dozen or so words of explanation by the heroine would have obviated the major part of her trials and tribulations.

"The Plunderer"—Fox
Monroe, Chicago

POST—"The Plunderer" is a mining story not startlingly unlike many other photoplays written about miners.

The picture is well put on, its story clearly presented and its thrills well staged. It should prove entertaining.

"Poisoned Paradise"—Preferred Strand, Washington

HERALD—In it Service succeeded in de- picting Monte Carlo with the same clarity and force that he depicted Alaska in his earlier writings.

"The Shooting of Dan McGrew"— Metro-Mission, Los Angeles

(Week ending May 17)

EXAMINER—There's melodrama—romance and sheer exquisite drama in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," which opened at the Mis- sion Theatre yesterday.

EXPRESS—A decidedly melodramatic and far-sweeping story in its locales was built up to the point of the actual shooting of that rotter, "Dangerous Dan," in the crowded saloon in the Yukon country.

HERALD—When melodrama, romance, and even high comedy, creep into one picture the result is bound to please. That is exactly what "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" does.

RECORD—The picture will go very well as a money-maker—the title and the cast en- sure that. But one regrets it was not filmed with more sophistication.

TIMES—When they shot "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," they hit the bull's eye! The picturization of Robert W. Service's memora- ble epic of the north * * * drew big crowds. * * *

Delmonte, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—"The Shooting of Dan McGrew" is the most thrilling picture of the year, being the new screen version of the famous Robert W. Service poem.

POST-DISPATCH—As a story, the se- nario never rises above the ordinary, and at times the development is slow.

TIMES—It is just a "sex" affair, this con- stituting its chief element of appeal—the lure of an attractive heroine—Barbara La Marr.

"Singer Jim McKee"—F. P.-L.
Palace, Washington

HERALD—The settings of Hart's new picture are majestic and awe-inspiring, while the story is marked by some of the greatest thrills this player has ever brought to the screen. * * *

POST—In this story Hart reveals a grip- ping and fascinating tale of the modern West, punctuated with all the daring action and breath-taking thrill that Hart brings to the screen so strikingly.

STAR—A thrilling western drama, written and produced by William S. Hart, and in which he appears in the leading role. * * *

"A Son of the Sahara"—1st Nat'l
Rialto, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—It has colorful ro- mance, picturesque desert scenes, flying robes of Arabs and thrilling action.

"The Temple of Venus"—Fox Hippodrome, Cleveland

PLAIN DEALER—The story and theme of this one makes the most curious, jumbled hodge-podge we have ever seen. It deals with the real and unreal, and has fairies, sea- nymphs and gods and goddesses of mythology scattered about promiscuously.

"Three Weeks"—Gold-Cosmop.
Grand Central, Lyric & Capitol
St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—As the "Queen" of the story Miss Pringle achieves a notable per- sonal success and Nagel will please an already large following that he has won through past performances.

POST-DISPATCH—It is well that this piece is not prolonged beyond the hour, for human nature perhaps might stretch under the strain and begin to crack. This is by way of insinuating that "Three Weeks" is some- what rather excessively emotional.

STAR—The settings and photography are of exceptional beauty, and whether one ap- proves of such eroticism or not, the pic- ture holds the attention throughout, some- times breathlessly.

TIMES—Aileen Pringle makes a beautiful queen, but "Three Weeks," which is the pro- gram this week at the Grand Central, West End Lyric and Lyric Skydome and Capitol theatres is a disappointment.

"Triumph"—F. P.-L.
State, Minneapolis

JOURNAL—* * * But now de Mille has turned his undeniable talents to the making of an audience picture, designed to please the family. It is called "Triumph" and it bids fair to be a highly successful offering. * * *

TRIBUNE (Morning)—The theme contains a pleasing romance in which two brothers figure as rivals for the hand of a girl. While not altogether plausible, the picture is in- tensely interesting.

TRIBUNE (Evening)—Same as morning edition.

"The Trouble Shooter"—Fox Rialto, Milwaukee

NEWS—"The Trouble Shooter" is an ex- ample of the reason for Mix's popularity. It is the usual high powered action picture replete in thrills furnished in dare-devil way by Mix and his companion, Tony, the trusty steed.

"True as Steel"—Gold-Cosmop.
Rialto, Washington

HERALD—Rupert Hughes has discussed a daring theme cleverly, subtly and in an original manner in his latest production * * *

POST—The story is told without the use of melodrama or lurid situations. The author has created human, living characters, who live natural lives in a natural way.

STAR—This is a melodramatic tale of wo- men in business and the age-old theme of sex as it affects this modern scheme of life.

"The Uninvited Guest"—Metro
Lyric, Minneapolis

STAR—In addition to a very gripping plot the picture is exceptionally well filmed. Pearl divers, at work, and scenes of the ocean bed in natural colors are included in the film.

TRIBUNE (Morning)—The story takes place in the South Sea islands and contains an unusual plot.

TRIBUNE (Evening)—Same as morning edition.

"Wild Oranges"—Gold-Cosmop.
Stanley, Philadelphia

NEWS—* * * a good old-fashioned fist fight is certain to put a picture over * * *

The story leading up to this bit of excite- ment is rather common-place but interesting just the same.

TIMES—The play starts with a slow tem- po, gradually growing faster as one climax piles on top of another. * * *

Palace, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—Frank Mayo, Virginia Valli and Ford Sterling have the leading roles and do some excellent acting.

INQUIRER—King Vidor, who directed the picture is entitled to much praise for his splendid work, for the story, poorly di- rected, would have fallen flat.

NORTH AMERICAN—The whole story is his attempt to get the girl to his boat in safety, and, slight as the story is, good direc- tion and fair acting have made it eventful and exciting, perhaps overblessed with fires and storms.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—If you have grown tired of the ordinary movie with its repetition and unnatural expression of emotion you will enjoy this picture which is a decided novelty.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—The thrills of the piece are furnished by one of the best screen fights seen recently, fought by the young Bostonian and a man-of-all-work around the girl's home.

RECORD—King Vidor has managed to get some of the psychology of the original story into his adaptation to the screen of Hergesheimer's "Wild Oranges," and this, with the unusually good acting, makes a picture considerably superior to the average run.

"A Woman of Paris"—United Artists
Stanley, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—The art of Charles Chaplin is revealed under unexpected circumstances * * * with the noted comic artist's first ven- ture into the realm of serious drama as the outstanding feature of an entertainment of exceptional merit.

INQUIRER—* * * Chaplin has brought this same understanding of human nature—an understanding that is rare in the average scenario. Again he has taken the failings of man, but to create sadness instead of mirth.

NORTH AMERICAN—* * * Charlie Chaplin has used human beings instead of movie or stage types to people his everyday sort of story, and so sets in motion a drama that is intense and swift and touched at every point with humor.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—"A Wo- man of Paris," slashed as it is, deserves the praise that has been showered upon it wher- ever it has been shown.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—Charlie Chaplin is a good director, but there are others just as good, and some better. His story is not exceptional, the comedy parts are distinctly good, but there are no marks of genius throughout the entire production.

RECORD—Those who were at the Stan- ley Theatre yesterday had reason to feel that they were especially favored. They had the opportunity to see Charles Chaplin's first motion picture production, "A Woman of Paris," which he wrote and directed, * * * business, have been sadly disappointed. It may be that with the welter of politics out of the way a businesslike, constructive program will be carried out. Here's hoping so, anyway.

ANOTHER FIND

Cecil de Mille is all het up. Says he has made "the screen discovery of years." In Vera Reynolds. Who will appear in "Feet of Clay." Here's hoping. And here's reminding: that on the Lasky lot recently. They had another find. Dorothy Mackaill. And then things went wrong. And Miss Mackaill left Famous. Let's watch what happens. To Vera.

FIGURES

One of the reasons. For Harold Bell Wright's success: small town folk eat his stuff by the ream. "When a Man's a Man" had a circulation of 1,400,000 copies; his "The Mine With the Iron Door" twice that amount.

The Lesser's are sticking to the idea of big circulation. Of material for their stars. "Captain January," the Baby Peggy feature, had a circulation of 600,000 in book form, and "Helen's Babies" has been translated into every language.

CLEAN PICTURES

See Carl Laemmle is out after clean pictures. And the Chicago Daily News used it on the radio. Which helped. And he is right. True; these flashy sensual box office titles attract attention. But how far do they really get; once they go too far?

The Hays office has its work cut out. On this line. Right now. Many discussions. Many arguments. And—broadly speaking—producers are inclined to keep in line. But once in a while the traces are strained. Just now particularly.

VACATION DAYS

For F. C. Munroe. Of Hodgkinson. Consisted of going to Washington. And worked with the Red Cross. On the movement for aiding the Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men. He was general manager of the Red Cross during the war days.

Never mind, Munroe. If you didn't get the right kind of a vacation in Washington. You did some good work. And besides, you're coming to the golf tournament—June 4, Great Neck—and the Committee will try and see to it. That you have one real vacation day, anyway.

THE BEERY'S

What's become of them? Wally and his brother? For a time it seemed as though they were in every other picture released. Some folks said they were tired of seeing them. But at all events at present they seem comparatively inactive. Perhaps they are too busy in Hollywood real estate. To bother with pictures.

SOME PAYROLL

Major Thompson of FBO is out with an optimistic statement. Over business conditions. In which he points out that there are 1650 people on the FBO payroll. By Golly, Major, business better had be good. Righto?

THANKS, PROFESSOR

Professor George Humphreys. Writing in "Collier's," says: "Think of the drug habit, of alcohol, of the Saturnalia and other orgies of antiquity, all of which performed the same mental function, though by different means. Then turn and give thanks for the worst of the movies and ten thousand thanks for the fine productions that some producers are now showing us."

COURTESY

Right hand of hospitality offered. To all Americans visiting London. From Clement, Blake & Day, 178 Charing Cross Road.

Who say "come in, use their offices" and make yourself at home. Fine spirit.

TRAVELING JOYS

Not all beer and skittles for Tom Terriss. Who has his company in Spain. Writing from Fuenterrabia, a small town on the border of France. Where he was held up several days. Because his passport was not visé'd properly. As soon as he was freed up Tom drank a toast. For joy. Says he drank one to the old paper also. But you know how it feels. When you're miles away from anywhere. And some good break comes.

BREAKING IN

So Famous will have five pictures in the Strand, Broadway this coming season. Well, well. Wonders never cease. Especially in this business. First National has had a strangle hold on the Strand. For a long time. This deal—mark another for Kent—means the two Valentinos and several others. All maybe it isn't a smart deal for the Strand. Can you imagine the women lining up—waiting for the Valentino picture? Boy, what a mob. Maybe it won't bring in a lot of money; just may.

NAZIMOVA

Bold, bold man Dick Rowland. Giving her another chance. Brave, too. And yet this great artist deserves her place on the screen. If only she can be handled. If only she does have to have her own way. And make bizzare, impossible creations which the American fan cannot understand, does not appreciate and will not have. If Nazimova will only understand that she must be pliable; that she must remain within certain conventionalities and give her artistic understanding and great ability to the camera, then a great picture will result. Who will ever forget her "War Brides" and "Revelation"! What pictures! But all these she took the bit in her teeth—and her pictures never proved up at the box office. Let's hope the Rowland "luck" holds good. We need all the great artistes possible in production—we have few enough as it is.

SYDNEY'S MEMOIRS

When Sydney Cohen relinquishes the sceptre; when he steps off the throne, he may write his memoirs—as leader of the national exhibitor body during the past four years. Offers have been made to publish these interesting recollections, so Sydney says. Well, for one, we would like to read them. And see just how much of the inside Sydney would tell. Could tell, in fact. Because back of the scenery there must have been many interesting moves made. Moves which would mean most unusual reading.

"Why Men Leave Home"

Producer: Louis B. Mayer

Distributor: First National

As a Whole... BRIGHT AND AMUSING COMEDY-DRAMA OF MARRIED LIFE. HAS SOME CLEVER TWISTS AND TOUCHES AND WILL UNDOUBTEDLY APPEAL TO AVERAGE AUDIENCE.

Cast... Lewis Stone good in role similar to that which he had in "The Dangerous Age". Helene Chadwick competent and pleasing as the pleasure-seeking young wife. Does not seem as pretty as usual, probably due to poor make-up. Alma Bennett carries off the flippy-stenographer role with ease and assurance. A lot of wives are going to investigate their husbands' stenographers after seeing Miss Bennett's rather typical and truthful characterization. Mary Carr and William V. Mong suitable but a bit exaggerated as the old couple. Others Hedda Hopper, Sidney Bracy, Lila Leslie, Howard Truesdell.

Type of Story..... Comedy-drama, "Why Men Leave Home", adapted by A. P. Younger from the Avery Hopwood stage play, offers a bright, pleasant entertainment that will please the present day picture audience thoroughly. It has to do with the ever old and always new marital tangle in which the honeymoon figures prominently at the start and the divorce court rings in on the finish but that very brief and conventional-sounding diagnosis doesn't mean to infer that the plot is hackneyed or uninteresting. On the contrary there are lots of new ideas bright twists and clever suggestions that make it entirely interesting and thoroughly amusing. Most folks will like it immensely. John Stahl's direction includes many skillful touches that help make the story especially interesting. In only one or two instances is he guilty of poor judgment but these may be overlooked by a not too conservative patronage. There is an effective moral nicely woven in and brought out in a final title that announces "marriage is like life itself—it has its hard knocks but it's beautiful", or something to that effect.

Box Office Angle.... Title will bring them in and picture will send them out satisfied. What more could you want?

Exploitation.... Shouldn't take up a great deal of your time. Here is one of those bring-'em-in titles that will take care of itself without a lot of extra advertising and exploiting. It readily suggests a spicy, peppy story of husbands, wives, and otherwise and will serve to bring in a curious crowd. Whoever it brings in will go out amused, thoroughly satisfied and probably a lot wiser and better informed on how to be "happy though married."

Direction John M. Stahl; very good.
Author ..... Avery Hopwood
Scenario ..... A. P. Younger
Cameraman ..... Sol Polito

Pola Negri in
"Men"

Paramount

As a Whole.... NEGRI EXCELLENT: BACK TO HER OLD STYLE THAT MADE HER A GREAT STAR AND DRAWING CARD. STORY HAS BEEN TOLD TIME AND AGAIN BUT HER ADMIRERS WON'T MIND THAT.

Star.... When Negri wants to work, when Negri isn't upset with a lot of internal difficulties she troops like a thoroughbred. This she does in "Men." Pity the story wasn't up to her requirements.

Cast.... Few have anything to do that means very much. Robert Frazier allowed to overact considerably, and besides hasn't been given much to make him Mr. Hero. Robert Edeson satisfactory and Josef Swickard excellent, Edgar Norton good in a character part. Others unimportant.

Type of Story.... Good old tried and true material. The girl, tricked and abused, spends her life wreaking her vengeance upon all men, taking their money to help those in need. Finally finds the one man she loves. That's all. But around this trite, old formula Director Buchowetzki shows many clever points. His touches, especially during the first three reels, more than make up for the lack of story. Some of the little things are splendidly handled. They introduce a big student's ball in Paris as the novelty which is supposed to lift the production in box office value. It may. But Negri counts too much personally to need such lavish expenditures where they aren't necessary.

Box Office Angle.... You know what Negri means to you at the box office. If she has been a winner in the past you can count on this one doing better than almost any of her recent ones. It looks in.

Exploitation.... You can make a lot of promises for this one. And you want to do it. Because those who like Negri's work will be more than pleased with this one. Somehow or the other she does better work with foreign directors. Perhaps there is a better understanding. The title lends itself easily to catch lines such as "Would you know about 'Men' then see Pola Negri at the blank theatre." Or "Men"; what they mean to women. Of course you want to know. See Pola Negri at the blank theatre—and learn for yourself."

Direction .... Dimitri Buchowetzki. First American production by the man who made an excellent record abroad. He will do. You'll hear more of him later, that's sure.

Author ..... Dimitri Buchowetzki
Scenario ..... Paul Berne
Cameraman ..... Alvin Wyckoff

"The Signal Tower"

Universal-Jewel

As a Whole..... SPLENDIDLY MADE PICTURE THAT IS ABSORBING FROM START TO FINISH. VERY WELL DIRECTED AND FINELY ACTED. SHOULD GO OVER VERY WELL.

Star.... Especially pleasing and always convincing. Has the ability to really give the impression that she lives the part she plays. Pretty in close-ups.

Cast.... Rockliffe Fellowes does better work than ever before. Especially well suited and handles the role excellently. Very likeable in this. Wallace Beery, always a dependable villain, contributes another of his masterpieces of villainy. Frankie Darrow a clever youngster.

Type of Story.... Drama. James O. Spearing, former photoplay editor and motion picture critic of the New York Times, has written the scenario for "The Signal Tower". And it is a job well done. The continuity is smooth, the development even and increasing in interest and dramatic value as it progresses, and there is a fine amount of really valuable touches which director Clarence Brown, in his careful handling of the story, has brought out splendidly. There is only one fault to be found, and it is difficult to decide who is to blame for it, and that is the introduction of one or two vulgar bits of suggestion in connection with villain Beery's coveting his landlord's wife. The picture will be much better off with the elimination of shots showing Beery in the woman's bedroom looking suggestively at her nightdress. These things don't help to make "clean" entertainment and it's a pity in this case since the rest of the picture is so worth while. There is a tense dramatic plot in which a signal tower operator, in an isolated mountain region, saves the Limited by sticking to his post at the moment when his wife is being attacked. There's good suspense in the climax and a thrill in the train derailment.

Box Office Angle... Should please your patrons. There's a good story, good production, a fine cast and all that is required for a satisfactory entertainment.

Exploitation.... Get your local trainmen and railway telegraphers' organizations to help you exploit this one. The theme deals with the loyalty of the signal tower workers, telegraphers and those in charge of the safe despatch of trains. They'll likely be very willing to help you and get attention themselves. Promise a thrilling story and show a trailer of some of the more exciting moments. The title readily lends itself to stunt advertising.

Direction ..... Clarence L. Brown; on the whole, very good.

Mary Pickford in

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall"

Marshall Neilan Prod.—Unit.

As a Whole... CHARMING, LIGHTFUL. MARY AT HER BEST. THE COSTUME CUES SHOULD NOT SERIOUSLY AFFECT THIS SPLENDID FILM.

Star.... Never better. What has she still far out-trouped almost all of them.

Players.... Generally excellent. Ian Forrest charming as Mary's lover but Clare Eames just quakes up the show and walks away with it as Queen Elizabeth. Others unimportant.

Type of Story.... The best of three "Yolanda's" within the two years, which includes "Knighthood." One of those stories which old English barons, a Scotch Queen, impetuous lovers and silly breaches become involved to be straightened out by the affair between the younger people. A Charles Major story. The best he ever wrote so far as action and interest and unless there are many costume pictures of this type in sight this one should get over very well.

In addition to the beautiful story Miss Pickford has invested this one with a sumptuous production but Marshall Neilan is back with her and the combination is really fine.

Box Office Angle.... You know what Mary's name means in your lig... Unless your people are terribly tired of costume pictures this is definitely "in." Whether it will stand an advanced price scheme remains to be seen.

Exploitation.... Should be a cinch. What between Mary's name, the use of Mickey Neilan's, the sumptuous production, and the delightful love story you have so much work with that definite information as to how it should be used should be unnecessary. You can easily promise this Mary's best among most recent productions. You can appeal to a new class of theatergoers by referring to the excellent characterization by Clare Eames and Queen Elizabeth. Many school students and those who don't generally attend movies will be more interested in this angle.

Direction.... Marshall Neilan; excellent—many laugh-developing situations.

Author ..... Charles M...
Scenario ..... Waldemar Yo...
Cameraman ..... Charles Ros...
Photography.... The Pickford standard—ideal.

Since the publication of Robert Keable's sensational novel "Simon Called Peter" the reading public has been demanding insistently the completion of that remarkable story. Mr. Keable responds to this demand with a new novel, a sequel to "Simon Called Peter," which critics pronounce even greater than its predecessor, and one of the most fascinating love stories of all time—

"RECOMPENSE"

By ROBERT KEABLE

In "RECOMPENSE" the lives of Peter and Julie, familiar to the millions of readers of "Simon Called Peter," develop into a climax that is astonishing—yet inevitable. It happily reflects all the bold courage in telling of life and love that made the author's former novel a storm center of popularity. Frankly, it is the story of what followed that tempestuous week-end in London. And what a situation for the screen! Few love stories are so alluring and unusual as this one.

In its adaptation to the screen WARNER BROS. has added to the story's fine dramatic strength a lavishness of photographic production that words alone could not describe. With players of national repute specially chosen for the many important roles and the usual Warner excellence in staging a production, this marvelous photoplay will rank second to none in the list of big pictures for the year 1924-25. Showmen who are confronted with the necessity of booking the season's best can not afford to be without it.

"Don't Doubt Your Husband"

Metro

As a Whole... ANOTHER MATRIMONIAL ADVENTURE GOES ON THE ROCKS IN VIOLA DANA'S LATEST. BUT THERE'S HAPPINESS AFTER THE WRECK AND STAR AND HER CUTE TRICKS MAKE IT AMUSING.

Star... Is going to make a lot of husbands lose patience because of their inability to give her picture-husband a tip on how to handle her. Always well suited to this particular type of role. Has a lot of pet tricks that she knows how to get over.

Cast... Alan Forrest good as the jealousy-provoking husband and Winifred Bryson a thoroughly innocent "other woman". Others John Patrick, Willard Louis, Adele Watson, Robt. Dunbar.

Type of Story... Comedy-drama. Viola Dana has another thoroughly appropriate vehicle in this original story by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgins. It gives the star all the right sort of opportunities to do her trouping, the type of playing that she does best. This time she's the cute but pesky little newlywed who insists upon distrusting her husband. There isn't a great deal of weight to the theme and there are numerous incidents where the plot would have ended abruptly had the characters involved did some natural things instead of unnatural, but it doesn't matter a great deal since the situations provide amusement and are interesting enough to please the average audience in spite of their slightness. There are times, of course, when you can hardly blame Viola for being peeved and keenly jealous of her husband and his apparent regard for the pretty interior decorator. The star's performance and her own comedy style help immensely to make the picture pleasing and the comedy business is strong enough to make it thoroughly amusing. These domestic comedy-dramas usually pull pretty well with the average, modern audience.

Box Office Angle... Will amuse and please the majority of people. The star is very good in the part she plays and they'll like what she has to do and the way she does it.

Exploitation... You might want to play this up as a "picture with a moral". Tell them it points out the dangers of jealousy and use catchlines such as: "Wives, and prospective wives, Attention! 'Don't Doubt Your Husband'. See Viola Dana in her latest release and you'll know why." "Don't be a jealous cat. You may get the worst of the bargain". Show a trailer of the closing shot where the innocent husband is spanking his jealous bride.

Direction... Harry Beaumont; very good

Authors... Sada Cowan and Howard Higgins

Scenario ..... The same

Cameraman ..... John Arnold

Photography ..... Good

Locale ..... Suburban town

Length ..... About 5,500 feet.

"Napoleon and Josephine"

Film Booking Offices

As a Whole ..... SPECTACLE THAT IS INTERESTING FROM HISTORICAL VIEWPOINT; PRESENTS IMPORTANT INCIDENTS IN LIFE OF NAPOLEON IN CONCISE AND INTERESTING FASHION.

Cast... Gwylm Evans not half vigorous enough as Napoleon but otherwise cast is quite well suited. Gertrude McCoy, a favorite of the old Edison days, capable as Josephine. Jerrald Robertshaw good in character sketch, the Marquis de Tallrand. No names that will mean anything to American audiences.

Type of Story... Historic drama. "Napoleon and Josephine," an English production, is based on the stage play of the same name and deals with the rise and fall of that great historic figure, Napoleon Bonaparte. The story opens with Napoleon's divorce from Josephine and his marriage to Marie Louise of Austria, a union in which he hopes to further his plans for world power. The great Emperor's desire for a son is also fulfilled but at this point he commences the descent in his career. There follows his siege upon Moscow and seeming victory, the burning of Moscow and finally Napoleon's defeat. He is forced to abdicate and is exiled to Elba. He makes one more attempt to regain his throne and musters his men together for one more great battle. There is a meeting with Josephine in which the former Empress, still loyal to Napoleon, saves him from the traitor, de Beaumont. A last farewell to Josephine and Napoleon fights his last battle, Waterloo. The picture closes with the fallen Emperor in his final exile, St. Helena. The film is well edited, concise and events follow in good order.

Box Office Angle... Neither the fact that this is a foreign production nor that it is a costume picture should prevent "Napoleon and Josephine" from interesting American audiences. The thrilling career of Napoleon is graphically presented and should prove interesting.

Exploitation... Naturally this film should be of exceptional value for educational purposes. Consequently you will do well to get the support of local educators and appeal particularly to students in your announcements. Tell them the picture contains the more vital points in the remarkable career of Napoleon. Run a trailer previously and you might mention that Gertrude McCoy, one of the stars of the Edison Picture days, appears in the film.

Direction... Alexander Butler; good but could have made a great picture.

Authors... W. G. Wills & G. G. Collingham.

Scenario ..... Walter Summers

Cameraman ..... Sydney Blythe

"The Woman on the Jury"

First National

As a Whole... EFFECTIVE DRAMATIC SITUATIONS, GOOD PRODUCTION AND CAST AND CONSIDERABLE AUDIENCE APPEAL IN STORY SHOULD MAKE THIS SUITABLE FOR THE BOXOFFICE.

Cast... Capable. Sylvia Breamer has a difficult role which she handles rather well, on the whole. She's not always properly directed but gives the part her best efforts. Frank Mayo is good as the husband, Lew Cody is at his old business of breaking hearts and naturally responsible for the complications in the story. He can be so suave and convincingly deceitful and with such apparent peace of mind. Bessie Love the most unfortunate victim of this butterfly man. Others Mary Carr, Hobert Bosworth, Myrtle Stedman, Henry B. Walthall, Roy Stewart and Ford Sterling, none of whom are important except Sterling who adds some good comedy relief to the long, and somewhat draggy, jury sequence.

Type of Story... Drama. There is good audience appeal in "The Woman on the Jury", adapted from the stage play, and because of this and certain other valuable assets in the light of the box office, should be a good bet for exhibitors. The story deals with a more or less debatable subject and the development may or may not meet with the approval of an entire audience but it is certain to hold the interest of all and the solution and dramatic climax is well handled and furnishes a fitting conclusion to the foregoing situations. Director Hoyt has spent a bit too much footage on the climax, but has wisely injected comedy relief which helps in a measure to keep it from dragging extensively. The picture need not have run seven reels. Upon the advice of his sister, Betty marries Fred Masters without telling him about another affair. Later, as a jurywoman, she discloses the incident in order to save another victim of the same man. Her husband forgives her.

Box Office Angle... Will prove interesting to the average audience. Women, particularly, will find the theme to their liking and their word-of-mouth advertising should help a lot.

Exploitation... There are some interesting angles in connection with women jurors which might be played up effectively in your advertising. You could raise the question of whether or not women make good jurors or whether or not they are influenced through pity, etc. Talk about the good work of the cast and mention the principals. Recall that the story is an adaption of the stage play. Throw-aways in the form of notices for jury duty and properly calling attention to the picture at your theatre should get attention.

Direction... Harry O. Hoyt; good.

Author ..... Bernard K. Burns

Scenario ..... Mary O'Hara

Cameraman ..... James C. Van Trees

"Broadway After Dark"

Harry Rapf Production Warner Bros.

As a Whole... STEP RIGHT! BOOK THIS SURE. HERE'S REAL ONE. DELIGHTFUL HANDLING OF UNIMPOSSIBLE STORY MAKES GREAT ENTERTAINMENT.

Cast... They act like they w human. Adolphe Menjou in one his delightful impersonations of world-weary bachelor who wa a "kick." Norma Shearer never so well. Many others who do excellently. Willard Louis, Eddie Burr, Anna Nilsson—a real cast.

Type of Story... Monta Bell, of a newspaper man, whose director ability was discovered by Char Chaplin, was given the script of a melodrama written by Owen Davis many years ago. He promptly forgot the story and wrote in a new one and it is almost as entertaining and delightful as "The Marriage Circle," and you see the same touches, the same charming quences that made "The Woman in Paris" stand out as a great directorial contribution to the screen. Story? There isn't a story, that nothing to talk about, but where lacks heart interest and could probably stand a dramatic kick here and there still it runs so quickly that you never know that an hour more has gone and you're mighty sorry when the final title comes.

They start this one off with showing a ball of the Actors Equity and there are enough prominent well-known names of legitimate stars plus their photographs to get this a whale of a start. Bell works in a sequence of a theatrical boarding house which is sure to provoke rounds of laughter all along the line. This is one of the best sequences ever put in a picture. Rivoli audiences howled.

Box Office Angle... The title will bring them in. They'll surely find it a pure melodrama but they will go delighted even though they have not seen what they expected.

Exploitation... Better stick to the cast and the title because Monta Bell will mean nothing to your people. If he keeps on at his present rate it will not be long, however, before they will be looking for a name. If your crowd likes any one of these: Menjou, Norma Shearer, Anna Nilsson, Carmel Myers, pitch them up. Don't overlook Willard Louis whose work in "Beau Brummel" is sure to be remembered. It is excellent as a "ham." Play up the title and tell them that it is the story of Broadway. This is always good stuff outside this great city. You can promise that Menjou gives another delightful performance and that Norma Shearer never worked in a better production than she gave as much to a part.

Whole... SOMEBODY TRIED REPEAT "OVER THE HILL" UNDER ANOTHER TITLE—AND DIDN'T DO IT. SOME GOOD THRILL STUFF TRY OVERCOME EXCESS OTAGE.

...Johnnie Walker and Mary Carr together with Cuyler Supples somewhat the same sort of stuff as in "Over the Hill" but the story carried the other way to success this one lacks it. Maria Grey sweet. Others unimpressive.

Type of Story... They didn't leave him out of this one. They have a good homestead stuff, the boy is almost blinded by a blow on his father when he allows his brother to believe that he instead of brother is to blame; you have the "Over the Hill" stuff with Pa Ma being turned into the cold by the ruthless daughter-in-law and then you have the good stuff and Hero Johnnie arrives in time. There is a good thrill in the bursting dam and also in the stuff.

The story takes a long time to get under way because Director Johnson has absorbed a lot of film to plant the atmosphere and the characters of Hero Johnnie, his brother and his stern father. When they get things going it runs much smoother.

There is an open question whether average audience wants as much stuff today as is shown in this. However, the fact that Hero Johnnie in the Salvation Army allows an exploitation stunt by using famous Salvation Army crullers, this might help out.

Box Office Angle... Emory Johnson made a name for himself with certain type of material and those who like him will undeniably want to see his latest, especially in view of the fact that Mary Carr and Johnnie Walker are featured. This should have some pulling power.

Exploitation... You can do a lot of things with the title. F. B. O. might a battery of machine guns to play as a bally-hoo stunt which attracted much attention and you can do the same thing or in some way tie up with your local recruitment office. Use a trailer of the war, bursting dam and rescue. It should bring them back. You can start an essay contest with school children for the best two hundred word expression on "What is the Spirit of the U. S. A." and clip in your local newspaper so they print all the replies. This can be materially helpful.

"The Masked Dancer"

Producer: Eastern Prod., Inc.
Distribution: Principal State Rights

As a Whole... HELD PROMISES OF BEING ORIGINAL AND INTERESTING AT THE START BUT ENDS ABRUPTLY JUST ABOUT THE TIME YOU'RE BEGINNING TO THINK THEY'RE TAKING TOO LONG TO GET STARTED.

Cast... Helene Chadwick not pretty even in the few scenes in which she appears without a mask. Lowell Sherman's ability for heavy parts goes to waste. He hasn't a chance to use it. Leslie Austin fairly suited as the husband who didn't recognize his own wife. Joseph King not at all necessary to the story. Arthur Housman and Charles Craig also come under this heading.

Type of Story... Drama. There's a keen disappointment in "The Masked Dancer". It starts off in a manner that promises a decidedly interesting dramatic offering and presents the situation wherein a wife becomes a cabaret dancer, and being masked, succeeds in ensnaring her own husband, as a means of regaining his love. There is also a Rajah who threatens to add fine dramatic complications. But it all goes blooey and just about the time you feel inclined to worry about the loss of time and waste of footage in getting into the story, there comes an abrupt ending. Had they managed to work the idea out to some sort of a plausible and interesting conclusion, it would have furnished a fairly good entertainment. As it is the story is absurd. No one will be convinced that a husband could fall in love with his own wife without recognizing her, much less the further absurdity furnished when you are given to understand that they spent the night together. This falls way short of being logical and is surely disappointing after the good start it has. There is a possibility that the picture would be the better with reediting and a new set of subtitles. The present ones are poorly written.

Box Office Angle... Enough for you to talk about to bring them in but if they're at all critical they'll be disappointed that the story doesn't hold to its promises.

Exploitation... The title is a good one for the box office and displayed in conjunction with stills showing Helene Chadwick in her dancing costume will surely serve to bring them in, especially those who follow up pictures that promise a bit of a sensation. You can use the names of Helene Chadwick and Lowell Sherman, although the latter has little to do. You might see this one to make sure that you don't go wrong on it, either way.

"The Reckless Age"

Universal Jewel

As a Whole... PLEASING COMEDY ROMANCE THAT OFFERS GOOD AMUSEMENT; SATURDAY EVENING POST STORY PROVIDES DENNY WITH GOOD MATERIAL.

Star... Pleasing and will "get" the flapper crowd especially; makes fine screen lover and offers some good fights and he-man stuff for those not keen on the romance angle.

Cast... Ruth Dwyer an engaging heroine and quite pretty. Rolls her eyes a trifle too much. Suitable cast that includes Fred Malatesta, Hayden Stevenson, Tom McGuire, William Austin, John Stepping, Frank Leigh.

Type of Story... Comedy-romance. "The Reckless Age" is an adaptation of Earl Derr Biggers' Saturday Evening Post story "Love Insurance." It provides Denny with first rate material generally and gives him a role that suits him very well. He must have gained a considerable following for his work in the "Leather Pushers" series and other Universal features such as "The Abysmal Brute" and "The Kentucky Derby," so that as the star of "The Reckless Age" it should be easy to get your folks interested in him. The story is a peppy little piece dealing with the adventures of an insurance agent whose job is to see that a certain English Lord's marriage is carried out, otherwise the insurance firm, which has insured the Lord against the failure of the girl to fulfill her part of the agreement, will stand a loss. Naturally hero falls in love with the girl but duty comes first and he tries his best to have the wedding go through even when he realizes the girl loves him and not the Lord. There are any number of amusing complications that afford a good many laughs. The picture is not hilarious comedy but it is first rate amusement. It could have been shorter.

Box Office Angle... Will satisfy where they like pictures that amuse. Situations are rather novel and afford laughs that make it enjoyable.

Exploitation... There's a good chance here to get your local insurance companies working for you. They can put over a campaign for themselves and at the same time help you in exploiting "The Reckless Age" and advising people to insure themselves against all kinds of losses. Arrange all the tie-ups possible in this connection. It should be effective advertising. Be sure to mention the original title of Earl Derr Biggers' story and the fact that it appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Boost the star's name.

Direction... Harry Pollard; good, but a bit too long.

Author... Earl Derr Biggers

"The Fire Patrol"

Producer: Hunt Stromberg
Distributor: Chadwick Pictures Corp.

As a Whole... THIS ONE SPELLS MONEY, MONEY, MONEY RIGHT IN THE LITTLE OLD BOX-OFFICE. DUST OFF THE S. R. O. SIGN AND GET READY.

Cast... So many well-known names in this cast that it looks like a blue book of film favorites. Anna Nilsson, Madge Bellamy, Helen Jerome Eddy, Johnny Harron, Jack Richardson, Charles Murray, Hank Mann, Bull Montana—there isn't room for any more and they all do mighty good work excepting Harron who falls short of the requirements of the role.

Type of Story... The only thing that spells sure-fire box office that Producer Stromberg left out of this picture was the rescue of a baby girl from the fifth story of a burning building by Mr. Hero. Otherwise he has all of the well-known definitely established money pulling, entertainment satisfying stunts and thrills that the good old-time mellers have had and have always cashed in on. The title is not particularly good because there is nothing whatsoever in the picture that deals with what many people will think—that is a fireman's story or the story of a fire. Rather, it is the experiences of a coast guard and its full of action. Almost too much. Incidentally, the prologue shows some of the finest direction seen for a long time. The closing reel showing the blind sea captain left alone on a cliff almost tottering over, with suspense built up by his son driving furiously to his rescue, is really good and the manner in which the villain meets his end is all that is necessary for the old-time gallery gods to shout, whistle and stamp. The last few shots might well be cut.

Box Office Angle... Unless your crowd likes high-brow stuff, this one is in and way in. It's a movie plot for movie audiences by someone who knows something about movies. It's not a great picture but should be a good money-getter.

Exploitation... By all means secure a trailer. Show the very effective sequences of the suicide of the captain's wife, of the blind sea captain on the edge of the cliff and his son driving wildly to his rescue. This will surely bring them back. You have so many good names to work with that it's almost impossible to single out any of them for special mention but you can say that Madge Bellamy is as sweet as always and Helen Jerome Eddy gives an outstanding performance. Get your paper showing Charlie Murray, Bull Montana, Hank Mann and Billy Franey as members of the fire patrol.

Type of production.....2 reel kid comedy.

Hal Roach's gang of laugh-getters become involved in a baby show in "Cradle Robbers." The show is held for a charity benefit and a prize is issued for the fattest baby. The gang bring their little brothers and sisters but to no avail. So they finally hit upon the plan of dressing Joe Cobb, the little fat boy, up as a baby. Joe is very funny, babbling baby-talk and sucking his thumb but he rebels at having two old ladies kiss him, runs away, and is chased by a cop. This bit is sure to make a hit. The gang finally decide to hold a baby-show of their own—borrow all the babies in the neighborhood—scare the mothers to death—and finally are caught. This brand of comedies is always a sure box-office hit.

"One Good Turn Deserves Another" Aesop Fable—Pathe

Entertaining Cartoon

Type of production..1 reel animated cartoon.

A little pup is befriended by a mouse who cuts a tin can off the doggie's tail. In return, the dog saves the mouse when a swarm of cats are about to kill him. That's the basic idea, but Paul Terry has enlarged upon it with clever animation and cute little tricks of expression and the finished cartoon is entirely entertaining as a result.

"Raggedy Ann"—De Forrest Phonofilm

Synchronization of Music and Action

Type of production 1 reel novelty

This reel shown at the Rivoli was received very well. Where the other DeForest films have synchronized voices with the action of the film, this one shows a jazz band in action and the sound of the music is perfectly synchronized with the musicians' playing. The selection played is "Raggedy Ann," from the musical comedy "Stepping Stones." The De Forest invention should prove a great boon to small houses where large orchestras are unknown or are impracticable.

"The Powerful Eye"—Universal A "Different" Western

Type of production 2 reel western

This stars Pete Morrison but differs from the average run of westerns in that there is no sign of the usual cattle or horse thief. Pete is, of course a cowboy. A hypnotist comes to town, and gives a performance. This is quite funny, giving flashes of the audience members of which are called upon the stage and become hypnotized. After the show Pete buys a book which gives instructions in hypnotism. He practices on a donkey—but fails to get results. He then practices on the boys and they kid him into believing he has put them to sleep. Next he tries to hypnotize his rival and gets into a fight but wins the girl when he is knocked out. The scene in which the boys go to sleep, presumably hypnotized should have a title explaining to the audience that they are merely fooling. Otherwise, this is quite amusing.

"Tootsie Wootsie"—Christie Educ'l A Wonderful Kid in This

Type of production 2 reel comedy

There's a baby in this that will make every woman in your audience exclaim and every man think. It's just a baby about six months' old—can't talk or walk—but the director has, probably with infinite time and patience—gotten almost every kind of expression on that baby's face that can be registered. She even yawns with presumable boredom at the right time. The story is slight—father and mother dance to make the baby stop crying, while the man downstairs holds his head from the noise. Father goes to the office, but hurries home in the middle of the day. The cops see his speed—think he's crazy and follows him, only to find that he isn't crazy but daffy about the baby. In addition there are some very laughable sequences—one in which the janitor tries to catch a mouse, and another that will bring some shrieks when the baby supposedly climbs out onto a ledge. They substitute an older child here but they may not notice that. At any rate, this is a very good comedy.

Pathe Review No. 22 Up to Standard

Type of production 1 reel magazine

Scenic views along the course of a placid river open the reel. An interesting subject is entitled "Antiques Up-to-Date" and picturizes the manner in which plaster statues are treated so that they are to all appearances real antique bronzes. A slow motion bit shows a clever dancer performing with much grace. Pathe color views show a village tucked away in a valley of the French Alps.

Stillman on Revival Policy (Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Cleveland—The Stillman, is going in for revivals following the engagement of "Girl Shy." This policy was successful last summer. Summer prices will prevail.

Horwitz Has His Eighth Under Way (Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Cleveland—M. B. Horwitz, of the Washington Circuit, announces that he is building his eighth picture house at Hough Ave. and East 79th St. It will seat 1000 and will be finished by Nov. 1.

Another First Run for Cleveland

Cleveland—The Homestead Theatre Co., operating a chain of four first run houses, will build a new house at Kinsman Road and East 142 St. It will have 1,000 seats.

Hollywood Previews

As productions are invariably cut after previewing, a general idea of each picture only is given, rather than a complete analysis. The usual review will appear when the picture is shown in New York.

"The Sea Hawk"

Frank Lloyd Production
First National

This is slated as one of the big ones on the First National series for the fall—it is more than that—it will be one of the biggest pictures offered to exhibitors between September and January. It has a sustained interest for all types of audiences and looks like a certain box office bet.

In the first place, "The Sea Hawk" is a fine picture story. That's important; but in addition, no item has been overlooked in the production to make it contain every audience essential. The sea stuff and Algerian locale both teem with action and interest. The first three reels need snapping up, but this will undoubtedly be done before the negative is finally cut down. The cast includes Milton Sills, Enid Bennett, Wallace Beery, Wallace McDonald, Buster Collier and Lloyd Hughes. Sills and Beery easily romp off with acting honors.

Sabatini's books run into many editions. The fact that his stories really get a large circulation is a fact that should not be overlooked. Aside from that, the story has been running in serial form in many important newspapers throughout the country.

"The Sea Hawk" is certain to hit—it is an extended run picture that will compete with the big ones for the new season. It is the biggest thing that has been produced since the first of the year on the coast for next season's release. And from a knowledge of coast producing plans, there is nothing else as big planned at the moment.

Dorothy Devore in "Hold Your Breath"

Christie Prod.—Hodkinson

The initial Christie feature for Hodkinson is a nice thrilly comedy, some drama interspersed to help the story. It lends itself very easily to exploitation, and the latter, combined with the merit of the picture, will put it over in satisfactory shape.

There are some exceptional comedy "gags," and Dorothy Devore climbs up the side of a building to provide plenty of excitement. The star is pleasing, and is aided by Walter Hiers and Tully Marshall. The titles, credited to Joe Farnham are excellent, and provide nearly as many laughs as the action.

Audience values have been built into this one, and exhibitors should experience no difficulties in doing very well with it. The amount of business done depends entirely on the amount of exploitation given for the engagement.

Harry Carey in

"The Lightning Rider"

Hunt Stromberg Prod.—Hodkinson

This picture is far above the average in which Harry Carey has starred, and will satisfy those audiences that lean toward the action pictures. The picture shows more production values than is general with offerings of this type, and should break into those big houses that cater to audiences desiring action.

The story is laid in a small world along the Mexican border, and provides plenty of fast riding and intrigue. Carey does some good work in this one, and he has a capable supporting cast.

WOLVES

By DANNY

There is a certain type of man who will never learn. You need whip or a club—to get him to understand some things. There is no thank God—only a few of them remaining in this business. There is no room for them. And the quicker they are driven out the better.

There are promises to be more pronounced in the East than for some time. During this summer. With the advent of picture people from the East a few of these wolves have been seen at their appearance. Even this they are at work. And unless they are choked off quickly much of the sensational scandal will be sent to the picture industry.

Within the past week these wolves have shown their ugly heads. One of them, a small producer, wanted to arrange an appointment with a well known leading woman for a part in his picture. He wanted to see her wardrobe. She was willing to bring it to the studio. This he wouldn't do. He wanted to see her when they were alone in her apartment some evening.

The other wolf appeared when a 15 year old girl reached his office—sent there by a well known director. In the hope of having her get a start. This particular louse wanted to take his 15 year old child to dinner and then to come to his studio at 10.30 that evening for a test. Instead, she told her priest.

Data relative to each of these cases can be placed in the hands of the Hays office. And something should be done.

They are on a diet. But it will be hard to bite this week. Because of the up in Bawsting. Yes; where beans and Alfred Black come in. Also the sacred codfish. And this atmosphere we're going to see on politics. And listen to the words of a lot of exhibitors. Maybe a bit. Hope to learn a lot.

Duty Off "Props"

Producers Can Now Import Costumes Under Bond, Without Paying Import Levy

Through the effort of the Hays organization, all producers who import costumes or "props" will not have to pay import duty on such articles, based on the assessed valuation. For some time, theatrical organizations bringing in costumes and articles of furniture have done so under a six months' bond. There has been no duty and when the company left the States or sent the costumes to the country of origin, the bond terminated.

The costumes imported from France for "Monsieur Beaucaire" cost a famous tidy sum of money in duties aside from the actual purchase price. In the future, however, a bond will be granted and when the picture is completed, the articles will be sent abroad, either to their owner or for re-sale.

Double Tax on Canadian Theatres

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Assiniboia, Sask.—A civic amusement tax of 10 per cent has been placed on all local theatres in addition to the provincial tax. Throughout Saskatchewan, theatres are laboring under the double tax system as a result of the action of the Provincial Legislature some months ago to permit the cities of the Province to collect a tax of their own if they desired.

Colorado Springs, Colo.—For the fifth time in eight years efforts made to repeal the Sunday closing law have failed. The present attempt was lost overwhelmingly. ## May Stop Production

Cry For Bigger Pictures May Prompt Ideal to Distribute In England Only

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

London—There is a possibility that Ideal Films, Ltd., one of the most prominent of the English producing and distributing concerns may abandon production and devote its energies to distribution.

No decision has as yet been reached, but the reason that prompts consideration of such a step is understood to be a realization of the fact that English producers cannot afford to make pictures on a scale commensurate with American and German competition, because the revenue obtainable from England does not warrant such high negative costs. Ideal is, therefore, considering handling a number of pictures of American and other origin purely as a renter.

Talk of O'Toole

Considered as Likely Successor to Cohen as President of the M. P. T. O. of A.

By Danny

Boston—Members of the executive committee of the M. P. T. O. of A. will clean up their work today. Then all will be set for the opening of the sixth annual convention of the national exhibitor organization tomorrow morning.

As usual there is considerable discussion in the lobby of the Copley-Plaza headquarters as to who will succeed Sydney S. Cohen as national president. M. J. O'Toole, chief aid of Mike Comerford, who operates an important chain in Eastern Pennsylvania, is being given a lot of consideration among the wiseacres, although it is admitted that it is too early to have any definite information along this line. Pete Woodhill is also coming in for a lot of talk, as is Smith of Ohio.

O'Toole has done a lot of fine work for the national organization and is head of the public service department. He is a former newspaper man with a long background in politics, and in many ways is regarded as a logical successor to Cohen. For a long time he was close to Cohen and advised him with regard to many matters.

The executive committee will materially elaborate the program arranged a short time ago which calls for the following:

Tuesday

Opening of the convention at 11 A. M.

Address by the Mayor of Boston and other dignitaries.

Convention business session.

Wednesday

The Fighting American (Universal—Five Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

WHEN WILLIAM ELWELL OLIVER responded to Universal's intercollegiate scenario-competition scholarship and won it with "The Fighting American," he turned out something which stands as a distinct credit to the screen and its sponsors in awarding him the prize. Here is an instance where we may enjoy keen satire over the time-worn formula of the indomitable, indefatigable, irrepressible, inimitable American who since the days of Frank Merriwell's ancestors, has bounded through pages of fiction and, who, for the past decade, has bounded across the screen, overcoming all obstacles in his protection of the Only Girl—and conquering her and his rivals through sheer pluck and perseverance.

It is time that someone had sufficient sense of humor to make him a figure of comedy. And we are praising Universal in the same breath for appreciating the fact that this high and mighty character might serve in some other capacity than as a dispenser of heroic buncombe. They have taken this clever satire and produced it in the spirit in which it is written—and it shapes up as one of the comedy gems of the season. And there is nothing faulty in its construction. The author does not overshoot the mark in having his young colliariate chase his sweetheart to China and rescue her from comic-opera revolutionists. Indeed the scenes up to the climax have a genuineness about them. One can gauge from this that the comedy isn't broad slapstick, but conquers through its deft satire.

The adapters and director have kept it sparkling with adventurous but always amusing incident which is entirely within bounds. It is founded upon the oft-employed idea (which the author proceeds to

"Bluff"—F. P.-L. McVicker's, Chicago

AMERICAN—This is the worldly and rather light story which you find well served here. It makes an interesting film.
JOURNAL—The picture is a pleasing jest, adequately panoplied from every angle and with sufficient simplicity of theme to be altogether entertaining.

Madison, Detroit

NEWS—There is just an average amount of interest and merit in "Bluff," a short little society film story. * * *
TIMES—* * * Miss Ayers, in the leading role, will provide plenty of gasps and thrills while she winsomely winds her way through a series of episodes, stunningly arrayed in costly and daring gowns.

Garden, Milwaukee

NEWS—The best part of "Bluff" is the little lesson it teaches. You can bluff your way it's true, but the insincerity of the thing is bound to get you sooner or later.
SENTINEL—* * * The heroine of "Bluff" is not the only one who indulges in that commodity. Sam Wood has done his share of bluffing to make the thin fabric of this rather amusing story by Rita Weiman and Josephine L. Quick into even as pleasing a picture as it is.

BULLETIN—* * * Places the new screen version of this old stage and screen favorite in the class of entertaining and successful photoplay.
INQUIRER—* * * Is a very pleasant and very well executed adaptation of the story which has won so much favor with readers and the followers of the spoken and the silent drama.
PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—A novel and thoroughly entertaining treatment of the slightly aged "Pollyanna" plot makes "The Dawn of a Tomorrow" * * * an enjoyable film.
PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—"The Dawn of a Tomorrow" from start to finish furnishes an interest not to be drawn from all pictures of today.

"Drums of Jeopardy"—Truart Fay's, Rochester

JOURNAL AND POST EXPRESS—It is a pleasing combination of star and author, Elaine Hammerstein and Harold McGrath, that has been made in "Drums of Jeopardy." * * *

"The Enchanted Cottage"—1st Nat'l (Preview) Ritz Carlton, Chicago

NEWS—The story of "The Enchanted Cottage" is one that takes you gently by the throat and shakes the tears from your eyes while your lips smile.

Metropolitan, Washington

HERALD—* * * A beautiful camera version of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's stage success. * * *

POST—A love story so exquisite that it can not be adequately chronicled in a necessarily hurried newspaper report, is on view this week in Crandall's Metropolitan theatre.

STAR—A refreshing quality of this story is that it tells of a hero who is not a matinee idol in appearance and a heroine who is distinctly plain.

"Excitement"—Universal World, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—The action is so wild; so exaggerated with hokum, that we expected to learn it was all a dream and when we realized that it wasn't, we just felt sorry for Laura.

"The Fighting Coward"—F. P.-L. Miles, Detroit

TIMES—* * * a fast-moving romantic drama of the old south from the popular Booth Tarkington stage success, "Magnolia," * * *

"Fool's Highway"—Universal Strand, Montreal

STAR—The film is chiefly noteworthy for the marvellous way in which the old Bowery district of thirty years ago has been reproduced upon the screen.

"Girl Shy"—Pathe Sun, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—If you want to laugh and laugh and laugh, see Harold Lloyd's latest picture, "Girl Shy," at the Sun.

Rivoli, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—The dictionary gives the definition of bashfulness as "shrinking modesty." But our definition, after viewing Harold Lloyd's latest comedy, "Girl Shy," at the Rivoli Theatre, is that bashfulness is decidedly a subject for expansive laughter.

STAR—It is as good as anything Chaplin has done, ranging from smiling farce to guff-awing slapstickery, with a touch of heart interest, a little drama, and a breakneck chase such as has never before been seen in the movies.

"Greatest Love of All" Circle, Indianapolis

STAR—"The Greatest Love of All" is a picture in which human nature element is predominant.

"Grit"—Hodkinson Empress, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—* * * is not as good as it might have been. * * * has a rather weak and poorly developed crook theme.

"Icebound"—F. P. L. Strand, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE (Morning)—This story of a New England family, who were as cold, hard and "icebound" in their natures as the rocky farm on which they lived, has been transferred to the screen by a capable cast of film players.

TRIBUNE (Evening)—Same as morning edition.

"The Man Life Passed By"—Metro Park and Mall, Cleveland

PLAIN DEALER—Maybe this film will appeal to you as being "real" and "life," or in some way will approximate those necessary points. If it does, you'll like the film. My objection is that it has too much celluloid and not enough vitality.

PRESS—The director apparently labored under the impression that every scene is a climax. As a result the picture is a succession of hand-clenchings and chest-heavings with sub-titles to match.

"When a Man's a Man"—1st Nat'l Princess, Milwaukee

SENTINEL—* * * "When a Man's a Man" has been given a first rate production by First National, not the least of its virtues being that the original text has been closely adhered to. There is some excellent riding in it and a fine picture of western ranch life.

"Why Men Leave Home"—1st Nat'l Orpheum, Detroit

TIMES—* * * A daring domestic drama with a powerful moral. * * *

Presbyterian Church Favors Governmental Agency to Check Up on Industry

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Grand Rapids, Mich.—A fight to curb the motion picture industry will be launched by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, in meeting here.

Important figures in the Assembly made the statement that they consider the industry a blight and one of the greatest menaces to the growing youth of the country. For that reason, a campaign will be started to secure a sort of Federal control.

When Will Hays left New York last week, he was scheduled to go to Grand Rapids to attend the meeting of the General Assembly. Hays is an elder in the Presbyterian church.

A well-posted man yesterday was asked to discount the importance of the statement made in Grand Rapids. Courtland Smith was out of town and could not be reached for a comment.

No Chance in Boston for Political Manoeuvres—Solid Working Program Drawn Up By Committee

By DANNY

Boston—What promises to be the most harmonious convention in the history of the M. P. T. O. of A. will start this morning at 10:30.

There is not a cloud upon the horizon. There is every indication that the workings of the convention will be so smooth that if anyone dares to ruffle the waters, there will be no place for him at the gathering. It is distinctly a harmonious group. Those who are opposed to the prevailing idea of harmony are on the outside.

From the moment the convention opens, there will be work and work and work. There will be no lunch time today. The program calls for visiting ladies and others to take a trip to the historical points near Boston through the courtesy of the Grand-Asher Distributing Corp. Any visitors may go but most of the delegates will stay on the job.

Cohen Optimistic Believes Convention Will Establish a New Era for the National Exhibitor Organization

(Staff Correspondence)

Boston—Before Sydney S. Cohen went into the joint meeting of the Executive Committee and of the Board of Directors in an effort to complete the program for the annual gathering of the M. P. T. O. of A. he said:

"I believe we are on the threshold of a most interesting convention which should prove the material value of exhibitor organization. We will have a constructive business session and nothing else. There are many matters of importance which will come up for consideration, but it will be within the province and direction of the executive committee to map out that program.

"There have been a number of statements issued from various sources as to the strength of the na-

To the Hundreds of Exhibitors Who have Wired and Written for Quo- tations on THE FAMOUS FORTY:

I knew Paramount had something exceptional in THE FAMOUS FORTY. I knew our line-up would appeal to every ounce of showmanship and profit-knowledge you possess.

But in my fondest dreams, I'll admit I never hoped the response to Paramount's announcement of Fall product would be so instant and overwhelming as it has been.

When I returned to New York the other day, I found my desk piled high with wires and letters from exhibitors all over the country asking for quotations on THE FAMOUS FORTY. I brought a bag full with me from the Coast. And every mail and messenger boy has been flocking in with more.

We're literally snowed under!

We've closed lots of very important contracts. We're closing lots more of them every day. If the salesman hasn't been around yet to sign you up, it's because he's only human and can work only twenty-four hours a day.

But don't worry. You'll get your chance. Particularly if you've been playing Paramount right along. Naturally we're giving our old friends first crack at this gold mine.

Meantime, thanks for the wires and letters you're sending. They'll be rewarded—in dollars of FAMOUS FORTY profits.

almost absolutely certain that the convention will come to a close on Thursday night. Strange as it may seem at a national exhibitor convention, there was very little talk yesterday and last night in the lobby of the Copley-Plaza with reference to who will succeed Sydney S. Cohen as president. The strongest outstanding candidate is, as noted in yesterday's issue, Michael J. O'Toole of the Comerford interests of Pennsylvania.

There was considerable talk of J. W. Walsh of Hartford, Conn., but comparatively little was heard relative to candidates otherwise mentioned preceding the convention. There is not a chance that Mike Comerford will accept the nomination—he is too busy.

When Glenn Harper arrived from California yesterday afternoon and was told that his name was being used with reference to the coming election, he grinned broadly. There are several others whose names have been mentioned, but at the moment O'Toole seems to have the inside track.

Gov't Officials to Talk

(Staff Correspondence)

Boston—Among the speakers scheduled to speak at the dinner will be Brigadier General Malvin H. Barnum, commanding the 18th Infantry, who will speak on "The Educational Value of Pictures in Promoting the Interest of the Citizens Military Training Camps." There will also be another speaker from the Army and one from the Post Office Department.

Ind'pts To Attend

Important Members to Attend Exhibitor Convention in Boston—Leave Today

Important members of the I. M. P. P. D. A. will attend the sessions of the M. P. T. O. A. at Boston. It is understood that they feel that the line-up of product offered by state right producers this year eclipses anything of like nature that they have ever made and for that reason they will strive to impress exhibitors in Boston with this fact.

Jack Cohn and William Steiner left last night. The group that leaves this morning will include: Oscar Price of Tri-Stone Pictures; Whitman Bennett; W. E. Shallenberger and W. Ray Johnson of Arrow; Joe Goldstein of Canyon Pictures; Jesse J. Goldberg, of Independent Pictures; John Lowell Russell of Russell Prod. and Charles B. Hoy, of the Hoy Reporting Service.

New York Group Arrives

(Staff Correspondence)

Boston—Three car loads of New York exhibitors and others interested in the film industry through affiliated enterprises arrived here at 8:40 last night (New York time). The cars were attached to the regular train which left New York at 3 o'clock, daylight time.

Sam Sonin was in charge of all arrangements. Sam was busy before the train pulled out and all the way up. He admitted it.

Edward M. Saunders and James R. Grainger of Metro-Goldwyn were in the group, practically the only two sales managers in a hot-bed of exhibitor discussions.

The party included:

Sam Schwartz and wife, Charles Schwartz and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Goldberg, Harmon Yaffa and wife, J. Stern and wife, Adolph Barr and wife, Max Barr and wife, John Mannheimer and wife, Rudy Saunders, wife and daughter, Sam Lesselbaum, Sol Raives, Otto Lederer, Hy Gainsboro, Lee Ochs, Lou Geller, Hyman Rachmil, Sam Rintzler, Morris Needles, J. Rosensohn, L. Greenfield, Charles Crinides, Jack Schwartz, Charles Steiner, Harry Zuckman, Clarence Cohen, I. Cohn, Louis Grob, Leo Rosenblatt, B. Herman, Louis Rosenthal, Sam Sonin, Gaffney of the American Seating Co., Ryan of Wurlitzer Organ Co., Norden of the Norden Sign Co., Hornstein, of Howells Cine Equipment, Felder of Bio Carbons, Charles Goetz, of Dependable Exchange and Sam Zierler of Commonwealth.

It is expected that the New York delegation at Boston will total 85. Some exhibitors left on Sunday by automobile and others on the Sunday boat. The last group is scheduled to leave today.

Organization

By DANNY

Convention Headquarters, The Copley-Plaza.

Since the good old days—back in Nehf's times. There has been talk of exhibitor organization on a national scale. And, intermittently, and in between times, there has been some sort of a national group of exhibitors. Usually, except for the past few years, these national exhibitor organizations were on paper. But it was hard to locate them elsewhere.

Then came Cleveland. United under the cry of producer-distributor domination of the exhibition field exhibitors and showmen grouped together. And the M. P. T. O. of A. started. This is not the time—or place—to go into any extended discussion of exhibitor politics, manipulation, war cries or what not. But that very element which disrupted former exhibitor organizations found its way into the M. P. T. O. of A. And that was simply this: who's going to run it, and why?

NOTHING BUT POLITICS

Almost from Chicago there developed political differences. And these were not helped by subsequent gatherings such as Minneapolis, Washington, and last of all, Chicago last spring when the famous walk out occurred. Every convention seemed to be occupied with the same idea—politics. Not but that some other work was done. Indeed, some laudable and worthwhile matters have been taken up and worked out by the national organization. The pity of it is that having accomplished some of these things that the work was left at this point and the remainder of the time was taken up with politics.

HAS THE TIME ARRIVED?

And because this has happened. And because there is today a disorganized group of exhibitors rather than one national group, isn't it time that politics quit and a united, real, workable national organization of exhibitors arise from the ashes? If this isn't the time, when will someone please say, will that time occur?

It is not too late. There is much time. And there is much patience. But there must be something done to awaken the be-

Mike Comerford Admits a Feels and Urges Co-operation From the Industry

(Staff Correspondence)

Boston—Mike Comerford National Board of Directors of P. T. O., on the eve of the convention issued the following statement:

"The M. P. T. O. of America organization that extends its influence to all exhibitors with industry—is in better shape now at any previous time in its existence."

"What was done in this convention was done for the general of the industry as a whole included every element of divisiveness. That is our purpose to feel that anything that will help exhibitors in an honest effort but be of great assistance to other section of the industry naturally made a few mistakes happens in every movement. these mistakes were obviously head and not of the heart a purposes were always of a corrective nature and our intentions thoroughly honest and took every opinion the welfare of the tire industry. We have strength now than ever before we have the respect of the generally and the co-operative good-will of the highest offices of the nation, state and town committees, and our business stands every center and is regarded people of a kind that conform every way with the welfare of community."

"Every person connected with industry, no matter what division should co-operate in every way the organization as a whole want to improve our position wipe out all unfair tactics and processes within the industry in any way are not entirely just giving everybody a square deal. estly conducted, an exhibitor organization such as ours is, is always of the best and surest way to protect the entire industry from of all kinds from the outside everything of an unfair nature inside."

tional organization. It can be with definite authority that the P. T. O. of A. is stronger today in its existence. National organization and the work of the Public Service Committee have done much that there is less antagonistic legislation directed against the industry today than ever before.

"The most interesting thing about this convention is the number of communications I have received from small exhibitors who, unable to bear the expense to come they are sending representatives, I rank and file of exhibitors was in stronger sympathy than today."

Mark Hurts Germany

Unsettled Currency Has Cut Production Considerably in Berlin—Financiers Withdrawing Support

Since the stabilization of the mark the position of the German film industry has not been very favorable. This branch of business, as in many others, the sudden transition to gold mark calculations increased production costs so enormously that those of foreign producers were exceeded, according to an article in the European Commercial of Vienna and reprinted in the Times.

On this account there is little working done at present, and in Berlin, which is the center of film production, about fourteen out of twenty studios are at present empty and unused. In addition to the increased cost of production, further damage is being done by the general shortage of capital, which makes itself sharply felt in the creation of a film. The situation, in fact, has been completely reversed. While foreign capitalists have withdrawn their money to a great extent from the German film industry, people in Germany are considering the advisability of participating in foreign concerns in order to produce German films abroad, where production costs are lower. In this way an arrangement has been made lately whereby a German firm has linked up with the French Gaumont concern.

This new state of affairs becomes noticeable in the fact that exports of foreign films to Germany are on the increase. This is because foreign productions are no longer dearer than German films, and also because the German output does not suffice to meet the home demand. It is estimated that 40 per cent of the new films being brought out are of foreign origin. Formerly the quota of imports permitted was fully exploited, but now it is much too small. The number of films which may be imported is fixed each half year by the authorities. As in 1923, 260,000 meters of negatives have been allowed for the current year, but as this quantity is inadequate, a lively trade in this quota has arisen. Firms which have located have sold this to others because they themselves are not importing.

It is reported that as much as six gold marks per meter is being paid in this illegal fashion, so that in the case of a film of normal length a premium of $2,500 to $3,000 must be paid. Recently the first English film to be reported since the outbreak of war reached Germany and is now being shown in Berlin. Spanish films are being imported, but most of the foreign films come from America and Sweden.

Since general economic life has been placed on the gold mark basis, the sale of a film brings in much more than was formerly the case and is at once profitable. At the time of the latest inflation the sale of a film in the small State of Switzerland, which does not possess as many as 10 cinematograph theatres, brought in five or six times as much as the sale of the whole of Germany with its 1000 picture theatres.

prove conclusively that they have the Exhibitors' interest at heart, by giving "Thematic Music Cue Sheets" with all their company's releases.

Film companies offering "Thematic Music Cue Sheets" with their pictures, show they have more in common with the Exhibitor, than to merely secure his contract.

They help him put the picture over with his patrons, which in the long run, will mean more to his theatre than the showing of the best pictures, with incorrect musical application.

Where Piracy Thrives

and, Russia and the Balkans the ad Spots—Meeting Held in Paris Seeks Remedy

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
London—Kine. Weekly reports that meeting was held in Paris recently representatives of important American companies to discuss means meeting and reducing the effects of piracy evil.
"The success of several films", says the report, "on the Continent from their owner's point of view is threatened by the activity of film pirates who are engaged in exploiting their ill-gotten property. One of the features which is suffering badly is 'Scar-face', which recently had a successful run at the Tivoli. At least several pirated copies of this are known to be in circulation in Poland. This being the case there are probably others, not only in Poland, but in Greece and the Balkan States, all of which places being apparently beyond the pale of ordinary law. A meeting was recently held in Paris of the representatives of the leading American companies to discuss a means of meeting and reducing the effects of the piracies."

Aroused by Evil

K. Greenland, of the William Morris organization in a letter to the publication touches on the piracy question and says:

"While we have been confronted with piracies on 'The Kid' in certain of the Balkan countries, the Border States and Russia, we intend that the pirates shall not go unpunished. As a matter of fact, we have already obtained prints in several of these countries through the assistance of the American organization, the State Department at Washington, and through individuals whom we have instructed to act on our behalf and we expect results from criminal suits where action damages would result only in unsatisfactory judgments.

"The piracies above referred to are of a recent date and we have very good reasons to believe that we know the persons guilty of these piracies, and it is our intention to exert all the means within our power to bring to justice those found guilty of such unwarranted actions.

"Elsewhere in other parts of the world where piracies previously have been encountered, we have obtained very satisfactory results. Pirates have been arrested and also their confederates in the United States are familiar with the fact that there have been several convictions and jail sentences in the past as a result of the activities of Mr. Vogel and other reputable dealers with the assistance of the Hays organization, the State Department and individuals whose names were enlisted against so-called 'rates' in the past."

Flood of New Names Reach Committee—Big Event Very Close Now

It's growing near! The Spring Golf Tournament is little more than a week off. What a flood of names has hit the committee in the past few days! Over fifty of them.

Yesterday, one member of the committee received an entry from Joseph J. Snellenburg of the Virginia theatre, Atlantic City, who is coming up for the event. Of course, Tom Moore will be here from Washington as usual. The New York exhibitor group is to be largely represented and, while many of them don't play the royal and ancient game, they will all turn out to watch the fun and attend the dinner at night.

In addition, to those cups already promised, F. B. O., and Arthur Stebbins will each contribute a cup. The J. P. Muller Co., will donate two steel-shafted drivers.

Everybody had better murmur prayers for good weather. All arrangements are set. The only thing necessary is to wait for Wednesday, June 4 to roll around. Tardy folks still have time to enter if they fill out the blank on this page, right now. This minute. And send it to any member of the committee.

Films as School Aids

N. Y. Principals Find Them a Considerable Help—20 to 30 Using Pictures

Motion pictures as an aid in instruction in literature, in geography, in history and civics and in nature study have proved successful during the present school year, according to reports of Principals at a conference at the Hall of the Board of Education.

The film lessons in current events, in hygiene and physical training, in biology and in vocational guidance have also been of great help in the schools that have tried them out. In fact, so enthusiastic are the Principals about the use of films as a definite part of daily lessons that a drive will be made to have the new buildings, opened before it was decided to include visual education equipment in each general contract, equipped. These new buildings have booths but no equipment.

The conference was called by Ernest L. Crandall, director of lectures and visual instruction, in order to get the opinions of Principals about the lessons that had been supplied and to find out their needs for the next school year. Between twenty and thirty schools are using the film lessons at the present time.

An interesting development of the use of current events films was reported from Public School 40, Manhattan, of which William Krampner is Principal. A mid-term test in current events was given and the pupils showed a remarkably high average of knowledge of what had been going on in the world.

Courses Are Complete

But it is the development of the motion picture as an aid in the more formal subjects of the course of study that has met with a ready response from the schools. Principals who have tried out the lessons, many of which cover a full year or more, have applied for more of the lessons in other subjects.

For the next school year the following courses will be available:

Subject	School Year
Hygiene and Physical Training	7th, 8th
United States Geography	7th, 8th
Physical Geography	8th
Civics	9th
Biology	9th
Domestic Science	7th, 8th, 9th
Civics	7th
Nature Study	4th
Current Events	7th, 8th, 9th
Vocational Guidance	8th, 9th

The course in literature gives a general idea of the scope of the film lessons and range of subjects covered. There are films of thirteen authors including Whittier, Lowell, Dickens and pictures of a number of their works. In the list are included "Rip Van Winkle," "Evangeline," "Miles Standish," "Odyssey," "Ivanhoe," "Merchant of Venice," "The Tale of Two Cities," "Silas Marner" and "Old Testament Stories."

Films Run Forty Minutes

In the nature study course and in geography there are twenty-seven lessons each and in biology eighteen.

The vocational guidance course includes a large number of films of different occupations and trades and also films carrying a course of lessons in the care of the health in particular occupations.

The films are designed for periods of forty minutes.

A primary course covering nearly twenty lessons is also available. It includes pictures of "The Three Bears," "Hansel and Gretel," "Snow White," "Little Red Riding Hood," "Alice in Wonderland," "Beans, and How they Grow," "Orange Groves and Apple Orchards," "Mythology," and "Home Gardens."

Use has also been made in many of the schools of the United States Health Service film of the science of life and favorable reports were submitted yesterday.

MY PLATFORM

HERE'S my Universal Platform for the coming Fall and Winter Season: I don't know how many big pictures Universal will make! At first we planned on thirty-six, which would be three times as many big Jewel pictures as Universal ever made in one season.

But I've decided to wipe that plan off the map until I know everything there is to know about each and every picture. So with the help of the huge Universal staff, I have been sorting out material, checking up and making up a fool-proof list of sure fire stuff.

The result is that I intend to open the season with the release of twelve pictures which I know are great. The stories, the casts, the directors and all details of the first twelve pictures are fool-proof. They will be better than anything Universal has ever attempted to do. Then what?

I don't know. I'll decide that after the first twelve are launched and as the subsequent pictures come in from the studio and can be checked up.

I don't intend to be bound by rigid numbers. If thirty-six great pictures come from the studio, then Universal will release The Perfect Thirty-Six. If only thirty are great, thirty will be our number. If only twenty-four [or any other number] are great, that will be the number we will release.

If any lemons arrive, they will either be shoved up on the shelf or we will sell them to someone else, negative and all.

Remember, Universal has no fancy new "sales plan" or scheme of any sort. We simply admit we do not know how many of our pictures will be great until they are done, and we only propose to sell you the ones we know are exactly right. No producing company on earth can ever know that all of its pictures will prove to be as hoped for. Listed in this announcement are full details of all other Universal products.

Universal is on the top of the heap in every way and I hope to keep it there. The prospects were never so rosy as they are now and I don't intend to spoil them by making promises unless I know I can keep them.

That's our platform—guaranteeing each plank as it is known to be worthy.

It is not sensational, but it is sound. Compare it with anything else that may be offered to you and then—LOOK BEFORE YOU BOOK.

In The Courts

Supreme Court Justice Erlanger has denied an application by Arthur Edmund Carew to strike out the answer of Tom Terriss and the Terriss Prod. in his suit for $6,000 on the ground that he was engaged at $750 a week for eight weeks to go to Cuba and play the lead in the filming of "The Bandelero," and then the defendant broke the contract. Carew wanted the answer stricken out and judgment directed in his favor for the reason that there was no real defense.

In reply Terriss asserted that Carew was engaged by Sig Schlager general manager of the Luxor Pictures, and not by himself, and that Schlager was acting as agent for Carew. He asserted that it was understood that the engagement of Carew was conditional on the approval of Goldwyn, as distributor of the Terriss film, and that Goldwyn insisted on the engagement of Pedro de Cordoba.

The fact that Philip Lewis, who conducted the American Trading Ass'n, became mentally ill last fall and was committed to the Manhattan State Hospital for the Insane in January, became known when Supreme Court Justice Mullan appointed his wife, the committee of his person and property. His brother, Max, and father opposed the appointment of Mrs. Lewis, and wanted Max named, but Mrs. Lewis told the court that Max had been conducting the Allied Film Exporters and has been competing with them.

In suit of Edmund H. Jowett against the Cosmogram Pictures Corp. judgment for $2,132 was returned before Supreme Court Justice Delehanty, and a counterclaim of $8,000 by the defendant was dismissed. Jowett sued for salary as manager in 1921 at $729 a month. The defendant counterclaimed for $8,000 on the ground that Jowett agreed to take stock of that amount and failed to pay for it.

Supreme Court Justice McGoldrick has directed judgment for $48,286 in favor of the Pacific Bank against Charles A. Cahuff and Herbert T. Edwards for a balance due on a note of the United Theatre Equipment Corp.

Principal Franchises Sold

The first four Principal franchises to be disposed of are as follows:

De Luxe of Seattle for Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana and Alaska.

Hildreth Resigns

Richard P. Hildreth, comptroller of Preferred since the inception of the organization, has resigned.

Putting it Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor puts his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

A $6 Stunt—But Good

Austin, Tex.—Guns were given away by F. L. Faulkner, when "The Fighting Coward" played the Majestic.

Three days before opening, Faulkner ran the following ad, morning and evening: "Are You a Coward? We have secured a limited number of guns from the war-ridden country Czecho-Slovakia, and on Thursday night, on the opening of 'The Fighting Coward,' as long as they last we will give one of them to each male patron over eighteen years of age. These guns will be given to you as you come out as you will have a chance to see how a coward is turned into a real two-fisted man in 'The Fighting Coward,' taken from Booth Tarkington's story, 'Magnolia,' directed by James Cruze."

On leaving the theatre the first two hundred men were presented with pretty red, wooden pop-guns. They cost Faulkner six dollars. The Czecho-Slovakia origin wasn't imagination as that is where the toys were made.

Full Page Boosts "Girl Shy"

St. Louis—Harold Lloyd's famous goggles have been used in a hundred different ways, but the full-page ad in the Times, which Herschel Stuart got for the "Girl Shy" engagement at the Missouri is one of the rare instances of such display. It was the result of a hook-up with Aloe's, the optical shop, which has the biggest business of its kind in the Middle West.

It was only natural that the store would devote a big window to the picture after buying a full page in the newspapers, which was as much Missouri theatre as eye-glasses.

Stuart reciprocated with a small dignified showcase exhibit of Aloe's glasses in the lobby of the theatre.

Models Display "Dorothy" Gowns

Everett, Wash.—Exact reproductions of costumes worn by Mary Pickford in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall", were exhibited by living models in a window display, not far from the Orpheum where the picture was playing.

Other exploitations for this run was "Dorothy Vernon Fudge", featured by a leading confectioner; two big motor trucks carrying large cut-outs of Dorothy Vernon, as well as attractive newspaper display, given by the department store where the living models were on view.

Banner and De Luxe in Deal

Banner Prod., has sold its first four pictures to De Luxe of Philadelphia for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern Jersey, the District of Columbia, part of Virginia and all of Maryland. The title of the first picture is "The Truth About Women."

Mooney Builds "Enchanted Cottage"

Birmingham, Ala.—The lobby of the Trianon was made to resemble a real "enchanted cottage", as exploitation for "The Enchanted Cottage", during its engagement. E. H. Mooney, advertising and publicity head for the theatre, was responsible for it.

A compo board front with a roof window and vines, was laid out, unusual in its detail and carrying out the theme of the picture. Comparatively simple and inexpensive. The window, of course, was the box-office.

Unusual Street Car Tie-Up

Toronto—When "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall" played the Grand O. H., arrangements were made with the officials of the street car company to cooperate in exploiting the run. All conductors were instructed, when their car reached the theatre, to shout "Grand Opera House! Everybody change for 'Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall!' Mary Pickford, Toronto's little Girl."

Exhibitors Benefit Public

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Spokane, Wash.—W. J. Hindley, educational director of the Washington State Retailers' Assn., at the annual meeting of the M. P. T. O. urged exhibitors to hold their heads up their communities, and to regard themselves as performing a definite public service in teaching the public how to play. The organization took up the question of insurance and listened to a talk by H. W. Snell, manager of the Northwestern Insurance Co., who pointed out the economies accruing through group insurance.

Helping Small Towns in Exploitation Campaign That Was Designed Deliberately for Bene- fit of Little Exhibitors

How his organization creates exploitation designed directly to aid small-town exhibitors, is explained by Bert Ennis, of Associated Pictures in a letter to this publication. He says:

"Apropos of your remarks concerning intelligent helping of the small-town exhibitor as advocated by Eddie Bonns, the Sawyer-Lubin organization has given this problem intensive study with the result that when 'The Shooting of Dan McGrew' was recently produced, we carried out a well-defined plan, whereby from the day the production was started until it was finished, we kept in mind the exploitation and publicity requirements of the 'little guy.'

"Stills, especially suitable for his lobby display, were made: stories, the angles of which appealed to the small-town were written, and in order to give him ready made exploitation matter, a series of photographs of each member of the 'McGrew' cast taken in conjunction with special signs made tying up the selling possibilities of the photoplay edition of the film, so that the small exhibitor only had to give these photos to his local bookseller. Further than this, in order to give him extra material, a series of photos of La Marr, Cody, Busch, Marmont and Siegmund were taken blind-folded, and then straight so that the small exhibitor can stimulate interest by having a guessing contest, all set, either for use in his lobby, or in the newspapers.

"Before putting these ideas into effect, and before the production was started, we had the Metro branch managers supply us with a list of the small exhibitors in each territory and addressed a questionnaire to them in order to ascertain their real needs in exploiting a picture, from their point of view, and the material briefly mentioned herein is the result.

"On 'The Shooting of Dan McGrew,' and on 'Sandra,' our next La Marr picture for First National, we intend preparing two distinct modes of exploitation—one designed for the use of the first and second run exhibitor and the other expressly designed for the use of the small-town-er.

I think this is a subject that requires editorial comment such as is contained in your issue of May 18th, as three quarters of the exploitation issued by producers and distributors, is of no use to the so-called 'back-bone of the business.'

The Merger

A Statement by Marcus Loew

WITH the merger of Metro, Goldwyn and Louis B. Mayer, three vital producers become one. Three producing organizations, that in past years have each provided exhibitors with consistent box-office properties, have now united their facilities and their valuable experience into one vast dependable source of picture supply.

Shortly a detailed announcement will be made of the exact product that exhibitors may expect from this new, unified organization and theatre-owners will recognize the significance of this huge amalgamation that triples its producing resources . . . stars, directors and stories.

Until the publication of this announcement, we ask exhibitors to have confidence in this new, unified power.

The Metro-Goldwyn line-up is worth waiting for.

Britain Disappointed

Tax Relief Is Welcome, Many Murmurs of Dissatisfaction Are Heard

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
London—Editorial comment in the leading British trade papers on the changes planned in the Entertainment Tax reflects some disappointment in the proposals of Chancellor of the Exchequer Snowden, being under the heading, "Crippling the British Industry, 'The Film Tax' says:

"The suburban exhibitor is afforded relief (though even now there is to be considerable doubt as to how much benefit will really accrue, but the British producer and manufacturer, as we said last week, are treated in no small degree if any other clauses in the Finance Bill are allowed to go through. The Chancellor has acceded to some extent to the demand that the cinema shall be freed from the shackles of overtime taxation; but if the McKenna duties are abolished, as he proposes, our national production of moving pictures will be very seriously affected, while the development of printing in this country will receive a blow from which it will be extremely difficult for it to recover.

"We think that in his fervor for the trade, Mr. Snowden has not fully realized the effects which this part of the budget will have on two budding industries. If these embarras are removed, the film business will be hit in two of its most vital Production will suffer and printing will suffer. At present the cost of imported negatives (though $50. per foot) and that on importation (though only 1d. per foot) has been sufficient, at any rate to keep back a too overwhelming amount of cheap and nasty subjects; and at the same time these imports have been restricted (in a minor degree only, it is true) in favor of the British stu-

"* * It is more than ever essential that such safeguards as have been provided should not be rudely discarded. If they were abandoned now, we should be doing all we can to hamper the growth of British picture-making. The home manufacturer will be unable to withstand unrestricted competition, and in no long time, perhaps, will be forced to go out of the market altogether.

"To take another aspect of the matter, the film printing. Since about 1910 a thriving business has been built up in this department of manufacture. It is estimated, for instance, that at least three and a quarter million feet of positive film is printed in Britain every week. Thousands of work-people find employment in this branch of the trade, the skill in which is not easily transferable to any other calling. The field of film printing in England has been cultivated on the tacit assumption that it would receive the earnest consideration of any government when, and if, the time came to reconsider the McKenna duties. If the tax on positive prints, together with that on the negatives imported into this country, is to be abolished, it will simply mean that this printing will very largely be done abroad, with the inevitable result that the factories here will be closed down and a new class of worker added to the list of dole receivers.

"The most ardent Free Trader in the Government ranks can scarcely be prepared to sacrifice a British industry and deal a smashing blow at British are for the mere pleasure of giving the foreigner a pull."

"The Bioscope" says:

"Coming to the Chancellor's announcement of his determination to abolish the McKenna duties on August 1st, we are of opinion that this will prove a severe blow to the British cinema industry in more ways than one. It will flood the country with a type of cheap (and usually nasty) film that these duties have been instrumental in keeping in the countries of their origin, a type of film which was lowering the status of the cinema entertainment and doing much to provide cranks and killjoys with weapons with which to attack an industry honestly trying to elevate as well as entertain, but which through reason of their cheapness found a public in the very quarters where they accomplished most harm.

"The abolition of the McKenna duties will hit very hard the British film producing industry, just beginning after the years of war to attain a position commanding respect, not only in Britain, but in our colonies and other countries of the world."

And "The Cinema" has this to say: "What is the probable result to this trade of the removal of the McKenna duties?"

"Answer:

"There will be a constantly increasing influx from various sources of 'junk.' Free of duty—it will be sent over to realize what it will fetch.

"There will—as usual—be buyers. There are for most kinds of rubbish. The all-important puzzle is—will the exhibitor be persuaded to book that class of goods? Here and there, of course—there may be one that will get by—But—they will be quite exceptional cases—and there is too much junk in the country today. Even with the duty it will mean an increase of the already strong competition from which British manufacturers are keenly suffering.

"The only defence that can be put up by them appears to be the manufacture of the inexpensive type of domestic or comedy-drama, with a gripping story—and a small but strong cast.

Exhibitors Watch Out!

There are old serials cut down and now being re-issued as features of

CHARLES HUTCHISON

"Hutch of Serial Fame"

is making the greatest stunt pictures of his career. Look for the second of these thrill features released by Wm. Steiner, N. Y. C.

"HUTCH OF THE U. S. A."

"No other trade in the country is placed in such a terrible predicament by the waiving of the McKenna duties. Are we going to submit without a protest?"

"Why has no mass meeting been called? A mass meeting at which everyone concerned should get their member of Parliament to be present? Cannot one of our associations, societies, or councils get to work immediately?"

As noted, the opinion of important American exporters relative to the lifting of British import duties and the effect of such a move does not coincide with English views. The impression here is that mediocre film will not be sold for England because that market is surfeited with junk at the present time and, they feel, it would be wasted effort to ship more cheap pictures to a territory that will be sure to return them.

Pathe May Hold Up Factory

First Bonus Winners

Thirteen Famous Players Theatre Managers In First Quarter—To Be Extended Gradually.

Awards for the first quarter of 1924 to Famous Players theatre managers under the bonus system inaugurated about the first year by Harold B. Franklin have been made to thirteen managers. They are:

Anniston, Ala., Noble Theatre, Roy L. Smart
Anniston, Ala., Theatro
Asheville, N. C., Imperial, E. D. Turner
Augusta, Ga., Rialto, F. J. Miller
Birmingham, Ala., Galax, T. G. Coleman, (Macon)
Charlotte, N. C., Alhambra, Chas. W. Amos
Charlotte, N. C., Imperial, Geo. Brown
Columbia, S. C., Imperial C. W. Irvin
Greenville, Casino, H. B. Clarke
Greenville, Garing
Jacksonville, Arcade, Guy Kenimer
St. Petersburg, All theatres, W. J. Melvin,
H. G. Griffin, asst. mgr.
Atlanta, Ga., Rialto, W. T. Murray
Waco, Hippodrome, J. P. Harrison

"Although the bonus does not apply over the entire circuit, there are considerations in connection with it which can be emphasized for the benefit of all," says Franklin in "The Close-Up" and continues:

"The ability of a manager is shown by two items—increase of attendance and decrease of expenses. It demands showmanship to increase audiences, and business sagacity to cut expenses. The bonus rewards were based on two items. Rent, depreciation, taxes, insurance, etc., which are beyond the control of the individual manager were not considered. The manager does control increase of audiences and decrease of expenses, but only by everlastingly striving can he make a showing.

"The bonus plan we hope is here to stay. Its chief advantage to the individual manager is the fact that it forces officials at the home office to study every manager and his work."

Organization

lief, at least, that the national organization is willing to forego and forget politics and set itself to work.

WHO WANTS HARMONY?

There will be many familiar faces missing at this gathering. The Mid-West group will fail to include a number of men who have been prominent for many years in such gatherings. And Boston will miss the doughty Al Steffes and his Northwestern contingent, as well as the urbane and smooth-voiced Harry Varner, as well as the outspoken Jake Wells of Virginia. There will be many others missing; Charley O'Reilly and Billy Brandt and their friends from New York, and if Marcus Loew arrives it will be most unusual. Yet this is the first national exhibitor movement that he has not attended.

It is not because he has any antipathy to the leaders of the M. P. T. O. or to any individual. But it is chiefly, I believe, because he feels that he can accomplish little. Marcus Loew isn't the type of man to overlook or forget the sort of things that hap-pened in Washington. There are some—perhaps a few—who know exactly what is meant by this.

And yet, gentlemen, with these many important men missing, there is still much which can be done. But someone must find the magic wand of harmony and use it. True, the Allied group—as they call themselves—can be ignored. But the grave question arises: Is this the best thing to do? True, there may be no need of calling upon the "deserters," as they have been termed. Per-haps, the wisdom of some of the accepted leaders of the M. P. T. O. is the best. Perhaps, it will be better to leave them out, inas-much as they have elected to stay out. But just how far are you going to get with such a policy?

EXHIBITORS' PROBLEMS

Because there are many problems which exhibitors must face, and should meet with a united front. There promises to be a discussion on the floor as to the producer-distributor theatre operations which may prove mighty enlightening. And some of the other problems—perhaps as acute—for various reasons, will not be discussed openly. But that they exist is undeniable. One of them—and this will probably be aired at length—is what to do with the growing and vexatious problem of the showing of theatrical pictures by non-theatrical groups, such as schools, churches, etc. Some of the movements of certain national dis-tributors have, in this connection, been most unwise. Undenia-bly exhibitors are right in demanding that something be done to meet this question. But it is a very delicate matter; an extreme-ly difficult one. And one, which, if not handled properly, and with the utmost care, will possibly bring much difficulty to the indus-try as a whole.

Hays is trying to work out this problem today. His organ-ization is probing hard to find bed rock upon which to start some-thing in the right direction. Perhaps, something constructive may start with this convention. It is sincerely to be hoped so. But in this, as in other matters of national import, difficulties are certain to arise where there are varying groups of exhibitor organizations, when there should be but one.

FILM BOARDS AND THE CONTRACT

There must be an improvement in the existing so-called "uniform contract." Too much consideration of a matter as vi-tally important as this is impossible. Everything possible should be done to work this out. The M. P. T. O. can accomplish much. The Film Boards of Trade and the arbitration boards, regardless of who starts them, should work out existing difficulties so that arbitration can, in fact, exist throughout the country. If the ex-isting boards are wrong, correct them. If the principles upon which they have been built are flabby or wrong altogether, cor-rect them. But build. Be constructive.

Let Boston set itself in red letters as the birthplace, not only of American liberty, but of constructive force in the record of national exhibitor organization.

Gift For Cohen

(Staff Correspondence)

Boston—It would not be sur-prising if, on Wednesday even-ing at the banquet, a tribut-will be paid to Sydney S. Co-hen, the retiring president, in the form of a gift. The diffi-culty at the moment is as to just what can be given him.

Radio Evils

Nathan Burkan Warns Exhibitors Trouble—Other Ideas from T. O. C. C. Installation Speakers

The one serious note of the spe-ers at the installation of the officer; the T. O. C. C. at the Ritz Satur-night was sounded by Nathan B-kan. He dwelt at length on the p-sible competition which either l-arrived, or was coming from the-tivities of the radio companies. declared that at the hearings bei-a Congressional committee in Wa-ington, officials of one of the lead-companies admitted that within-year or more they expected to ha-an invisible audience of from ten-twenty million people every nig-listening in to the radio.

"If these millions of people rema-at home listening to radio concer-lectures, etc.," said Burkan, "is it po-sible that they will not take from t-theatre its patrons? To me, it is som-thing serious. It is certainly som-thing for you to think about."

Charles C. Pettijohn, of the Ha-office, declared he hoped to live-see the day when a producer or d-tributor could give a dinner at t-Ritz, such as the exhibitors were gi-ing.

To which, in his remarks, Jimn-Walker replied, saying that it w-not difficult to notice the differ-ence between exhibitors and producer's-distributors when a dinner occur-re in summer, because no one wore fi-coats at such affairs, but that in t-winter the difference was easily di-cernible. Only the producers wou-such costly garments.

A feature of the affair was the ten-er of a handsome gold cigarette cas-from the Chamber to Joe Unger o-the Famous New York exchange, fo-service rendered. Joe was not pres-ent but Harry Ballance promised t-give it to him.

Harry Reichenbach, who acted a-toastmaster made a hit when he sai-the surprising thing to him was tha-a man named O'Reilly could be, elect-ed head of an organization like th-T. O. C. C. "It's just as surprising," he said "as if Sam Trigger were elect-ed a Cardinal."

He provoked much mirth when h-told of how in the old days, retirin-presidents were given a bicycle as-token of esteem. In this, he referre-to the handsome silver set give-O'Reilly by the chamber.

Book Suitable Films
Mothers and Parent-Teachers' Ass'n
Prepares Booklet with Long List of Titles

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)
Chicago—In order to aid mothers in selecting suitable films for their children to see, the reviewing committee of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Ass'n has prepared a booklet, giving titles and brief critical descriptions of each picture. Members of the committee are Mrs. Louis Taft, Illinois League for Women Voters; Mrs. Irvin McDowell,
Women's City Club of Chicago; Mrs.
John Ford Baldwin, Illinois Council of Parent Teacher Ass'n and Mrs.
Charles E. Merriam, Chairman of the National Films Committee, Nat'l Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher
Ass'n's.

The booklet covers pictures released from 1922 to 1924, alphabetically arranged. A foreword explains the standard of reviewing has not changed in terms of art, photography, direction and acting, as is the standard set by most critics. But one in terms of boys and girls and their right to clean and wholesome recreation guaranteed by the community.
The guarantee is cleanliness and wholesomeness.

As different books are suitable and graded for different ages, some for children, some for the adolescent age, and others only for the mature adult, so pictures can also, and must be classified into these various groups, and our young people must be protected against seeing the films dealing with adult problems, and the films which are very harmful to the child mind," says Mrs. Merriam. "There are some books which can be read around the fireside and enjoyed by all members of the family.
There are also films of this sort. Our job is to pick out these films especially and try to keep the family together in recreational hours. Most of the juvenile problems could be solved if the parents and the community realized that their responsibility does not end at the gate or at the school door, but does extend out into those dangerous hours, and those dangerous venues, when a child is seeking to find amusement."

The booklet is available to all at 10 cents a copy. The committee has its headquarters at 6041 University Ave., this city.

Cohen Intimates Congress Will Act if Industry Draws Tighter Together—Harmony Prevails

By DANNY

Boston—The little white dove of peace has started building its nest at the motion picture exhibitors' convention.

There was so much harmony spread around the Copley Plaza yesterday at the opening of the fifth annual convention of the M.
P. T. O. A. that even Sydney S. Cohen jocularly remarked, "We are suffering from too much harmony."

And yet, Cohen struck an ominous note when he slammed producer combines and declared that, unless such moves stop, Congressional intervention might be expected.

The session did not get under way until about 11 o'clock and carried on throughout the afternoon without a recess for lunch.
The outstanding developments of the session were as follows:

The valedictory of Sydney S. Cohen, who took over one hour to render the final report of his stewardship. Incidentally, he directed attention to the fact that the members of the existing arbitration board were not equitable to the exhibitors and that they were chiefly collection agencies for the distributor. He hopes to see a development whereby such arbitration boards would act for the benefit of exhibitors.

Announcement was made that the board of directors have agreed to a change of the constitution whereby, in the future, all officers, including the president, would be elected by at least twenty-one directors to be named by the convention. This change of election will take place at

The Situation Today

Zukor and Loew Analyze the Present Position of the Industry—Discuss Stability

Present problems in the industry are discussed at some length by Adolph Zukor and Marcus Loew in the editorial section of Sunday's World. The interviews were secured by Karl K. Kitchen.

Zukor makes the assertion that exhibitors are not anxious to buy single pictures and points to the failure of the Paramount individual picture sales policy. Kitchen declares that both Zukor and Loew say their theatre holdings do not total even four per cent of the total number of houses in the country.

Loew places the number of theatres today at 14,000, as compared with 18,000 several years ago and asserts, that although the houses are fewer in number, the total number of seats has not decreased. This, he says, is due to the fact that larger theatres are being built all the time. Both executives told Kitchen that the outlook for the next six months was exceedingly bright.

Kitchen, early in the article, says that of the 240 or 250 high grade features to be made during the coming year—and he places the annual output at 600—Zukor will make 79, or more than a fourth, and Marcus Loew will make about 50, or about 20 per cent. Consequently together they will be responsible for about one-half of the significant pictures shown to the public, Kitchen concludes.

"However, it is estimated" he says "that this half of the total number will do more than two-thirds of the business in the motion picture theatres throughout the country—the reason being that their companies are credited with a larger percentage of so-called quality pictures than all the other producers put together. Their pre-eminence in the box offices, however, is dependent upon their percentage of successful pictures. As to this, the public alone is the determining factor. According to their own admissions they do not own or control even four per cent of the total number of theatres, so that their strength in the industry rests on the fact that their respective companies have been fortunate in making a larger number of winning pictures than their rivals. In addition to this they have methods of distribution which go far to solving the problem.

"As Mr. Zukor explained to me, the motion picture industry has passed through the same stages and experienced the same crises as the oil business. It is possible for a small and independent producer to make a successful photoplay just as it is possible for an independent prospector to dig for oil and hit a gusher. But unless the independent prospector is able to have his oil piped off he will not realize much on his gusher, and unless the independent producer can arrange for the distribution of his picture he cannot get back the money he has spent to make it. The truth of the matter is that exhibitors are not anxious to buy individual pictures. The Paramount Company—the distributing organization of the Famous Players—found that out to its sorrow when it attempted to show its new productions in 'key' cities and let the exhibitors bid for them. Exhibitors insist upon buying their pictures in large blocks so that their playhouses will be assured of attractions weeks in advance. And that is why the motion picture industry has resolved itself into a condition similar to that in the oil business, with the big companies doing approximately 80 per cent of the business and with a large number of independent companies fighting for the remainder.

"The third big factor in the motion picture industry is the Associated First National Exhibitors, a distributing organization which has recently, under Richard A. Rowland's leadership, engaged in producing pictures as well. The First National, as it is called, will release nearly fifty pictures this year, twenty of which it will produce itself. These pictures will go to its franchise holders who control important theatres in the larger cities. In fact, its twenty-six original franchise holders control 300 theatres, or more than 40 per cent of the first run houses throughout the country. According to Mr. Zukor, First National indirectly controls nearly 80 per cent of the first run houses.

"This recent merger, accord both Marcus Loew and Adolph Zukor, has greatly strengthened the industry. Mr. Zukor told me in his opinion the industry is no sounder but more prosperous than at any time in its history. Mr. Loew re-echoed his statement.

"One of the principal reasons for the stability that exists in the industry is that we have been able to cure our evils from the inside. Mr. Zukor in his office overlooking Fifth Avenue at 41st Street. 'I mean we have developed men in various departments who have been able to remedy faulty methods of production and distribution of pictures. This is not only true of our own organization but of the other important companies. It meant to me to have outsiders point out defects—to tell us that our methods of production was extravagant and our means of distribution was uneconomic. But when men with their own organization showed me we could eliminate waste and make better pictures then we began to progress. We are now developing first-class brains within the industry instead of hiring them from the outside.

"The result is that waste and inefficiency are being reduced to a minimum. Today we're spending as much to make our pictures as we did a year or even two years ago and we're putting more actual money into them.

A Chance for Great Showmen

How many great showmen are there in this business?

I don't know exactly, but I do know these two things:

1. There would be more great showmen if there were more great pictures.
2. There will be more great showmen as soon as the great pictures in Paramount's FAMOUS FORTY start coming to you.

For we've deliberately built THE FAMOUS FORTY for showmen. In titles, stars, directors, stories, advertising material and exploitation possibilities, it's the greatest showmen's group of pictures that's ever been offered to you.

Think of "THE COVERED WAGON," RUDOLPH VALENTINO in "Monsieur Beaucaire" and "A Sainted Devil." Think of GLORIA SWANSON in "Manhandled" and "The Coast of Folly," THOMAS MEIGHAN in CURWOOD'S "The Alaskan." Think of CECIL B. DEMILLE'S "Feet of Clay" and "The Golden Bed," POLA NEGRI in LUBITSCH'S "Forbidden Paradise."

Are they showmen's pictures? You know they are. And so are the other 31.

They're showmen's pictures because they're keyed exactly right to respond to the magic touch of the showman; because 90% of the work usually done by the showman after he gets the picture has been done in advance by Paramount; because they'll pay you a hundredfold for every bit of time, sweat and money you expend in putting them over.

That's why all the real showmen are rushing in to grab THE FAMOUS FORTY. That's why there'll be more great showmen in this industry by February 1 than it's ever known before.

S. R. KENT.

Cohen Makes Overtures to "Insurgents"

His Feelings "Kindly"

Boston. The directors, in all likelihood, will be nominated today and in turn, they will suggest the nomination of officials. The final election of such officials will take place on Thursday morning.

There is still a strong likelihood of Michael J. O'Toole being elected president. Several others are mentioned, although in a casual and complimentary way.

Cohen Tells of Benefits

During his remarks Sydney Cohen pointed out a few things which might have happened had the M. P. T. O. of A. not organized in Cleveland. He declared that, in many instances, exhibitors now independent would have been but janitors for theatres owned by producer-distributor organizations. "This industry was never created," he said, "to be controlled by one or two men in New York and the sooner these men know it, the better off they will be."

He also referred to the defection of some of the state groups from the national body, deploring that they had left the organization. He said:

"There are some men not here and some organizations we would like to have seen. I refer particularly to Michigan and, although they have not been with us actively, they have been automatically with us quietly. I have nothing but the kindest feelings for them and welcome back to this organization all of these men. I miss Al Steffes and quite a few others."

A letter of regret was also received and read from President Coolidge in which he said that the motion picture has been of unquestionable value.

Just before he turned the convention over Cohen said:

"Some exhibitors would rather pay $200 to $300 to take a picture from another exhibitor rather than pay $50 a year to belong to an organization to prevent producer-distributors from taking away his theatre."

Warns of Combines

Joseph W. Walsh of Hartford acted as temporary chairman and declared that when the delegates left Boston they were going out "as the strongest exhibitor body in this country."

A. C. Wasserman of the Boston committee asked for harmony and cooperation.

J. Douglas Flattery, represented Mayor Curley. Flattery is a prominent attorney here who represents the Loew interests, among others. He spoke on the necessity of organization and, as a buyer of pictures, he deplored the publicity given the huge salaries of stars and players and said that "this was held up to public condemnation." He further said that "the producers will cooperate with exhibitors if we work together." He declared that more harmony was needed—really a closer cooperation. He referred to the music tax situation and declared it was "altogether wrong."

Hays Group Refused Exhibitors Aid To Fight Non-Theatricals, Smith Says

Ohio Exhibitor Claims Hays Himself Favored Some Action, But Companies Objected—Courtland Smith Asserts the General Was Misquoted

(Staff Correspondence)

Boston—Despite the fact that Will H. Hays expressed himself in sympathy with the attitude of exhibitors toward competition from non-theatrical exhibitors, the members of the Hays organization have refused to act on the matter. This statement was made yesterday by Martin G. Smith, president of the Ohio M. P. T. O. in discussing, at length, this particular problem in which exhibitors are greatly concerned. He said the matter had been hanging fire for two years.

Smith sighted the unfair competition of non-theatrical shows in schools, churches and colleges, declaring that none of these was subject to taxation or other regulations. He said that some producers encouraged this practice to the extent of maintaining separate departments to foster this business. He told of how the non-theatrical matter was taken up with Hays and that Hays agreed it was a great evil that should be wiped out. Smith said Hays then informed the committee that he had conferred with his fellow workers regarding the non-theatrical situation but that later Hays declared his associates who constitute the court of final action in his organization, were not in accord with him on that proposition "and he naturally fell into line with their purposes."

"We make no complaint against Mr. Hays in this relation" said Smith. "His statement was exactly what many fair-minded persons would have given utterance to, under the circumstances."

Smith then went on to say that two years after the committee had first taken up with Hays the problem of the non-theatrical situation that in response to the committee's request "for a final settlement on the subject" under date of May 22, 1924, Hays wrote to Sydney Cohen saying that the non-theatrical problem was one of the very real questions involving the industry. But his letter, said Smith, gave little indication other than that his office was studying the question as to any definite action with regard to the vexatious problem.

As a result, the committee adopted a resolution which in part says "we unreservedly condemn this practice * * * and call upon all theater owners * * * to cooperate with our national board who are hereby instructed to take such action as to them may seem appropriate to effect a discontinuance of this pernicious and unfair business process on the part of producers and distributors."

When Courtland Smith was asked whether or not Mr. Hays had been correctly quoted, he said he had not. Smith said:

"There has been no failure on the part of Mr. Hays or his office to give this matter every possible consideration. It is a large and important subject and one that cannot be settled in a day, a month or year. It will live with us constantly. It is not a matter that can be settled by a resolution. For any exhibitor body to say that the non-theatrical field must not be developed, is foolhardy. Particularly, so far as the educational field is concerned. Intelligent development of that field will carry the greatest possible good to the exhibitor and to the industry at large."

ther saving of over seven million a year, according to experts of the Treasury Department.

Huge Savings By Exhibitors

Of $72,000,000 paid in admission tax, he said, treasury agents had figured $55,000,000 accrued from pictures and that 90% of the theatres of this country were in the small cities or towns or in neighborhood sections. He said he wanted as a matter of record what the theater organization had done, pointing out that with the removal of the admission tax that from $35,000,000 to $40,000,000 would be saved for exhibitors. He also pointed out that the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers had received $300,000 a year from exhibitors.

Again reverting to combinations, producers, etc., Cohen said producer combinations should be stopped once either by the necessary legislative steps or through the control of buying power of motion picture exhibitors dealing directly with independent producers. He referred to Nathan Burkan's argument before the Congressional committee in which Burkan referred to the Peekskill case and added if the present moves to control this business are not carried they may result in Congressional action. "There are many more Peekskill cases in this country. I deplore the occurrence of such Congressional action, but this is the problem of the day," Cohen said.

Cohen's Recommendations

He recommended the adoption of a budget system and an executive secretary, a permanent representative in Washington, the establishment of service stations at Boston, Chicago, Little Rock, Butte and Los Angeles, the revival of the bulletin service which was dropped because of lack of finances, resuming at first upon a monthly basis and later to be upon a weekly basis; also the employment of a general counsel; the improvement of existing arbitration board system; the employment of paid organization and towards the end of his address he said, "When we started in Cleveland, I told you that we were children setting out to build a home; that we were going to lay the bricks. Since then we have had to dodge a lot of bricks while we were building. But now the house is up. I now expect to see 100% exhibitor representation in any national organization because certain houses are owned by producers and certain exhibitors are under obligation to producers; you cannot and must not expect the men to go along."

Letters were read from various parts of the country deploring distance and the great expense coming to Boston, which prevented a number from attending from the Far West. After reading the letters, Cohen called on R. F. Woodhull, president New Jersey M. P. O., who presented reports of board of directors. Woodhull said this had been an exceptionally fine year for the directors; that meetings were held in Atlantic City, August, in Rochester in October, Washington in November and Manhattan in New York in January, all of which resulted in considerable constructive work being handled. Cohen of the outstanding efforts of the board was the formulation of plan to carry out National Motion Picture Day which, he said, resulted in the establishment of a new era for the M. P. T. O. of A. He then went into detail on some of the meetings held, especially the Washington meeting in March at which time invitation was extended to President Coolidge to attend the national convention.

Wait Before You Date!

A Statement by Marcus Loew

THE merging of the valuable stars, directors and story materials of Metro, Goldwyn and Louis B. Mayer into one great producing organization—the amalgamation of two nation-wide exchange systems with resultant expansion of exhibitor service—these are facts which theatre owners should take into consideration when looking ahead into the 1924-25 Season.

We urge all exhibitors to have patience in making picture judgments. We are in a position to offer you a powerful line-up of high-class productions for 1924-25 and sincerely advise you to wait for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer announcement before making hasty commitments. Wait before you date!

PROMISE AND PERFORMANCE

It is easy to make a promise—but the fulfillment is, as some wise sage has said, yet “another story.” Some promises no one takes seriously; on the other hand, there are promises which are as good as gold.

The average photoplay exhibitor must calculate his year’s activity well in advance. Promises without performance are the bane to his prosperity. He has but a limited number of playing dates—and much product from which to choose. In order to secure the greatest quantity of good picture material, he must be fairly accurately informed on what to expect from the various producers. Unfulfilled production pledges can completely upset his plans for the future.

Last spring WARNER BROS. promised the motion picture exhibitor EIGHTEEN for the 1923-24 season. The promise was more than exceeded by the performance. Actually TWENTY big productions are being delivered and among them several mighty masterpieces which rank as the finest examples of the silent art ever produced.

This spring again WARNER BROS. make a promise and point to their past record of performance as an indication that the promise will be fulfilled to the letter.

TWENTY big “Classics of the Screen” is the Warner schedule for the year 1924-25. We may deliver TWENTY-FOUR, but the TWENTY we promise you can gamble on.

These TWENTY productions are being made from popular novels and leading stage play successes. Thus are their stories of proved value. To this will be added the usual high standard of Warner production, casting and direction and the sure-fire box-office “pull” found in all Warner Pictures.

And—YOU’LL GET THEM AS PROMISED.

Save TWENTY dates for the new Warner TWENTY.

The Situation Today

We know before each picture is started exactly what it will cost. And what is even more important, we know what the movie going public wants. We have instituted a system of reports from exhibitors all over the country on every film that is shown and if a picture doesn't draw we investigate and discover the reasons so that we can avoid the error in future productions. By employing directors who have had long experience, players who have demonstrated their popularity, and by buying the best stories that are available, we are constantly increasing our percentages of successes. And a well organized selling force enables us to get the distribution for these productions that is necessary to achieve the proper return on our investment.

"Mr. Zukor naturally did not divulge any trade secrets to me, but it may be said that one of the reasons for the success of the big distributing companies is their policy of protecting the exhibitor from losing money on their pictures. For instance, if an exhibitor of Paramount or Metro films can show that a picture sold him at a definite price has failed to attract audiences and has proved a box office failure, this loss is adjusted by making him a better price on the next run of films supplied him. This affords an exhibitor protection which the so-called independent producer, because of his limited output, does not always feel called upon to extend. The big distributing companies, dealing with their clients week by week, practically guarantee them a profit in addition to a steady stream of pictures. So it is not surprising that nearly 80 per cent of the business goes to these big, well organized institutions.

"There can never be a monopoly in the motion picture industry," Mr. Zukor explained to me, "because it is impossible to command a monopoly of brains. We might hire all the stars, writers and directors in the country, but that wouldn't enable us to make all the pictures. For the other companies would find new writers, players and directors. And even if we controlled a majority of the theatres and could create enough pictures to supply them with attractions we could not end competition. The public will always decide what pictures it wants to see and it is humanly impossible to make every film a success. We show pictures made by rival companies in our theatres and our films are shown in theatres owned by our competitors. It is necessary for a big producing company to control a certain number of theatres in order to command a market for its own productions—our theatres in the key cities are merely our show windows—but these productions have to be good enough to be booked into other playhouses or they chalk up big losses."

"As Marcus Loew controls the largest single group of theatres in the country I talked with him about that phase of the picture industry.

"The last figures given out by the revenue officials at Washington showed a big increase in the number of admissions at the picture theatres," said Mr. Loew. "And for this time of the year the attendance is unusually good. Naturally, there is a slight falling off with the approach of warm weather, but the motion picture business is suffering less than any other important industry. What will happen in the fall is difficult to predict, but personally I look for increased patronage.

"I do not anticipate an advance in the price of admissions, although exhibitors might well feel themselves justified in asking better prices due to the higher cost and better quality of pictures that they are showing. As a matter of fact, with the tax removed from the cheaper seats a majority of the public will pay less for its entertainment."

Kitchen quotes Loew further:

"Our pictures last year averaged about $400,000 each, including the cost of distribution," said Mr. Loew. "A star picture of the first grade costs anywhere from $150,000 to $300,000. I am speaking of the negative cost. The average production with a cast of featured players will run $100,000 more. The few super-productions that are made represent an expenditure of anywhere from $500,000 to $1,000,000, but they are few and far between. When such sums are tied up in a picture it is essential to control proper channels for distribution so that the money can be turned over. It was because of the lack of these channels that the Goldwyn Company thought it desirable to merge with Metro. By our methods of distribution and our control of houses in the more important cities we are able to get back 50 per cent of the cost of a picture within six months in the first run houses and 80 per cent within a year. Some distributing companies take as much as two years to return only the costs of their productions.

"I wouldn't go so far as to say that an independent producer should not attempt to make a costly picture without being reasonably sure of its distribution," Mr. Loew went on, "but the distribution problem is one of the most pressing in the picture business. If a producer can establish the value of his film on Broadway—which is often a costly procedure—he can usually sell it or have it taken over on a percentage basis by one of the big distributing concerns. The really successful producers, however, have been those who solved the problem of securing a market before they have tied up millions in their spectacles. Proper distribution tends to eliminate overproduction of quality pictures, which was another of the reasons for the recent amalgamation of the Goldwyn and Metro Companies. Instead of each company making forty pictures a year we will make about fifty altogether.

"It is interesting to know that while there has been a decrease in the number of theatres throughout the country—a few years ago there were nearly 18,000 and today less than 14,000—there has been no decrease in the total number of seats. This is due to the fact that the large playhouses that have been built seat as many people as the three or four smaller theatres they replaced. During the period immediately following the war hundreds of enormous picture theatres were erected throughout the country and the increase in population was anticipated for several years. I do not look for any unusual development along this line for some time, although the tendency is unquestionably in the direction of larger and more luxurious theatres."

Toward the close, Kitchen says:

"Both Adolph Zukor and Marcus Loew, being realists, did not indulge in many prophecies for the future. However they agreed that the outlook for the next six months was exceedingly bright, due to the fact that the industry has undergone a series of solidifying adjustments that have placed it on the soundest basis it has yet known. They both asserted a merger of their respective organizations was neither contemplated nor likely."

Bed Rock

By DANNY

Convention Headquarters, The Copley-Plaza.

Getting down to it isn't easy. Especially if you're satisfied with the froth of things. And here in Boston there is an opportunity. To get down to bed rock. Down to cases, so to speak. And have a real business convention. With politics aside. The interesting question which arises is: will they get down to bed rock?

For the past several years there have been reasons. Perhaps good reasons—depending on the point of view—for the failure to transact much pertinent or important business. But that was due to the political situation. Which clouded the atmosphere.

But there are no clouds on the horizon this morning. All the "anti" boys are elsewhere. So the way is clear. If there is to be a business convention, let's have it. The announced program indicates several spots where a start may be made.

If something isn't done—here and now—to get a real business atmosphere into this gathering, it is going to prove difficult to alibi further.

Perhaps when the trade paper editors take the platform something along this line can be accomplished. And may be. It is to be sincerely hoped so.

THE NEW IDEA

This new idea. Of nominating through the board of 21 directors. As adopted by the executive committee promises to bring much needed relief. And carry the political aspect of the M. P. T. O. into the wide open spaces. Where men are men. In other words, instead of absorbing much important time. During convention days. With electioneering. All the time will be given to business matters.

Incidentally, the job of being Mr. President will not be so attractive. A paid executive secretary promises to be on the job. And the president will confer constantly with the directors as to policies and the working out of plans. In other words, if the plan is adopted the M. P. T. O. finally becomes a business-like body. No more one man power. No more "What I say goes." Let's hope they raise enough money to provide for the executive secretary and the state organizations. Now that the president will have something to do besides worry where the money is coming from. To run the organization.

It is understood that Harry Davis of Pittsburgh said he will volunteer to raise one thousand dollars apiece from between 200 to 300 exhibitors to start the proper financing of the organization under the lines proposed. It is to be hoped he knows where they live.

BLOCK BOOKING

Liable to come up for some discussion. Right on the floor. Just as Sydney Cohen says, you never can tell what is liable to break loose at a convention. It will be interesting, indeed, to see where the discussion will range: whether the exhibitors can refuse to do business that way. If they start this discussion it is liable to interfere with a lot of the program. Because here is a subject that is vitally interesting to exhibitors. Even if they feel they cannot escape it.

MILWAUKEE?

The first buttons for the next convention read, "Milwaukee."

Harmony Keynote in Boston

During his reports, Woodhull paid a most gracious tribute to the late Charles E. Whitehurst of Baltimore. He said that his death would be felt keenly by every division of the industry. Following Woodhull, Harry A. Staab, executive secretary, Wisconsin M. P. T. O. reported on the music tax situation. He did not have a written report but delivered it as he said "straight from the heart." He said he could not tell the delegates all that had occurred in detail in the various conferences with legislators and law-making bodies, but he assured them that success was in sight despite the many difficulties and that the situation was well in hand.

Staab was followed by George P. Aarons, secretary of the M. P. T. O. who spoke on admission and seat taxes and legal phases of the music tax. Aarons supported THE FILM DAILY'S opposition to the publication of large salaries and showed how this practice alone had prevented one Congressman from voting for the repeal of the admission tax. This Congressman said he could give no aid to a business where such huge salaries were paid and which was so full of scandals. The committee then showed how the exhibitors were entirely separated from any other branch of the industry and were not responsible for the objections which he held. Aarons, Cohen and O'Toole discussed with Secretary of the Treasury Mellon personally and explained to him the unfairness of the seat tax and admission tax to such an extent that Mellon finally agreed that the tax was unfair and suggested its removal in the new tax bill. Aarons said Mellon showed the influence brought to bear by exhibitors in writing to their Congressmen and Senators, getting excellent results; then told how the committee was availing itself of this work and declared it was another demonstration of the value of sticking together and working together.

Exhibitor Service Report

J. W. Walsh then reported on the exhibitor service and adjustment reau work during the past year told of how this bureau was civic causes by using trailers for roads, daylight saving cam public improvements, etc. He of how a woman who was the of a Congressman, and a widow been aided in recovering $ which her husband had invested film producing venture. Through aid of the bureau, the producing pany which issued the stock compelled to take over the stock repay the money invested. He told of how the bureau had ad many difficulties existing between exhibitors and exchanges, in some finding contracts which the exhib had never signed although names appeared on the contract such cases were adjusted comp by the repudiation of the contract. Many difficulties relative to and question of the length of the amounting to large sums of money were adjusted for exhibitors throughout the country.

The non-theatrical situation discussed at length by Martin Smith, president of the Ohio M. P. T. O. The details will be found on page 4.

Just before the session came to end Miss Ray Lewis, editor of Canadian Moving Picture Digest made a strong plea for unity between the American and the Canadian organizations and told of the struggle which exhibitors of Canada through to organize after having covered that the former president a "quitter." She maintained that paid agent from an important concern in the states was employed block the organization of the Canadian exhibitors but that after curing concessions from several plicated in the deal, they got a strong start.

One of the interesting points made in an address which seemed please the delegates very much. It was from their constant applause, that, in her belief, the producer (Continued on Page 13)

Convention Sidelights

con—Maybe Ernest Horstmann busy? Ernie is the executive secretary of the convention committee and they have had him jump through hoops as part of his diet. The Committee are Jake Lourie, Modern, Park and Beacon; I. Wasserman; Stanley Sumner; Somerby; H. H. Levenson; Daniels; Y. Yamins; C. H. Joseph A. DePisa; Frank J. Wood; Joseph Woodhead and Markell.

like all matters of this kind of the work evolves about the executive secretary. And Horstmann had his hands full. But at that arrangements made look good the entertainment part of it most interesting.

Talking of Secretaries

There is little Miss Smith. Who is right hand and left bower for Sydney Cohen. And she is one of the best women in this business. She has several typists working out the program and handling the detail, and she is on the job at all hours. A remarkably capable girl. She knows this convention work like a book.

Sam's Pipe

Sam Bullock. Or should we say Sam? Because he hasn't had a mite in all these years. We're getting old, when we were back when we first met Sam. He was one of the prime movers at conventions. And his pipe has been with him.

When Sam invaded the aristocratic parlors of the Copley-Plaza he had some time before lighting his pipe. And then he took advice of yours truly before he dared to "Not sure they'll like it" said somewhat terrified by the gilt table. But just then a swagger strode by nonchalantly smoking a cigarette and Sam lit up in a

Here's Our Old Friend Tommy

Tommy Goldberg. From more. And with him his old ticks from the Monumental City; Rome, stouter than ever, and wishing to come to the golf tournament, so that Guy Wonders doesn't get it all to himself; William Hoffer, Frank Durkee, "Doc" White—who has succeeded his lamented father in running the big White-houses; Fred Kipp and others.

Pump Handling

The lobby chatter developed the stuff as they began to wander about Monday afternoon, night Tuesday morning. "How's business" was the universal cry. And weren't many optimists, on what between crop conditions, financial difficulties, and worst of daylight saving, the exhibits seem to be having their troubles.

Baltimore Overseated

Among the difficulties of the situation in Baltimore is that the town is over-seated. At least that is what both Rome and Hoffmeister said. And they pointed out that this difficulty did not only exist downtown, but in the neighborhood sections as well.

Standing for Something

W. H. Kateray of the Majestic Amusement Co., Kankakee, Ill., was on hand early Monday awaiting the arrival of his associate, State Senator C. B. Sawyer, who was due to look in on the proceedings. Incidentally, the Majestic is part of the B. & K. Midwest combine.

Kateray has been attending these conventions a long time. He said that his initials stood for something: "W for Wealth and H for Happiness." That's a great combination. And Kateray knows it.

Presidential Stuff

When Pete Woodhull arrived Monday with his Missus he proceeded to park her in the lobby of the Copley and rushed off to attend a Rotary Club luncheon; just as all the big league politicians do.

You want to keep an eye on Pete. He may not make the presidency this term—but he's pretty well groomed for the job, and one of these days—But wait and see.

When Pete arrived someone asked him where his banners were. Because Pete has been out in the open for some time regarding this Mister Presidency stuff. Pete looked around the spacious lobby. Then he noted some tapestries—worth several thousand dollars. "Right there" said Pete, pointing to the tapestry—"right on the back of those things you'll see my name. And boy, when we turn 'em around you'll see something."

You surely would. Among other things a few police beating up the individual who dared to lay a finger upon them.

Seasick

Many of the Eastern Penn. and New Jersey crowd arrived by boat. And what a tough trip they had! So tough that some of the men, and all of the women were glad to stay abed. That is nearly all. Little Eleanor Cohen, daughter of Will Cohen of Philadelphia, was the only female not affected. She had a great trip. Incidentally, she is getting to be a convention-regular. She was on hand in Chicago last year. And she is only about 9.

Another Regular Visitor

Mrs. Emma Watts, wife of Mr. Watts of Springfield, Ill. Watts never misses a convention. And Mrs. Watts is always with him. She is a great traveler. And she likes conventions.

When the Illinois crowd broke away from the national body, Watts wasn't so keen about sticking with the bolters. So he joined up with the Southern Illinois unit. That's what makes for organization.

Making a Long Jump

All the way from Los Angeles came Glenn Harper; Dave Bershon and E. N. Berinstein. Glenn didn't like the idea of his name being bandied about as a presidential candidate. Dave Bershon was formerly with the West Coast organization until he stepped out awhile ago and picked up 14 houses for himself.

Silvermans Active

Jacob Silverman, who, with his brother runs a big house in Altoona, was on hand although his brother could not get away. Busy. Building a big department store.

That's how these exhibitors work out their side lines. But Jacob said next year they would build another theatre in Altoona. Just to keep their hands in.

And There's Pop" Korson

Who hails from Philadelphia. Where besides being an exchange man he runs a theatre as well. Ben Amsterdam, his exchange associate, was with him. Of course "Pop" has to keep Ben around. Otherwise he overstretches those 370 hands until he goes "muchhulla" with a 400 bid. And Ben Amsterdam is some safety valve. His topmost bid with that 370 hand would be 350. Bird in the hand—you know.

Big Pennsylvania Crowd

Not only Eastern Penna. came with a strong delegation. Trust Mike Comerford for that. He had quite a crowd in from the Scranton section. Where he plays around as Boss. And if you don't believe that crowd will be lined up for Mike O'Toole for the Presidency, you take another guess.

So far as Comerford goes, there isn't a chance of his even wanting the Presidency. He has too many things to do. But as for the other Mike of the Comerford organization—O'Toole—that's another story. Quite.

Walsh Busy

One of the busiest men in the lobby was J. W. Walsh of Hartford, who won't be far out of line when the Presidential lightning strikes, Walsh is a quiet, very capable exhibitor, who succeeded "Bill" True and he makes friends without trouble. He's all right talking about most any exhibitor problem until you hit on daylight saving. Then he is just an irreconcilable.

Convention On

pictures were drawing a herring across the trail by publishing the large salaries paid stars to keep the public from wondering how much these producers took themselves. At the conclusion of her address, Miss Lewis received a very generous applause after which the session came to an end.

Directors Hold Night Session

Practically all of the committees were at work the remainder of the afternoon and the executive committee of the board of directors was in session until an early hour this morning.

The convention will resume at 10:30 today and will carry on through the early afternoon. It is expected that the new plans of nomination through a board of directors will be adopted early today thus allowing for the nomination of officials late this afternoon so that the actual election can occur on Thursday.

Brown Wins Cup

Disjunctive Ad, With Stock Material, Gives Him First Place in Paramount's Contest
George Brown, of the Imperial, Charlotte, N. C. is the winner of the cup donated by the Famous Players theatre department for the newspaper ad, published over a seven period.

"The Close-Up," the house organ of the department, there appears the following description:

Brown is probably the most constantly good advertiser in the circuit. Using stock material this ad 'A Society Scandal' would be hard to trump. Brown knew his location on the page would take advantage of it. The rest of the scene to the title of the picture is perfect.

Our eye naturally follows the top of the cut to the black panel in the name of the star and the top of the picture are carried. Ordinarily we don't approve of black panels such as the one supplied on this picture, but Brown has completely taken the curse off it by surrounding it with lots of white space. The entire display is in seven inches and three columns.

We feel that this Imperial, Charlotte advertisement is not only a cup-winner but we doubt whether it would be possible to have any better results with an 'ad network' ad."

ATTACK ON LOEW

Sales Plan Starts Loew Inaugurates Special Long Runs at Increased Admissions in Five Cities

The new sales plan governing the first-calibrated First National picture has become operative. A. W. Smith, who has been placed in charge of the work by E. A. Eschmann, is returning from a ten days' sales trip during which he arranged for long runs and increased admissions on the following five pictures: "The Sea Hawk," "Secrets," "Abraham Lincoln," "Sundown" and "The Lost World."

The theatres involved are the Adelphi in Detroit; the Roosevelt, Chicago; the Wisconsin, Milwaukee; the Garland and the State in Minneapolis; the Capitol, St. Paul, and the Des Moines in Des Moines.

Smith will have a special staff of assistants. They will include Thomas Brady, C. W. Bunn, Harry Hand and Walter Price. The plan has been developed for the purpose of permitting what the company regards as its most important pictures to be shown in regular picture houses, rather than send them out as roadshows.

Loew Going Abroad

Marcus Loew sails for the Continent on June 7. He has booked passage aboard the Majestic.

His stay abroad will range anywhere from four weeks to two months. The trip will be a combination of pleasure and business jaunt. It is likely that Loew will visit the "Ben Hur" company in Italy.

No Friday Paper

There will be no issue of THE FILM DAILY published tomorrow, May 30, which is Decoration Day, a legal holiday.

Sees Need For Exhibitor Leaders To Thwart Producer Machinations

Harry Davis, Pittsburgh, Says Will H. Hays Was Hired to "Convey Influences When Producers Violate the Law"—Touches on Block Bookings

(Staff Correspondence)

Boston—Harry Davis sees a necessity for important leaders in the M. P. T. O. ranks. Yesterday, while addressing the convention on the need for funds so that the organization could properly thrive, Davis touched on this problem in connection with the producer-distributor situation.

He charged the important producing interests with hiring Will H. Hays only because Hays "can convey influences for them when they violate the law." He said:

"M. P. T. O. must hire big men because the opposition has big men. A big fund is the only way to do it. It is alright to say lay off buying pictures from big producer-distributors, but you cannot lay off until you have pictures to take the place of their product. The only way you can get these pictures is to use some of your money on play dates to the independent producers and show them that it's worth their while to make pictures for you. Then, when you have these pictures you can lay off the product of the big producers. But big producers know you won't do that, that you only talk."

Davis reviewed his fight in Pittsburgh against the Shuberts and others and declared that the only way that such influence could be avoided was to spend more money than they did, otherwise he said they will do anything they like. Continuing, he said:

"Look at how they abolished block booking. But this year they are at it again. You have got to take 'The Famous Forty' or you get none. That goes for Hodkinson too. He is a member of this organization, isn't he? And this goes for the whole Hays group. We have got ten thousand times more influence than the producers but we have got to use it. Never mind what the other fellow does. What are you going to do? When Shubert puts up forty stands against me, I don't talk. I go out and put up 80. When Shubert takes a quarter page ad against me, I take a half-page ad and you fellows have got to go out and get other producers and encourage them in their efforts. The big producers don't believe you will do it."

Efforts made to reach Will H. Hays and Courtland Smith for statements last night were unsuccessful.

Universal to Move

Universal has leased part of the sixth and all of the seventh floor of the new Hecksher Bldg. at 5th Ave. and 57th St., as its future home. The actual transfer of office equipment from the Mecca Bldg. will not occur for some weeks yet. The company will continue to maintain its exchange in its present quarters. The new offices will be sumptuously furnished.

Aronson Sails June 4

Alexander S. Aronson, new general European representative for Metro-Goldwyn, sails for Europe on the Berengaria Wednesday. Aronson has been a familiar figure at past golf tournaments where he has led the pinochle contingent. Not so this time. His stay abroad will be indefinite.

Called a Menace on Convention Floor

By DANNY

Boston—A vicious attack upon Loew's, Inc. proved the sensation of the afternoon session at the M. P. T. O. convention yesterday.

Unexpectedly and out of the clear sky, Lee Ochs of New York heatedly assaulted the methods of Loew declaring that they were a great menace affecting all exhibitors in every section of the country.

This sensation completely upset the plans and program arranged. It had been expected that nomination of officers would follow the selection of the group from which 21 national directors were to be elected and that they, in turn, would nominate the incoming officers. In view of the heated and lengthy discussion nominations went over until this morning.

When he was granted the floor, Ochs said:—

"A great menace faces us. Every section in New York is now affected by Loew's, Inc. We are patronizing the very organ that is putting us out of business. I wonder if we will have as many delegates at future conventions if this menace is not stopped.

"I am firmly convinced that this

Coolidge Praises

Has Words of Praise for Theatres and Part They Play in the Life of the Nation

(Staff Correspondence)

Boston—President Coolidge's letter to Sydney S. Cohen in which the Chief Executive praises the motion picture and its part in the life of the nation is as follows:

"It is with real regret that I find myself unable to be present at the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, for I know that I should find both profit and pleasure in meeting the men who play such a large part in providing the people of America with clean and instructive amusement. The influence which the motion picture has is unquestioned, and I am glad to say that with the recognition of this influence has come a clearer realization of the attendant responsibility. Every appeal on behalf of distress and for the furtherance of great movements for the public welfare has met a ready response from the theatre owners, but there are still endless opportunities for bringing to the attention of your audiences other fields for service. I am confident that we can look to the motion picture industry to play its part as an uplifting force in each community."

Take Over Pacific Studios

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

San Francisco—A new million dollar corporation, headed by A. B. C. Dohrmann, and Will Connery has leased the Pacific studios. Actual production will be handled by Elmer Harris and Frank Woods. The schedule includes the making of ten pictures the first year, to be released through Hodkinson.

Japanese Have Queer Film Rulings

Who Said Stars?

The public, for one, says stars.

They love them. They look for them. You've got to give them stars.

Of course there are stars—and stars. There are the real stars. And then there are the synthetic stars that only producers can see when they look and talk through their hats.

Paramount has always had the cream of the real stars. And they're all in THE FAMOUS FORTY.

Take a look at the stars below and think of the drawing power of their names:

Rudolph Valentino, Gloria Swanson, Thomas Meighan, Pola Negri, Bebe Daniels, Richard Dix, Betty Compson, Jack Holt.

But super-pictures like THE FAMOUS FORTY command the services not only of the screen's best stars to head the casts: their casts consist almost exclusively of stars. For instance:

Leatrice Joy, Theodore Roberts, Glenn Hunter, Agnes Ayres, Ernest Torrence, Antonio Moreno, Adolphe Menjou, Viola Dana, Rod LaRocque, William Farnum, George Fawcett, Noah Beery, Lois Wilson, Mary Astor, Kathlyn Williams, Vera Reynolds, Nita Naldi, Huntly Gordon, Ricardo Cortez, Percy Marmont, Estelle Taylor, Anna Q. Nilsson, Jetta Goudal, Norma Shearer, Montagu Love, Billie Dove, Raymond Griffith, Doris Kenyon and many others.

Imagine the magnets for crowds these names will be when they flash in your electrics!

When the public says stars this Fall, they'll say FAMOUS FORTY. For the greatest stars are all in Paramount's greatest program.

S. R. KENT.

Loew Tactics Scathingly Assaulted

Attack a Surprise

menace has never been made clear to exhibitors outside of New York State.

"We know of several sections in New York where if Loew's, Inc., enters there will be no film service for the men who run theatres in those sections. There must be some way of curbing this.

"Don't forget it when you leave the convention.

"I don't blame Loew for acquiring theatres. That's his business but I blame you for patronizing him and thus allowing him to build more theatres. I am a small exhibitor in competition with a Loew house. I have to take the leavings.

"I always have taken them but I predicted several years ago that this was going to happen. In Minneapolis your president told Zukor where he got off but at that Zukor has done more for the exhibitors in giving him good consistent product than Loew. And I am not a user of Paramount. I can't get it. With the affiliations that Loew has, you will be affected sooner or later."

N. Y. Territory Shrinking

He told how New York had been reduced from a 12½% territory until it was now but a 9½% territory. Ochs related the history of the Peekskill case, ending up by saying that after the Supreme Court decision against Loew's, Inc., that Loew let the Peekskill house go, paid the attorney fees and other fees "to escape criminal action".

Amid enthusiastic applause, he said:

"Don't let up on this octopus. Take some action. A resolution will not do."

Ochs was followed by a number of exhibitors, including M. H. White of Dover, N. J., who said he had been squeezed harder than any exhibitor in this country during the past few years. He declared that Maine and New Hampshire were utterly in the hands of two producer-distributor combinations. He said:

"Ochs' prediction of four years ago has come true and his prediction of what will occur should have your serious consideration."

Somewhat as a surprise, State Senator W. W. Farley, of New York, who operates a theatre in Schenectady, demanded the floor, continued the attack on Loew, and offered a resolution of condemnation, calling on the theatre owners to cease contributing to a factor in the business which is using exhibitors' money to destroy them. This was promptly seconded and turned over to the committee on resolutions.

Attempted to Thwart Canada

Immediately J. C. Brady, president of the Canadian M. P. T. O. and an exhibitor of Toronto told of the attempt of producer-distributors of New York in opposing organization of the Canadian body and warned

"Public Good Will, Greatest Asset", O'Toole Tells Exhibitors In Boston

Service Is Quickest Road to Success, He Declares—How Theatre Owners Co-operated with Post-Office and the War Government

(Staff Correspondence)

Boston—Public good will was declared to be the exhibitors' greatest asset by Michael J. O'Toole, Chairman of the Public Service Department of the M. P. T. O. A. in his address on the convention floor. O'Toole explained in detail what his department has accomplished.

"Without it, you can have the finest theatre in America and you will not make money. With it, you can make money in the most ordinary kind of a theatre. I want you to believe with me that public service is the surest and quickest way to secure this good will and the most certain way to always retain it and insure the success of your enterprise. You must become more than merely movie owners in your community. This is the only thing that will enable you to beat back the producer element and others who want to take your theatres away from you."

O'Toole gave instances of how this could be done:

"The Park Department," he said, "wants to get ground for a park or playground. Go to the Mayor or other official. Offer them your scheme, offer them your theatre for mass meetings or a boys' day or girls' day. Get the newspapers to know what you are doing. Get the rotary clubs or such organizations into the fight and work with the Elks or some other organization on progressive measures. Make yourself the most popular man in your town."

In showing how the Public Service Department co-operated with the Post Office last Christmas for early mailing and the proper packing of packages to aid the post office employees, O'Toole read a letter signed by Assistant Postmaster General J. A. Buchanan complimenting the department on the work accomplished through slides, etc., and said that for the first time in Post Office history they were able to move back the peak of Christmas mail traffic. Not only were packages and letters delivered in proper time for Christmas greetings but employees for the first time were able to enjoy their Christmas dinners with their families.

O'Toole reviewed the work of the screen during the war, declaring that it did more than any single agency to solidify the sentiment that enabled the Government to conduct all operations such as the draft, etc., without a single riot.

"That work cannot fail to place us beyond the reach of fanaticism and unfair attacks from any quarter," he concluded.

He showed how in his own state, Pennsylvania, after talking with Governor Pinchot, that exhibitors are now working with the board of censors to keep the board's operations "sensible." In this connection, he pointed out that the interference of producers and distributors never helped in such matters, but that exhibitors of the community where they were known to the officials could always do better work. He pointed out that next year when the fight is made for the repeal of the New York censorship act that exhibitors would take a hand in the proceedings and not lay off as they had during the last fight.

"The producers cannot accomplish results for you through their paid agents," said O'Toole. "They are only standing in their own way. They want to keep the exhibitors constantly in that subdued, afraid class, but you might and can do better than the producer in your own community and he will never be able to hurt you."

the delegates that they would be compelled to fight hard to keep alive.

Late last night, leaders of the convention were of the opinion that it was not likely that a resolution would be filed relative to the Loew-Metro situation. However, the feeling of the New York delegation is such that most anything might occur.

Davis Seeks Funds

While making an impassioned plea for funds, with which to adequately operate the M. P. T. O., Harry Davis of Pittsburgh attacked the method of powerful producer-distributor organizations, and announced that on Tuesday night a small group of exhibitors had pledged themselves to raise $50,000 "which was but a drop in the bucket" of what was needed. He declared that he had put up $5,000 himself. Details of his remarks will be found on page 1.

Wants Organization

Al Steffes Explains Allied in Seeks No Quarrels With Anyone

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Minneapolis—W. A. Steffes, president of the Allied State Organizations maintains deep silence about Boston convention. Officially, exhibitors in the Northwest are attending the M. P. T. O. A. meeting. Speaking of the Allied plan purposes, Steffes says:

"Allied will not invite any a states to affiliate with us until time as these states can show us they are properly organized within their own borders. Whenever a shows an inclination of becoming organized, the Allied will assist them every way possible even to the cost of sending an organizer into the of any other state for that purpose."

"We have no quarrel with anyone neither are we looking for any members of the Allied have for a time felt that there is a great need of a national organization, but it will be fundamentally right and built on the ground up; otherwise we cannot see what good a national organization will be.

"There are still a few well organized states who have not affiliated themselves with the Allied, I want to say that it will only take a short while when these states make an effort to affiliate themselves with us, and I can assure you if their intentions are for the welfare of the theatre owner they will have no difficulty being admitted.

"The Allied is a non-political organization and will be maintained such. My personal opinion is that an organization should be bigger than the individual. For I say that there are chances, if the M. P. T. O. A. in America depend upon one man, it was through, as there is always the possibility of that one man resigning or something else, and the organization would be defunct out of existence anyway.

"I have always believed that various branches of the industry should get together and discuss various problems we are confronting, and I believe we are voicing the opinion and sentiment of every member of the Allied that we are ready and willing at all times to operate and before we start a quarrel with anyone we will first try to get together around the round table."

"I am looking forward for something constructive out of the meeting at Morehead City, N. C., June 11."

The Convention from the Side-lines

By DANNY

Boston "Doc" Whitehurst, a brother of the late C. E. was visibly affected when Pete Woodhull spoke so feelingly of the late Baltimorean. It was a fine tribute, delivered in a fine way.

Little Ray Lewis of Toronto made a real hit when she spoke. Unfortunately, there aren't too many good talkers at the convention and the sincerity of Miss Lewis' comment, and her feminine observations, got away in great shape. Some of the delegates, however, did not get the drift of her ideas when she delved into New Thought and began to quote some forgotten portions of the Bible.

Perhaps Glenn Harper isn't pulling hard to get the next convention to the Coast! Glenn is a great organization man. Tell you how strong he is: he was the only old-time subscriber to the little old paper who cancelled his subscription last year when we didn't like the way things were going and said so. Glenn thought we were unfair. That's the kind of a boy he is. But then some day he'll be back in the fold. Meanwhile, we like his idea of loyalty.

Just to get back in the game Abe Berman was busy handing out circulars regarding the newly formed Imperial Pictures Corp. This is Berman's home town. He certainly knows a lot of New England folk.

Mike O'Toole was introduced yesterday at the Copley to Charles O'Malley by Ed Bingham. Then the reminiscent party opened. Because both O'Toole and O'Malley were city editors years ago on the same paper in Scranton, Pa. What a time they had!

Bill Shirley who operates houses in Syracuse was on hand Tuesday night all decked out in dinner clothes. He had a lot of explaining to do, even though he swore he was going to see a show.

"Pop" Hart, well known in picture circles was on hand looking into the picture end of the Elk's convention which is to take place here during the summer, and which promises to have a tremendous crowd in attendance.

Gus Schmidt of Indianapolis, a well known figure at conventions was much missed. Schmidt is at home recovering from a bad attack of influenza.

However, Ed Bingham, his partner was on hand, having been driven in by Mrs. Bingham. And it's some drive. Over a thousand miles. Mrs. Bingham drove from Indianapolis to Washington two years ago. One of the reasons she likes conventions is that it gives her a chance to get at the wheel for a long spin.

Many of the out-of-town folk will come into New York for a few days before leaving for the South and West. Dave Bershon is going to New York before leaving for the coast; as is Bingham, and many others.

The exchangemen on hand include Eddie Saunders of Metro-Goldwyn; Fred Quimby of Universal; Milton Schwartz of Fox and the local men, of course, from the various concerns. Then, too, Paul Mooney of Hodgkinson and several independents including Oscar Neufeld of Philadelphia; Harry Asher and Sam Grand of Grand-Asher of Boston, many local independent operators and some from New York.

The Society of Composers may not like the idea of that $300,000 income being talked about. Wonder if it is true? Someone please start Nathan Burkan or Rosenthal moving. We'd like to know.

Sydney Cohen was applauded a lot after his speech and that meant something considering how tired the crowd was after listening for over an hour. They sure like Sydney.

There were two pitchers containing ice water on the speaker's table. When Walsh of Connecticut, who was presiding was asked why there were two, he said one was for usual needs and the other might come in handy. Now figure out what he meant.

It wasn't generally known on the floor, but J. Douglas Flattery who represented Mayor Curley is one of the counsel for the Loew interests in Boston. He knew what he was talking about when he spoke of rentals even if this puzzled some of the delegates who figured he was just a politician. In fact, he is one of the experts at the bar on copyrights.

Steve Toth and H. C. Blue of Atlantic City had a busy time looking over the Common. Wondering, doubtless, how it could be. But they overlooked its historical interest.

It must be said that the producers showed remarkable restraint during the entire convention. A number of them were present, and so were press agents, but nary a fake murder or dynamite plot was sprung. Nothing like control!

While Ray Lewis was making her entertaining address it was remarked by Jake Lourie that the lady could "think like a man." But Henry Levinson, psychologist and Talmudist Extraordinary, undertook to disprove it, and all because Miss Lewis was toying with something on the table as she spoke. Levinson pointed out that, although there were on the table before her a glass, a hatpin, a pencil, two gloves and a book, the lady was twiddling the hatpin. "Eternal feminine," observed Sherlock Levinson.

The scribes at the press table were in mortal terror when Sydney Cohen got ready to announce a new committee's personnel. He was always a lap ahead of them, though their pencils flew, until somebody importuned Sidney to "have a heart."

Eddie Saunders got a big laugh in the lobby with his story of the gentleman, wishing to order a monument for his departed wife, asked for one with "gless pents." One being told that monuments were not being made with glass pants, he pantomimed that what he wanted was a design with "clasped hands."

Pioneer Film of Boston showed an "attaboy getaway" by supplying a fleet of autos for the delegates on one of the sight-seeing trips. It was a snappy brand of Boston hospitality, and Harry Segal deserves the credit.

Every city in the country has its "original" film man, and for Boston, that title goes to Frank J. Howard. He looked over the convention and got barking back to old days, when he showed 50-foot features reeled off a wooden spool, and each man's projector was his own exclusive "patent." He recalled the first convention of motion picture men, at Pittsburg, in 1906.

Another veteran of those days was Bill Steiner, who came on from New York to meet old friends. Bill scanned the general proceedings, then shook his head ruefully. "This is a conventional convention," said Bill.

Holding session with the above-mentioned old timers, was another vet, younger in years but much in action in 1906. That was Leon J. Rubinstein ("Ruby") now a Bostonian. He recalled that at Pittsburg he "covered" as editor of the first trade paper, and the cartoons of the delegates were drawn for the convention number by J. Stuart Blackton.

Abe Goodside, of Portland and Springfield, looked in on the proceedings but said he couldn't understand how this could be adjudged a regular convention. "Regular conventions," mused Abe, "are always further away from home."

Harry Sanwick spent very little time in the lobby of the hotel, it was noted. He would no sooner settle down in a chair, when he would be "wanted" in a certain room. He must have been mascot for somebody learning poker.

A Statement by Marcus Loew

WE have made it possible for the exhibitor to make more money in 1924-25. This is how:
We have brought together into one great company three important motion picture producers —Metro, Goldwyn and Louis B. Mayer. This is assurance to exhibitors of high-class product in multiplied volume.

Volume of pictures is a great comfort to exhibitors but not if these pictures are machine-made in order to achieve volume. No picture in the Metro-Goldwyn line-up bears the factory mark. Individuality is the keynote, for three great organizations are producing pictures to be released through a unified, combined distributing organization.

"Cytherea"—1st Nat'l Strand

AMERICAN—* * * Go to see "Cytherea" * * * if you want to be amused and do not be afraid of being shocked, for the spice has been so carefully sifted you can even take grandmother without fear of hurting her feelings.

DAILY NEWS—* * * A surprisingly good thing has been made of "Cytherea." Surprising, because it was not to be expected that anything reasonable could be made, for the cinema trade, of the story of a man who calmly ambled away from a blameless wife and children to follow a will-o'-the-wisp in love. * * *

EVENING JOURNAL—* * * The photograph is an interesting one, due to exceptionally good acting on the part of both Stone and Miss Rich, some color photography and startling situations. * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * "Cytherea" never was intended for the screen, and in the second place, they chose Alma Rubens to play Savina Grove. * * * Frances Marion has done wonders with the script, but Lewis Stone and Constance Bennett are the only players who fit. * * * George Fitzmaurice directed the picture, and he has done a good piece of work, though we refuse to be comforted. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * An interesting picture, loaded with color and vitality with an excellent cast and settings both beautiful and convincing. Also George Fitzmaurice has directed it in a manner which is above reproach. Alma Rubens plays the title role and her performance is subtle and telling. Coupled with her exotic beauty, her acting leaves nothing to be desired. * * *

POST—* * * There is something about it which makes a deep impression upon one. What it is we don't know, unless it is George Fitzmaurice's wizardry of direction. Certainly the story would never stampede anyone, for part of it is silly and more of it stupid and only a few segments of it are alive and human and blood-stirring. The acting is very good * * * but it isn't any better than in many other recent films. The sets and general make-up of the picture are excellent, but not epochal. * * *

SUN—* * * As for George Fitzmaurice, who directed this truly excellent and sophisticated picture, it puts him well nigh unto the head of his class. He has done more than wonders with Irene Rich * * * and Lewis Stone. * * *

TELEGRAM—Certainly this film * * * is a long succession of beautiful pictures melting into one another while a clearly defined story is conveyed to the onlooker. Miss Frances Marion's scenario is lucid from beginning to end. * * * The cast of "Cytherea" may well be called "all star." The players are happily chosen and superbly directed. If you love a beautiful film, embark at once for "Cytherea." * * *

TIMES—* * * So long as a producer for his own financial interests is more or less guided by censorial edicts, it would be almost impossible to make a really good picture of this story. The book was snatched at as a great box-office asset, and it is produced with this idea in mind, but the film possesses very little effective drama. * * * The settings are beautiful and adequate in every respect, and the players deserve credit for their impersonations. * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * Excellently produced, a well-selected cast. * * * The manner in which it is presented suffices to keep the film well within the prescribed bounds standardized for the larger houses. * * *

WORLD—* * * The remarkable thing is that, out of the rapid run of events in the novel, there has been pictured a right compelling love story, with mechanical application which is impressive. * * * A picture play of sterling qualities in acting, directing and photographing. Only in one department do we find inferiority to be marked. This is in the manner of continuity. * * *

"Mademoiselle Midnight"—Metro Capitol

AMERICAN—* * * I hesitate to condemn the story too severely for the reason that I believe the Mae Murray fans will like the picture. I furthermore believe that Mae Murray deserves praise for having overcome mannerisms that she affected in some of her previous pictures. * * *

* * * is what we might call a typical movie. But I have an idea, despite what any of us may think, it will do a good business. * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * and, while we cannot become enthusiastic over the story, it is good to see that the star can do something besides prance about and look cute. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—As for * * * "Mademoiselle Midnight," one may like it or not. The audience seemed absorbed yesterday in the intricate and moviesque tale and their interest seemed sustained as the film unfolded. * * *

POST—* * * full of pep and speed and colorful action. The story won't give you brain fag, and of course Miss Murray just natchelly has to dance, but outside of that it isn't at all bad. * * *

TELEGRAM—That Mae Murray and gorgeous costumes and sensational dancing are synonymous is a belief generally accepted by movie fandom.

Therefore, those who went to * * * see Miss Murray in * * * "Mademoiselle Midnight," knew what was in store for them. They were not disappointed on that score. * * *

TIMES—* * * This production is a mixture of fantasy and whimsicality, which is undeniably entertaining. There are diverting periods and others that are scintillatingly humorous. * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * will do as a program feature. The atrocious subtlety of the scenario and continuity will stop it from being a big event in out-of-town houses, despite Miss Murray's sympathetic and appealing work.

WORLD—* * * For Miss Murray seldom acts but she always dances. She registers coyness by a minuet and eternal devotion to waltzes. * * *

"Sherlock, Jr."—Metro Rialto

DAILY NEWS—Even if Mr. Keaton is Mr. Schenck's brother-in-law, that is no good reason for thinking him funny. * * *

"Sherlock Jr." has a few situations funny in themselves. * * *

Oh, well, if you like him, you do. And if you don't, you don't.

EVENING WORLD—* * * Like all of Buster's screen efforts it is ridiculous from start to finish, but nevertheless has more of a story than his previous pictures. * * *

If you want a good laugh the Rialto is at 42d Street and Broadway.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * while Buster Keaton's new picture * * * seems very funny to us, we heard people say that it was his least worthy production. We like it, however. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—Good comedies are few and far between, but one is always assured of a hearty laugh at a Keaton picture, and "Sherlock, Jr." is not an exception. * * *

This is a full length feature which those who like to laugh should not miss. * * *

POST—* * * Keaton is about as funny as we have ever seen him. Later on the story slumps a bit, but he manages to pick it up and end it with a loud and resounding bang of laughter. "Sherlock, Jr." will go over big with every one who has a well developed sense of the ridiculous. It has lots of action, some new gags and some old ones, and is pretty well acted. * * *

TELEGRAM—* * * "Sherlock, Jr." presents the comedian in his third feature length picture in the role of an amateur detective, in which many clever situations are introduced. * * *

TIMES—* * * There is an extremely good comedy which will give you plenty of amusement, so long as you permit Mr. Keaton to glide into his work with his usual deliberation.

WORLD—* * * seemed to us to be about the dullest of these things we have seen in a year. * * *

"Code of the Sea"—Famous Rivoli

EVENING JOURNAL—* * * is a melodramatic mixup, with Monte Blue coming in at the right moment to save everyone from the plot, and Mae from herself. There are several exciting episodes * * * The story * * * And having sat through the entire picture we rise to affirm that it most unequivocally is nothing but that.

EVENING WORLD—* * * Take it all in all, "Code of the Sea" is a thoroughly worth while and enjoyable picture. * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * a fairly interesting story of a man who thought he was a coward, and then found out he wasn't. If you like sea stories you'll probably enjoy the picture. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * Victor Fleming has handled his big situation so well and has shown such a fine sense of balance throughout, that "Code of the Sea" will undeniably prove popular. * * *

POST—Out on the Plains of Kansas "The Code of the Sea" will be hailed as one of the greatest of movie thrillers. It will not only satisfy the censor in his willful ignorance of the big things in life, but also the farmer's family in their ignorance of the bounding main. * * *

SUN—* * * This jazzy color picture is neither better nor worse than the average run of films, and if you have these efforts you will know how to leave that statement. Miss Murray is still as lovely as ever and her acting is just as bee-stung as can be. In fact, the writer her acting has a bit. * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * exciting thrill story of the sea which is in every trick of such a picture.

WORLD—"Code of the Sea" has thrills but they are mostly pictorial.

were presented from which 21 directors will be elected this morning. They will be selected from the following: H. A. Elliott, Hudson, N. Y.; T. W. Young, Dyersburg, Tenn.; David Adams of Concord, N. J.; H. M. E. Pasmezoglu, St. Louis; Martin G. Smith, Toledo; H. A. Schwalm, Ohio; Harry Davis, Pittsburgh; E. W. Collins, Ark.; E. F. Fay, Providence, R. I.; Fred Seegert, Milwaukee; J. H. J.; Glenn Harper, L. A.; Fred Dalle, Louisville; A. C. Lick, Hot Springs; H. Levenson, Mass.; J. W. Rogers, Carruthersville, Miss.; J. H. Whitehurst, Baltimore; Ernest Horstmann, Boston; Joe Mogler, St. Louis; Sydney S. Cohen, N. Y. and E. P. White, Livingston, Mont.

It was noticed that the name of M. J. O'Toole was not mentioned as a director, thus adding to the belief found in many quarters that he would be the incoming president.

May Have M. P. Week

A committee on business relations was named: Messrs. Fine, Shirley, Bauer, Cohen, Kress, Nash, Silverman, another Bauer, Lesselbaum, Fineberg, Hartford, Fox, Bolmer, Stroh. Jos. P. Seider of Newark filed his report on National Motion Picture Day and declared that the experience of last October had proven an excellent one. He recommended a Motion Picture Week for next October instead of a Motion Picture Day. No figures were presented as to the amount collected but during the discussion later in the day Harry Davis said:

"The last motion picture day was not so good but it showed we could do it right."

Peter J. Brady of the American Federation of Labor in a brief talk suggested "Al" Smith as Democratic presidential nominee and said that the producers were to blame for the existing New York censorship act. He made a strong plea, as usual, for organization and closed by saying:

"You will hang together or you will hang by yourself".

Resolutions of condolence on the passing of Victor Herbert and Dr. Francis Holley of Washington were approved but this business could not stem the attack by exhibitors on Loew.

The Morning Session

The feature of the morning session was the disclosure of the plans under which 21 men will conduct the organization, and the address by M. J. O'Toole relative to the

Inspiration

(Staff Correspondence)

Boston—Major-General Andre W. Brewster, one of the few major-generals in the U. S. Army who spoke at the banquet was introduced to the delegates and after listening to the reports of M. J. O'Toole on public service said:

"I was very much impressed by your high policies and high ambitions for public service. As a public servant myself of forty years' standing it impressed me very much and touched me deeply".

It was a real emotional moment of the affair.

work of the Public Service Department.

In introducing O'Toole, Sydney Cohen left nothing unsaid as to the high value of O'Toole's work to the organization and said he had been "closer to him than any man during the three years of my association with him. He is one of the most brilliant mentalities of the organization and understands the work of the organization better than any man in this country." Portions of O'Toole's address will be found on page 4. At the close of O'Toole's address, General Melvin Barnum told of the work of the Citizens Military Training Camps and urged exhibitors to lend their screens to help along in this great work. O'Toole introduced a resolution pledging the screens of the members to the idea and asked for the proper official in the War Department to establish the necessary line of contact so that this work might be made effective immediately.

General Barnum was followed by General Brewster.

Editors Deliver Address

After the military contingency left the hall, Tom Hanly of the New York Morning Telegraph spoke briefly saying in part: "You men spell the difference to producers between profit and loss."

He was followed by Louella O. Parson, of the New York American, who told of her early experiences as scenario editor of Essanay and also spoke of the Hearst organization with which she is affiliated. As she left the platform, she was thanked by Cohen who said:

"There is no need of your mentioning Cosmopolitan pictures. We all know 'Under the Red Robe' and 'Yolanda'."

It wasn't so much what he said but the way in which he expressed it that brought a big laugh from the crowd.

Douglas Gresimer spoke of the work of the American Red Cross and was followed by Madame Battice, the inventor of the radio mat slide who spoke as a fan, declaring that she has been going to pictures three times a week for the past ten years and she suggested that exhibitors might ask themselves what is the matter with the audience. "Why" she said "do those whose opinions we desire regarding picture values never say anything and why do the people whose opinions you don't value criticize so much?" She believes that lack of information of the problems of the industry was generally responsible for the criticisms which come from the public.

"Banks, churches and other institutions use weekly bulletins as to their work. Why should you, as exhibitors, not do this right on your own screen," she asked.

New Administrative Plan

Immediately following, came the most important work of the morning session when A. Julian Brylawski of Washington read the suggested amendment to the constitution which would permit of the 21 directors having control of the administration. He said that the changes proposed would rest only in the executive committee all the powers now enjoyed by the officers of the organization. Under the plan not more than two directors can be named from any one state and the election of such directors is to occur on the floor of the convention and the election to take place on the third day of the convention. The new plan calls for four regional vice-presidents and part of the work of the directors is that they shall serve for a term of one year and will be empowered to hear complaints relative to any and all officials and act accordingly.

The proposed amendment led to considerable discussion on the floor during which a number of delegates voiced their ideas but there were no material changes to the plan and eventually the suggested amendments were adopted unanimously. Those who spoke in favor of the proposed change included Frank Durkee of Baltimore, Sam Bullock of Cleveland, Tommy Goldberg of Baltimore, Hector M. E. Pasmezoglu and others.

Secretary Can Be Outsider

The board of directors will have the right to fix the salary of the president. The executive secretary need not be a member of the organization. That the committee can go outside

The M. P. T. O. of A. is to be congratulated. They have stepped out of the rut. They are on their way. No longer will one man run this organization. And this organization should be the most powerful of any and all organizations in this industry. Instead, hereafter a group of 21 will administrate its affairs. And this is as it should be.

These men will be selected from all sections of the country. There can be no "rule or ruin" policy, unless every known example of democratic form of administration is to be disregarded.

Twenty-one men will be named today at Boston to conduct the affairs of the M. P. T. O. of A. for the coming year. Incidental—and it is incidental—a new president will be elected to replace Sydney S. Cohen. What the twenty-one men accomplish or seek to accomplish during the coming year will be watched with great interest not only by brother exhibitors but by leaders of every branch of this industry. Coalesced, there is no limit to the possible development of an exhibitor organization along national lines. But before any real accomplishment can occur there must be unity of action and harmony of thought not only between those who are conducting the efforts of the national exhibitor organization, but it must be inclusive with the thought of all of the so-called insurgent crowd as well as individual exhibitors who for various reasons have so far failed to unite with the national exhibitor body.

ONE INSURGENT READY TO GO

Conspicuous as the only insurgent attending the convention was Frank Durkee, President of the Maryland M. P. T. O. Durkee attended several conferences called by Jake Wells of Richmond when Wells organized the Tri-State unit. Durkee also attended meetings in New York at which Col. Cole of Texas outlined his plan for a national exhibitor organization. He was broadminded and sympathetic yesterday, expressed his admiration of the new plans of administration proposed for the national body, and urged its adoption.

The great pity of yesterday's proceedings was that there were not present more insurgents. It is my firm belief that had they been on hand that they would have joined in and heartily approved of the program planned. The directorate plan of campaign was strongly endorsed in Chicago last year by the Michigan group. It opens the way to a finer, more wholesome operation of the efforts of the national exhibitor body than anything that has ever been proposed since its organization at Cleveland.

THE TEST

The 21 men to be named may not work out the affairs of the organization to the complete satisfaction of exhibitors generally. But, in this connection, it should be remembered that there is very little opportunity for the delegates to seriously consider who will prove the best men for this work. However, the test has been made. The M. P. T. O. of A. is headed in the right direction. Broadminded exhibitors will appreciate this, and be governed accordingly. And as Durkee said: "It will probably take several thousand years before we have a perfect organization but each succeeding year will find an improvement and development and that is what we want."

SPORTING

It was a fine and sporty thing. The manner in which Sydney Cohen referred to the absence of some important men. Of important state organizations. Men like the Michigan leaders. And Steffes. He has opened the door. And the action of the executive committee has opened it still further. With the change in the manner of the selection of officials—with the other changes such as a paid executive secretary, plus the plans otherwise laid, there are ample reasons for the possible return of the so-called "rebels" back into the ranks of the M. P. T. O. It isn't going to be easy to get them back. Make no mistake about that. But time—the great healer—will do much. And, if the incoming executive works tactfully and uses discretion, it should not be long before the Allied group is back in the fold.

THE ONE PITY

That the directors, or the executive committee, could not see its way to do before what was done on Tuesday: throw the political end of the organization as far away as possible. Much that has happened would not—could not—have happened had something like this taken place before. But, perhaps it was necessary to learn, from what occurred in Washington and later in Chicago, that to have a business-like organization, business-like methods must be brought about. But it has been brought about. There is much in promise of what will occur, if the incoming regime can raise sufficient funds to carry on—as a national organization should carry on.

LACK OF DISCUSSION

It was a pity. Tuesday, the door was thrown wide open for discussion. And yet no one seemed ready to discuss anything. Perhaps, it was an inopportune moment. Going without lunch, perhaps the delegates wanted to clean up the program and get away. But when one thinks of the many problems discussed in the lobbies, when one ponders over the problems they have to meet, it seems most discouraging that no one was willing to start a discussion of any of these matters right on the floor.

That is what is needed most at these gatherings. Open discussion, debate, a forum if you please to call it such. It is all well and good, and perhaps illuminating to hear from committee chairmen and army officials and trade paper editors, but what would be far more interesting, enlightening and valuable, would be a discussion on the floor of some problem which interests all types of exhibitors. For instance, the length of footage, the over-long pictures; which are killing many chances. Or what to do with the house to meet the summer situation and offset daylight saving and excursions, etc. Or block booking; or any one of a number of such problems.

It is too late to take this matter up now. Too late for intelligent handling of it, anyway. But if the M. P. T. O. incoming officials want to find out something as to how a convention can be made more than usually interesting let them look into the program and procedure of the annual convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. They may learn a lot. And, perhaps, in time the exhibitors will have a convention conducted on somewhat similar lines. That is big league stuff.

The Hays Letter

of Communication to M. P. T. O. A. Outlining His Members' Attitude on Non-Theatricals
(Staff Correspondence)

Easton—The text of the Hays letter to Sydney S. Cohen, in which he outlined the attitude of the members of the M. P. P. D. A. on the non-theatrical situation was made public yesterday when a full report by Martin G. Smith' activities in that connection was released to the press. The letter follows:

May 22d, 1924.

Sydney S. Cohen, President, M. P. T. O. of America, West 43rd St., New York.

Dear Mr. Cohen: I have your letter of the 14th inst. relative to the non-theatrical situation; also I have in mind the complaint of Mr. John McLean of Kingston, New York, referred to us by you; also your letter of March 1924, advising us as to the action taken by the M. P. T. O. of the District of Washington in relation to the same general subject matter, of which action we were also otherwise advised.

If you care to do so, you may state to the exhibitors at Boston that the theatrical situation is having that deserved attention by this Association which is measured by an appreciation of its imperative importance. I assume, of course, you realize the magnitude of the matter. The non-theatrical situation in some of its present aspects and in many of its potential phases is one of the very serious questions, involving many definite economic, ethical, legal and even moral duties, restrictions and limitations. There has heretofore been much talk about it both in and out of the industry. There has been little progress heretofore toward any comprehensive solution. The mere marshaling of the facts alone has involved a mass of detail, the ascertaining of just what is actually going on; the non-theatrical activities there actually are; the laws of the different states and the ordinances of the different cities pertinent to the matter; the actual or alleged demand; such attempts as have been made to supply the demand; the methods employed; the misuse of non-theatrical standards as against exhibitors; the unbridled use of non-theatrical facilities; the experiences of exhibitors and exchange men; suggestions and recommendations from exhibitors of experience who are interested in the matter and studying it—all factors of information necessary to any study of the situation which may be expected to result in a fair and practical solution.

Plans for the solution of the problem must always be and are, of course, dedicated primarily on a recognition of the obvious rights and interests of the theatre owners, who are engaged in an essential industry. The matter is one which will deserve and receive some years to come the most earnest attention of all those concerned with the welfare of the industry.

Very truly yours,

WILL H. HAYS.

Not Behind "Labs"

Du Pont Denies Backing Consolidated Film Industries as Lever to Promote Raw Stock Sales

Several quarters, chiefly those interested in the laboratory end of the business, there has been a report circulated that the Du Pont interests of Parlin, N. J. and Wilmington, Del. have become financially interested in the operations of the Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., the highly capitalized holding company which embraces the Craftsmen, Reutic and Erbogroph laboratories.

This has been denied by John H. Miss and J. W. Elms, executives connected with the Parlin works. The report had it that the Du Ponts, in order to combat Eastman and secure adequate foothold in the raw stock market had made a deal of some character with the Consolidated members who, in turn, were to urge their customers to use the Du Pont stock.

The process of manufacturing Du Pont stock has been under way for some time. It is expected, it will make its appearance in the market as a definite factor in the near future.

Joseph H. San, general counsel for Consolidated is authority for the statement that the report is entirely without foundation.

The Du Ponts were, at one time, reported financially interested in the Craftsmen plant.

Exhibitor Convention at Boston Draws to a Close—Directors to Meet in a Month to Select Paid Executive Secretary—New Financing Plan Evolved

By DANNY

Boston—The fifth annual convention of the M. P. T. O. of A. came to a most successful conclusion Thursday afternoon. Michael J. O'Toole of the Comerford circuit of Eastern Pennsylvania was elected president for the ensuing year, and Milwaukee was selected as the next convention city.

Other officers elected were as follows: R. F. Woodhull, chairman of the board of directors; regional vice-presidents: Eli Whitney Collins, Jonesboro, Ark., Joe Mogler, St. Louis, Dennis A. Harris, Pittsburgh and J. C. Brady, Toronto; treasurer, Louis A. Sagal, New Haven; recording secretary, Geo. P. Aarons, Philadelphia.

Busy on Sub-Sea Process

Bert Adler, personal representative for J. Ernest Williamson has been advised that Williamson is in Nassau in the Bahamas and that, in conjunction with several scientists, he is at work on a new process of sub-sea photography.

The board of directors will meet within the next month or so to appoint the executive secretary.

A new financing plan was adopted through which, in the future, exhibitors will pay dues as follows: houses of 500 seats or less, $1 a week, paid weekly; houses over 500 seats in the larger cities, $2 a week; houses over 1,000 seats $3 a week, in addition to which the national treasury will be supplemented by funds obtained through Motion Picture Day to be held in October.

In conjunction with the financing plan, when he explained it to the delegates, Julian Brylawski gave a wide open invitation for all exhibitors in any state in any organization, to affiliate. This was construed as opening the door so that the former members as well as all other exhibitors, would come to Milwaukee.

The resolution relative to the activities of Loew's, Inc., and involving the purchase of Metro Pictures was sent to the board of directors for action. In all likelihood; it will die there.

The twenty-one directors who will figure so largely in future management.

Fewer Comedies

There will be ten Christies, six starring Bobby Vernon and possibly, another series, although this is not definite. The Christies will feature Bobby Burns and Jimmie Adams. Christie is conferring with Earl W. Hammons of Educational relative to a new contract for 1924-1925 and is also discussing foreign conditions with John H. Taylor and Col. A. C. Bromhead who handle his product abroad. The fact that both Taylor and Bromhead are here now eliminates the necessity of a trip abroad for Christie but he expects to go later on pleasure.

A second feature will be made for Hodkinson. Negotiations are now under for a play that ran on Broadway last year. This full length production will be a fall release.

Exports Increasing

Gain of $376,000,000 in 1923, Dept. of Commerce Finds—Imports Greater—Conditions "Healthy"

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Washington—Total merchandise exports in 1923, as compared in a comprehensive review of overseas trade just published by the Department of Commerce, amounted to $4,168,000,000, and total imports, $3,792,000,000; an excess in exports of $376,000,000. Compared with 1922, this is a comparatively small increase of $336,000,000 or 8.8 per cent in exports, and a somewhat larger gain $679,000,000 or 21.8 per cent in imports.

The figures indicate distinct tendencies toward readjustment in those phases of foreign trade that are not normal now and a definite improvement in other directions.

"The continued though moderate growth of our exports", the report reads, "is encouraging and we should maintain and expand it, even in the face of increased European competition."

Imports during the period under survey are of a non-competitive character, to a great extent in the nature of luxuries, which present financial prosperity warrants. Industrial imports, are of a character which expanding industrial conditions demand.

The relation between exports and imports during the year 1923 are described as "an unquestionably healthy condition".

Best-Selling Books and Best-Selling Pictures.

Popular books make popular pictures. For one thing, a novel must be good in order to sell big, and that means a good picture. Then the thousands of dollars' worth of free and paid advertising a best-selling book receives before it reaches the screen creates an audience for the picture version in advance.

That's why, in picking story material for THE FAMOUS FORTY, we decided to use only the world's newest and most popular novels, the most successful stage hits and the best serial stories from our most widely circulated magazines.

There isn't a story in THE FAMOUS FORTY that hundreds of thousands of picture patrons haven't heard of and liked. There's hardly a best-selling book or stage success of the past two years that isn't included.

For instance, Zane Grey's WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND has sold over a million copies. So has James Oliver Curwood's THE ALASKAN, a FAMOUS FORTY Meighan release.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN, THE COVERED WAGON, NORTH OF 36, EMPTY HANDS, OPEN ALL NIGHT, CHANGING HUSBANDS, FEET OF CLAY, THE MOUNTEBANK, and THE COAST OF FOLLY are the rage in the book-stores of America right now. THE ENEMY SEX was adapted from the first real flapper novel and was the best selling book in America for over a year.

PETER PAN is as well known as Webster's Dictionary and a better seller. Booth Tarkington's MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE is his most widely read romance and has been a stage play besides.

SPRING CLEANING, MERTON OF THE MOVIES, and LITTLE MISS BLUEBEARD are outstanding Broadway stage sensations.

And here is the hand-picked FAMOUS FORTY material from our greatest magazines: MANHANDLED and UNGUARDED WOMEN (Saturday Evening Post), THE FEMALE and A WOMAN OF FIRE (Cosmopolitan Magazine), STORY WITHOUT A NAME (Photoplay), THE GOLDEN BED (Pictorial Review) and WORLDLY GOODS (Ladies Home Journal).

If it's a best-seller, it's in THE FAMOUS FORTY.

That means real money at your box-office.

S. R. KENT.

Put those 'specs' on this!

WASHINGTON TIMES
 An odd and lovely picture, combining as it does an attractive story with colored scenes and glimpses of the ocean's floor. The submarine scenes, depicting an islander's death struggle with an octopus and the escape of his companion are exceedingly thrilling. Through use of the Williamson undersea camera, a startling panorama of plant and creature life below the ocean's surface, are shown.

The Washington Post.
 The South sea islands, in their colorful and romantic glory, furnish the setting for "The Uninvited Guest," at the Columbia this week.
 A large part of this film is color. The low-lying islands with their verdant, tropical trees and the blue waters and skies, are depicted on the screen as Maxfield Parrish might depict them on canvas. This, together with some haunting South sea music and some fine submarine photography

"Screen lovers have seen various productions photographed with the Williamson apparatus, while the technicolor process was revealed here last summer.

"In 'THE UNINVITED GUEST' both these wonders of photography are combined to film a pulsating love-drama of the South Seas. . . .

"Contrary to the usual incidental nature of a drama that demonstrates some new technical achievement, 'THE UNINVITED GUEST' would be rated of the utmost fascination, aside from its technical brilliance!"

"Son of the Sahara"

First National

Whole... EXCELLENT PICTORIAL APPEAL MAKES THIS ATTRACTIVE. STORY THE POPULAR SHEIK FORMULA WILL PLEASE THESE STRONG ON ROMANCE.

Very good cast that includes Lytell in the role of sheik, a indulgent desert ruler, Lytell satisfying performance and Care Windsor is a pretty heroine. Others are Walter McGrail, Rosemary Theby, Montagu Love and Paul Panzer.

Type of Story... Dramatic romance. Those strongly interested in pictorial values in picture production.

"Son of the Sahara" offers entirely satisfying material. Edwin Carewe took his company all the way to Algiers and into the Sahara film Louis Gerard's novel, one which hardly warranted either the public or expenditure that Carewe's efforts entailed. It seems a pity that such excellent production values should be accorded a theme threadbare and unoriginal. The sheik has lost his popularity. But there is every possibility that these very attractive locations, splendid photography and realistic atmosphere in general will compensate the onlooker and cause him to forget that he hasn't any special love sheiks and harems. Carewe has filmed the piece amid picturesque surroundings and has injected plenty of highly flavored romantic scenes that should serve to quicken the heartbeats of the romance lover. Bert Lytell is in every sense a gentleman sheik and Claire Windsor is safe at all times. Even when she threatens to live up to tradition and take the fair heroine against her wishes, his courage fails him, rather his French blood forbids. Claire is free to go. But, just like a woman, she doesn't want to go after another suitor presents himself, which he had hitherto withheld because he wanted Claire for himself, Lytell is proven to be a white man and free to marry Claire. There's some good desert fighting and some effective thrills.

Box Office Angle... You know best whether or not your folks like these sheik stories. If you know they do, "Son of the Desert" is worthy of your best exploitation efforts.

Exploitation... The title is sufficient to let them know just about what sort of a story they can expect. It can be used without much explanation but be sure to tell them that the picture was filmed in the Sahara desert and Algiers. Make sure to emphasize the genuineness of the locations. Play up the names of the important members of the cast.

Direction... Edwin Carewe; usually good.

"Hold Your Breath"

Producer: Al Christie

Distributor: Hodkinson

As a Whole... GOOD LAUGHS AND THRILLS IN FIRST CHRISTIE FEATURE COMEDY. CLIMAX WILL SEND THEM INTO ROARS OF LAUGHTER DOROTHY DEVORE PLEASING.

Cast... Very good. Dorothy Devore shows promise of being one of the leading comedienne. Walter Hiers not conspicuous in the comedy business. In fact Miss Devore is the whole show. Others Jimmie Adams, Tully Marshall, Priscilla Bonner, Jimmie Harrison, Lincoln Plumer.

Type of Story... Comedy. "Hold Your Breath" is a first rate comedy number. It has plenty of laughs and a comedy thrill climax that will probably have them on the edges of the seats. Dorothy Devore is delightful and the rest of the cast is good. The laughs come in good succession and it ends up in a gale of laughs. But it isn't original. It's best sequence is practically a duplication of Harold Lloyd's "Safety Last" except that instead of a man doing the stunts, Dorothy Devore provides the hair-raisers. Of course the fact that a girl puts over the stunts makes it a bit out of the ordinary but the spectacular climb up the side of the building, the many near-falls and the miraculous landings and slides to safety are all pretty much a duplication of Lloyd's tricks. The early reels contain an entirely novel gag in the sequence dealing with a beauty parlor. One of attendants leaves a permanent waving apparatus on a woman's head so long that when she comes out of it she looks like a Fiji Islander. There's some good bits in this episode but the best laughs and some first rate thrills come in the spectacular climb at the end. The titles are funny and get many laughs also. A Hebrew gentleman taking advantage of a crowd by peddling field glasses and camp chairs is another big howl.

Box Office Angle... You know whether or not your folks like a good comedy entertainment. If they enjoy a good hearty laugh you can count on winning their approval by showing "Hold Your Breath." Be sure to make it clear that this is a Christie feature comedy.

Exploitation... Here's a good title and if you give it the proper exploitation should bring your folks in. By all means use plenty of trailer advertising in this case. In this way you will give them a fine idea of the comedy thrills contained in the picture. If you can stage a "human fly" stunt in some prominent spot in your city, it will get crowds interested.

"Code of the Sea"

Paramount

As a Whole... WHOLE OF A THRILLER WHEN IT COMES TO KNOCK-OUT MELLER EXCITEMENT; THERE'S A LOT OF ABSURDITIES IN THE HOKUM PLOT.

Cast... Fine. Rod La Rocque good as the hero who starts off as the coward but what a hurrah finish he does make. Jacqueline Logan pretty as one of those trusting, encouraging heroines who sees only good in the man she loves. Maurice Flynn, as another suitor, doesn't see things quite the way she does. George Fawcett, Lillian Leighton, Luke Cosgrave and others not important but adequate.

Type of Story... Sea melodrama. "Code of the Sea," adapted from Byron Morgan's novel, is just a great big, good natured, thrilling, meller baby that can best be appreciated by a crowd that is thoroughly content to sit through one knock-out after another without asking "how come" or "why do." For them "Code of the Sea" is a whiz of an entertainment. Victor Fleming offers one, long, grand sequence of sea meller that is thrilling to the nth degree. His miniature ships, tossing and rocking in a turbulent sea, are realistic to say the least. His near-shipwrecks, his rescues,—they're all gems of excitement and there's every evidence that he spared no effort to make the real thing. It is really a fine sea sequence, one of the best that's been done. As far as the story is concerned it is just one of these hokum plots plots where the unbelievable things happen and where a hero, whose father before him had deserted his post through fear, overcomes his cowardice, sticks to his post through a terrific storm and when the yacht bearing the girl who believes in him is on the rocks, he goes forth in a motor boat, loses the boat and then swims the rest of the way to save her. It's pretty absurd in fact but it certainly gives Rod La Rocque a smashing, grandstand finish. He's some hero.

Box Office Angle... A real meller thriller. You know what you can do with it. If they want thrills, you can serve them wholesale in "Code of the Sea."

Exploitation... Just give them an inkling of the action by showing a trailer of the storm sequence. If they don't come back for the rest of the thrills, it's because they don't like meller, or maybe they're not good sailors. But you don't have to be a sea-goin' Johnny to get a kick out of Victor Fleming's storm at sea. He's done a big job well. Tell them about Rod La Rocque as the unique hero of the Lightship and promise a pleasing heroine in Jacqueline Logan.

"The Turmoil"

Universal Jewel

As a Whole... BOOTH TARKINGTON'S DRAMA OF THE AMERICAN HOME CONTAINS EFFECTIVE HUMAN INTEREST TOUCHES AND TRUE-TO-LIFE SITUATIONS. TOO MUCH DETAIL DRAGS IT AT TIMES.

Cast... Many prominent players. Cast carefully selected as to individual types. Emmett Corrigan good as the successful business man who wants his sons to follow in his footsteps. Theodore Von Eltz, Edward Hearn and George Hackathorne, suitable as his sons. Pauline Garon pleasing; is dropped abruptly from the story. Eleanor Boardman given little opportunity to act. Eileen Percy good type but not attractive in a brunette wig.

Type of Story... Drama. Booth Tarkington's story deals with a recently popular phase of society,—the newly rich. It is an interesting insight into an American home and depicts some rather general and yet typical instances of present day living. The material has not been so carefully put together, the continuity being inclined to run along in episodic fashion, and there are threads of the plot that, at the close, are left dangling. For instance you don't know what happens to the flapper that eloped nor are you aware of the results of the marital tangle of the one son. Director Henley has concentrated his efforts more on injecting realism and in putting over individual touches rather than developing his story smoothly and with increasing interest. His human bits are always effective. His players are not always properly directed and there is much footage wasted in unnecessary detail, long shots of players walking on and off sets and far too many close-ups, especially of men players. The sequence showing the building of a dam and the bursting of it contains a badly pieced stretch of film that is entirely obvious. This is a right pleasing offering but it needs some fixing to make it what it ought to be,—a good entertainment.

Box Office Angle... Story should appeal to average patron and Henley's presentation should satisfy providing the film is cut.

Exploitation... Booth Tarkington's name, good box office names in the cast, and fact that the story deals with America's newly rich, are your high lights in this. Be sure to talk up the author's name and of the players use prominently the names of Pauline Garon, Emmett Corrigan, George Hackathorne, Eleanor Boardman and Eileen Percy. You might use catchlines referring to the father who misunderstood his sons. Stills and the usual trailer should interest.

Direction... Hobart Henley; good but uses too much footage.

Looking Ahead With Exhibitors

A Statement by Marcus Loew

EXHIBITORS have never approached a new season with more security in the abundance of good pictures coming than in 1924-25.

The merging of the tremendous picture-making resources of Metro, Goldwyn and Louis B. Mayer is assurance not alone of a volume of pictures to draw from, but more than that, of pictures which are the individual creation of three seasoned producers now united into one great company. Many of our pictures for distribution in 1924-25 are already completed. We are proud of the quality of each separate attraction. Of the pictures now in production and those projected for the coming months we can only look ahead with exhibitors and state our belief that from their stories, from their directors, and their casts we are justified in predicting really great attractions.

Judge for yourself. Here are a few of the stars and directors who have been brought together in the merger of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. These names mean money to exhibitors: Jackie Coogan Productions, Mae Murray Productions, Ramon Novarro Productions, Buster Keaton Productions, Marion Davies Productions, Rex Ingram Productions, Fred Niblo Productions, Marshall Neilan Productions, Reginald Barker Productions, Frank Borzage Productions, Von Stroheim Productions, King Vidor Productions, Rupert Hughes Productions, Hobart Henley Productions, Robert Vignola Productions, Charles Brabin Productions, Elinor Glyn Productions, Victor Seastrom Productions, Henry King-Dorothy Gish Productions.

And this is just part of the promise for 1924-25 from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"Why Get Married?"

Producer: Laval Prod.
Distributor: Associated Exhibitors
As a Whole... MARRIAGE VS. CAREER AGAIN SERVES AS BASIS OF PHOToplay PLOT; OFFERS RATHER INTERESTING STORY THOUGH NOT ALWAYS ENTIRELY CONVINCING.

Cast... Andree Lafayette, French star, and previously seen here in "Trilby", does good work as the girl who keeps her job after she marries. Is pretty though not always properly photographed. Jack Perrin suitable as her husband and Helen Ferguson pleasing as the wife who stays in the home. Max Constant suitable as the husband of this marriage. Others Bernard Randall, William Turner, Orpha Alba and William B. Tilton.

Type of Story... Domestic drama. A woman's place is in the home. That is obviously the contention of the author of "Why Get Married", another story based on the popular subject of whether or not a woman can retain her place in the business world and manage a household at the same time. According to this author's ideas, it can't be done. And to prove it he offers two examples. One young couple marry and live in the conventional manner while the other pursues the popular "both working" system. Jim and Janet are happy in their modest home and it isn't long before Jim's promotions permit of a more expensive apartment. Marcia and Jack are not getting along so famously. She has become sales manager while Jack loses his job and is forced to work as a shipping clerk. Jim's work brings him in contact with Marcia. Rodney Strong, son of Marcia's employer, annoyed because Marcia repulses his attentions, decides to get even by writing anonymous notes regarding their meetings. It is at this point that the story becomes unconvincing but it works out to a plausible solution with both couples happy and Marcia admitting that she can't work and be a dutiful wife at the same time.

Box Office Angle... Will interest and satisfy the average audience. Theme deals with popular topic of conversation and offers plenty of chance for argument.

Exploitation... Title should be easy to sell. Play it up prominently and use catchlines extensively. "Can a woman keep a home and a job at the same time? What is your opinion on the subject? See the answer to the query in 'Why Get Married?'" Local women's clubs might be interested in helping you exploit the picture and throwaways will keep them informed on the subject of the story. Use Andree Lafayette's name and recall her work in "Trilby". Stills and a trailer will take care of the routine advertising.

"The Dangerous Coward"

Film Booking Offices
As a Whole... FIGHT SEQUENCE WILL MAKE THIS ATTRACTIVE NUMBER FOR MEN PATRONS. GOOD ACTION AND THRILLS BUT STORY ISN'T A WORLD BEATER FOR ORIGINALITY.

Star... Role doesn't give him much to do in early reels but once he gets started there's plenty of work for him, such as a fight, fast riding, chases and thrill stuff galore.

Cast... Frank Hagney, typical cigar chewing villain, who meets the usual end. Hazel Keener suitable lead and others Jim Corey, Lillian Adrian, Andrew Arbuckle, David Kirby.

Type of Story... Western. Since there is plenty of action, a corking good prize fight, stunts and thrills in abundance, it shouldn't matter a great deal that the story isn't original. Folks won't probably worry about that end of it if they really like excitement. And "The Dangerous Coward" offers a good amount of it. Of course, there is a lot of it that is familiar but they never seem to fail to get a kick out of these stock tricks no matter how old they get. When hero jumps into the tonneau of the auto in which villain is making his getaway and the machine threatens to leap off the mountain road any minute, there is a thrill in it and a good suspense even though you know hero will jump to safety before the fatal plunge. And again, you know that the first rounds of the fight, with the odds against hero, are only stalling for suspense and that hero will come out victor. It runs true to formula but it runs fast. Hero has promised his mother he'd never fight again, after crippling his last opponent. But when hero finds that he had been duped, that the fellow only feigned deformity, he goes in and wins the big fight, and the girl, of course.

Box Office Angle... Will please your men patrons and the general run of folks who like action pictures.

Exploitation... Show a trailer of the fight scenes and appeal particularly to your men folks. Get them interested in the picture and if you know your patrons favor action westerns it would be well to familiarize them with the star. He is offering a consistently good number of westerns and is thoroughly capable of supplying the necessary action and thrills. You might also mention Thomson's trained horse, Silver King. Catchlines might read: "They called his 'Yellow,' but only until he got started." Or, "See the Lightning Kid do some striking in 'The Dangerous Coward.'" Use the star's name prominently, especially if you show his pictures regularly.

"When a Girl Loves"

Producer: Halperin Prod.
Distributor: Asso. Exhib.

As a Whole... HECTIC PLOT AND ORDINARY DIRECTION DO NOT MAKE FOR INTERESTING PICTURE. MODERN EPISODE FAIRLY GOOD BUT CONTAINS TOO MUCH DISTRACTING AND ILLOGICAL SIDE SEQUENCES.

Cast... A good combination of names and some thoroughly well known and capable performers. Their roles preclude their reaching any great heights with their work in this. Agnes Ayres, Percy Marmont, George Seigmann, Robert McKim, Mary Alden the more prominent players.

Type of Story... Drama, "When a Girl Loves," a title that fits the purposes of the box office but rather misleads in its relation to the picture, starts out to be a story of the love of a Russian girl for a great singer. It includes a revolutionary episode and the usual Bolshevik business. It promises to be thoroughly dull but once the characters are transferred to America the theme takes on an added interest. But there are more disappointments in store. The plot becomes hectic and rambling. There are far too many people involved in the story, too much side-play that adds nothing to the main situation and detracts interest from the point on which it should be focused, that is the romance of the Russian girl and her subsequent marriage to a famous surgeon when she finds her Russian lover is married to another. Had Victor Hugo Halperin, who wrote and directed the piece, stuck to this angle of his theme and left out the hunchback and his crazy invention, the thing would have been far more plausible. His direction is poor and his ideas scattered. A fine cast has also practically gone to waste. The comedy touches are altogether out of place and the sub-titles very poor. It looks very much as though Halperin set out to do something big but found that he hadn't the material to do it with. Both in his presentation and handling of the story there are indications that he was trying to get somewhere but lost himself.

Box Office Angle... Not very certain.

Exploitation... Title is likely to bring them in if you want to capitalize upon it. Catchlines relative to a girl whose love for a man was so great that rather than chance spoiling his happiness, she goes out of his life, might interest them. Of course there are plenty of fine names in the cast that will look well in front of your theatre. If your folks aren't critical about the story end of it, you may be able to satisfy them with the cast.

Direction... Victor Hugo Halperin; poor.

"The Gaiety Girl"

Universal Jewel

As a Whole... PICTURESQUE ROMANCE WITH MARY PHILBIN A CHARMING, PRETTY HEROINE. PLOT FOLLOWS RATHER POPULAR FORMULA BUT IS NICELY HANDLED AND GIVEN FINE PRODUCTION.

Star... Very pleasing. Always appealing and winsome. Sure to please her admirers with her work in this.

Cast... Freeman S. Wood given quite a bit of a part. Makes good as the bouncer. Grace Darmond first rate as Pansy, a chorus girl. Joseph Dowling suitable in role of proud old titled Englishman. Others Otto Hoffman, James O. Barrows, DeWitt Jennings.

Type of Story... Romantic drama. Bernard McConville adapted I. A. R. Wylie's novel, "The Inheritors," for the screen. Universal presents it as "The Gaiety Girl" with Mary Philbin the star. The picture, on the whole, offers a thoroughly picturesque romance with some effective dramatic moments, which provide the star with excellent opportunities to display her ability in this direction. She can be as convincingly sweet and charming as she can pathetic and pitiful. King Baggot provides a first rate production that is good in every detail. The settings, lightings and general atmosphere are entirely satisfying. In fact the careful preparation, both in story and production, practically overcome the possible fault that the plot is of a rather popular variety, —almost a common formula brand. Believing her sweetheart dead, Irene Tudor marries the new owner of the old Tudor castle, in the hope that the old surroundings will restore her grandfather's health. Immediately after the ceremony her lover returns, her bouncer-husband is killed by a falling chandelier in their home, and happiness is restored.

Box Office Angle... Pretty, appealing romance that should please most people. The story is attractively presented and Mary Philbin's personality and ability to be convincing in just this sort of a role, make it almost certain to satisfy.

Exploitation... You have the star's name, her success in both "Merry Go Round" and more recently, "Fools Highway," and a good production to boost. Play up the stage angle of the story and show a trailer of this sequence. Promise an ideal love story with the sort of an ending that they want. Give them the origin of the piece. I. A. R. Wylie's "The Inheritors" and arrange all tie-ups possible. Use plenty of pictures of the star.

"The DARK SWAN"

By ERNEST PASCAL

Of all books that might have been written especially for the screen, "THE DARK SWAN" stands conspicuously at the head of this year's list of "best sellers." Though a novel of rare brilliance with reader interest crammed in its every page, "THE DARK SWAN," with its delightful love theme, romance that fascinates and drama that tugs at the heart strings, will find in the screen an even more reflective mirror for its great charm. A superb photoplay story, Warner Bros. regard it as one of their best pieces of picture material for the year 1924-25.

Written by Ernest Pascal, one of the most popular of our young American authors, "THE DARK SWAN" has had a book sale that is astounding. Already in its fifth edition, more than THREE HUNDRED THOUSAND copies have been circulated among the fiction reading public.

It is an unusual novel which differs from the story of the ugly duckling in an important respect. The dark swan never grows up to be beautiful. The author has worked out interestingly the character of his heroine, who is lovely in spirit but more than plain in feature. Her sister, a girl of rare beauty, is selfish, spiteful and shrewd. The conflict between these two contrasting natures develops one of the most powerful plays ever filmed.

The story of "THE DARK SWAN" has color, action and suspense—three prime requisites in the production of any really big picture. Adapted to the screen in typical Warner style, we predict for it one of the biggest vogues of the year. Its audience appeal is certain; its box-office value assured.

"The Fighting American"

Universal

As a Whole.....GOOD AMUSEMENT AND SOME FIRST RATE COMEDY THRILLS. SATISFACTORY AUDIENCE PICTURE THAT SHOULD ENTERTAIN THOSE WHO WANT TO BE AMUSED.

Raymond Hatton, with just a little more extensive role, would easily have carried off the picture. It is he's sure to please as the comedy-hobo and ex-soldier. Gives fine characterization. Pat O'Malley one of those knock-em-out heroes. No object too great for him to overcome when it's a matter of saving the girl he loves. Mary Astor is a pretty heroine. Warner Oland, old time serial villain, once again the wily Oriental.

Type of Story.....Melodrama. Just start you off on the right track and so you won't begin to find fault with absurdities, Carl Laemmle informs you in advance that "The Fighting American" is, above all, not to be taken seriously and that it is intended as a "masquerade of nonsense," with entertainment its goal. And it happens to be an appropriate foreword because if anyone set out to take the thing seriously they wouldn't enjoy it. On the other hand, to get the fun out of it and be amused by the skum that is offered, isn't a difficult matter. Tom Forman has directed the piece very nicely and regardless of the lack of common sense, "The Fighting American" would amuse a sensible audience. There's a lot of good laughs in it and Raymond Hatton's contribution helps in no small way to make the film thoroughly enjoyable. The comedy thrills, especially the airplane stunt business, are also interesting contributions of hokum. Hero O'Malley, disowned by his millionaire-ship-line-owner father, follows a girl to China to tell her he loves her. How hero makes good, beats Oriental Revolutionists at their game, wins the girl and retains his father's affection, offers good thrills.

Box Office Angle.....Good box office picture. Offers laughs, thrills, romance and all the rest of the entertaining elements that the average audience prefers.

Exploitation.....Tell them there are some good laughs in store for them in "The Fighting American." The title is a good one and will bring many in. Show them a trailer containing some of Hatton's comedy business and including one of the titles pertaining to the soldier bonus. These will interest them and very likely bring them back. Promise some first rate comedy thrills and use the names of Pat O'Malley, Mary Astor and Raymond Hatton.

Herbert Rawlinson in

"High Speed"

Universal

As a Whole..... MUCH BETTER STORY THAN THOSE THEY HAVE BEEN GIVING RAWLINSON; NOT ESPECIALLY ORIGINAL BUT OFFERS AMUSING COMPLICATIONS AND LIVES UP TO HIS NAME.

Star....Shows great improvement in his work. Has splendidly overcome his desire to overact. With more good stories should gain admirers.

Cast....Carmelita Geraghty pleasing lead. Fair comedy support given by Bert Roach and Otto Hoffman. Jules Cowles good in short bit as burglar.

Type of Story.....Comedy. With a better story than he has had in some time and the star doing much better work, having almost completely overcome his desire to overact, Rawlinson's latest feature comes nearer the perfection mark than anything he has done in a long time. "High Speed" isn't a near knock-out; it isn't original, the idea having been used in various forms previously, but it is a speedy little story that moves right along at a good pace with enough comedy twists to make it interesting and amusing. Margie and Jack plan to elope while the girl's father and another suitor, Dickie, take steps to prevent it. Jack and Margie arrive at the minister's and are married. They don't know that the real minister is locked in a closet and that a burglar marries them. Later their hotel is on fire and during the excitement Margie's father carries her off. Jack follows and is in time to save them from another attack by the same burglar. He saves the girl and wins the father's consent and there's another ceremony. There's a good continuity here and director Blache has been on the job. His development is smooth and moves along at a good pace, holding the attention all the way. There are some good titles that get laughs also.

Box Office Angle...Will please most audiences. It has some good comedy situations and if they enjoy humor of a farcical order it should satisfy.

Exploitation....Be sure to tell them the star has a far better story than he has had in some time. For the benefit of your men folks talk up the fight sequence and for the women tell them about the elopement and the fake marriage. ### The Session in Detail

The convention was late in starting, owing to the ball which lasted until an early hour Thursday morning. Glenn Harper was the first to report on the financial condition but offered no figures. A number of other reports were presented and the steam roller was working in great shape. Everything was cleaned up quickly. One of the resolutions called for newspaper editors to give fairer play to the motion picture industry in view of the attitude of various newspaper towards individuals connected with pictures and what occurred to them.

A resolution came from the Wisconsin organization protesting against the use of books and stories barred by public libraries from being produced and was adopted.

The report of the committee handling the resolution effecting the Loew-Metro situation which caused so much excitement on Wednesday, reads as follows:

"Whereas, the present attitude of Loew's, Inc., in attempting to monopolize all branches of the motion picture industry is fast becoming a menace to the best interest of all concerned.

"Resolved, That the Board of Directors inquire into, and carefully examine recent moves made by Loew's, Inc., and other allied producing companies and take such action in the premises as in their judgment will properly safeguard exhibitor interests and prevent such injuries as may follow this or any other combination of producers."

When the non-theatrical resolution appeared and a protest was filed against the action of distributors and producers in supplying pictures to such institutions, Sam Bullock of Cleveland asked why a test case was not filed against such distributors, but he then approved of the resolution.

The board of directors then returned with their nominations and O'Toole was given quite an ovation when he took the platform. In accepting the presidency, he said:

"There are a great many things to be done and many situations will be presented to us that will call for a close analysis."

In concluding he urged that all exhibitors keep in very close contact with the national headquarters. "I want criticism and suggestion," he said, "from everyone."

At this point, Julian Brylawski tendered to Sydney Cohen the resolution which will appear upon the gold placque to be presented to him. The wording was highly eulogistic and when Cohen made an effort to reply, he was visibly overcome. It was several moments before he could speak and then it was apparent he was talking simply against his emotions. In conclusion, he said that he accepted full responsibility for such mistakes as had been made, but that those mistakes were of the head and not of the heart.

Immediately following came the squabble as to where the next convention was to be held and after a lot of wrangling the power to appoint the convention city was taken from the board of directors and settled upon the floor. Milwaukee was selected after Los Angeles, Montreal and St. Louis fought for the convention.

Brylawski offered the new financial plan and after Nathaniel Bernstein of Indiana informed the convention that he had been sent by his state organization to observe the convention and report its proceedings, the convention came to an end. The Indiana organization has not been actively identified with the national body for some time.

The Banquet

At the banquet Sydney Cohen devoted most of his speech to complimenting the public service work of the organization.

"We can develop only as other branches of the industry develop," he said.

When he accepted a handsome traveling bag given to him by the Eastern Pennsylvania delegation, he said: "This is the first time that I have ever been allowed to hold the bag in this industry."

Cohen also pointed out in his speech that for the first time in the history of the business an exhibitors' organization had held five successive annual meetings, and declared that the fine work done by this organization would be manifested about two years hence. Douglas Gresimier of the American Red Cross said his one regret was that all of the people of the country did not know what was being done by the public service department of the national exhibitors' organization.

Mike O'Toole spoke at length regarding the public service work. He also adapted several lines from the poem, "Paul Revere's Ride," during which he pointed out that many exhibitors of important houses in the key cities "were asleep" and that unless they awoke they might find that they were injured by a musket ball from a producer's gun. There were a number of speakers representing the Governor and the Mayor of Boston and General Brewster spoke briefly regarding motion picture cooperation and the regular army.

Sidelights

(Staff Correspondence)

Boston — Wednesday morning, when the dominant note of the chin music in the lobby was suddenly found to resemble something between a basso profundo and a lion's growl, it was found that Bill True had arrived.

Sydney Cohen betrayed himself when George Fenberg handed around some souvenir pocket combs. Having no use for a comb on the cranium, Syd was seen to very stealthily take a swipe at his upper lip with the little comb. His amazing action was soon interpreted by the Convention Dopester to mean that on stepping down from the presidency Syd was plotting to retire behind a moustache! Any more clues?

Nobody seemed to figure out what that Milwaukee crowd meant by boosting the town so strongly since the hop-houses are no more. With the breweries closed, what's Milwaukee's brand now?

Harry Davis closed a speech with the hope that he has "made himself clear." Put another lowly exhibit down in the list of shrinking violets! Harry with the Dynamite Delivery, and that's no Pittsburgh smoke, either. He's too clear.

"Alderman" John Manheimer, Brooklyn's rotund representative, revealed himself as an impromptu actor of rare ability at one of the informal little gatherings. John burlesqued a one-man Uncle Tom troupe but was at his best while playing Eva.

Oscar Neufeld of Philly has a real claim to popularity, and it's justified as long as he has his charming little wifelet with him.

Maybe that California delegation didn't spread itself all over the place; and the sunkist badges of the Los Angeles outfit looked like first run rays from Old Sol.

Jack Cohen got himself into one of the many little visiting parties among the guests, and for some reason won himself the title of "Door M." Watching doors must be some form of pastime.

According to Joe Hoerl, a convention is a place where each speaker disagrees with the last speaker. What's that they call them in kenny, Joe?

"Doc" Golden, genial sales manager in New England for Metro-Clywyn, is telling this one on a certain editor of a well known film publication. This editor—perhaps you will recognize him before you finish this—is a lover of the royal ancient game of golf, and while visiting Boston recently phoned Golden that he would appreciate playing a round or so of golf. Golden told him to come along. The editor arrived. A tall slender quiet voiced man took his clubs to him at the Copley-Plaza and "Mr. Golden waiting, sir." The editor found Golden in a big car outside.

"Which club would you like to play today, sir," asked the quiet-voiced chauffeur. "Oh," said Golden chalcantly, "suppose we play at Franklin today." "Yes, sir," said the chauffeur. Finally as the car reached the course the same man asked: "I go around with you today, sir?"

Golden turned to the editor and explained that in going out to play golf he often played with his chauffeur, Henry, because he did not like to play alone.

"Oh," said the editor, democratically, "by all means let Henry play."

Then the editor, Doc and Henry the chauffeur started to play. Henry made the others look like a pair of deuces. There was a certain restraint, however, until it was time to have lunch. And then the secret came out. The fine private club in reality the public links of Boston and Henry the chauffeur was no other than Henry Scully, New England representative for United Artists. The editor—well you guess who the editor was. But Golden thought too great a chance for a good story not to pull it. And he's talking about it yet.

The Right Road

By Danny

Much may develop from the recent convention of the M. P. T. O.. Much should. After four years of internal strife, politics, misunderstanding, false moves and Heaven knows what else, the national exhibitor organization seems to be on its way.

The door has been opened wide to those who seceded. The financial plans adopted; the administration through a board of directors; the appointment of a paid executive secretary augurs well. If exhibitors cannot operate a national organization along these lines, how on earth will they ever do it?

It looks—looking from the outside—as if the program was very well set. True, there are many dissatisfied exhibitors in the country. Some are organized. Most are not. But there are many who feel that a national organization has, up to this time chiefly been a joke and after adopting resolutions which mean nothing it has resolved itself into the question of who is going to be president next year. And nothing more.

It takes time for babies to grow up. During this period they give their parents many unhappy moments. They get choleric, croup, and other infantile, nerve-wracking diseases. Then, as they develop a few more years they begin to smash all the fine vases and scratch up the good furniture and become a nuisance—a very much loved and petted, but nevertheless nuisance. And then, after a bit longer they grow still more and the first thing then they leave the family roof, set up for themselves, get married and start the whole darn thing over again.

Now, exhibitors have been trying to organize nationally for many years. They have been very much like the croupy "cholicky" kids. Several years ago they grew up to a point where they smashed china and scratched the furniture. But it looks as though they were growing up and Milwaukee should mean a lot.

BENEFITS WITHOUT PAY

Any time any man in business—any business— isn't willing to pay adequately for protection to his business, it is time he went out of it. That has been the great difficulty with the national organization. Perhaps, there have been reasons why some exhibitors have refused to join. Perhaps, there has been too much politics, and too little of anything else. But that alibi won't do any longer.

Sydney Cohen never said a truer thing in his life than his comment on the willingness of exhibitors to pay $200 to $300 to prevent another exhibitor from securing a certain picture, and yet will not pay $50 a year towards maintaining a national organization. Exhibitors are too prone to wait until a calamity is in sight before acting. It's a wonder they carry insurance on their property. In view of the manner in which they disregard an insurance which is far more necessary than that of fire or accident.

CYCLONES AND DYNAMITE

It seems that at each successive convention someone must set off dynamite. They broke out on Wednesday with an attack upon Loew-Metro. The very simple, patent fact that there apparently is no law compelling any buyer to purchase except as he desires seems to be beside the question. But at all events the dynamite was hurled. Now what is going to result? You can pretty nearly bet your best silk socks that nothing will happen. For very good and sufficient reasons. And the chief reason is that sane exhibitors who need product for their houses have no idea of cutting off the possibilities of product—not, at least, until they have set themselves to obtain that necessary supply.

That, in a nutshell, takes care of all the noise and fuss occasioned by the Ochs bombshell. What may occur in New York state or within the boundary line of the T. O. C. C. is another matter, but nationally speaking the subject—while alive and heated for a few moments—is dead.

BRIEF FORMALITY

There was very little said. But much in spirit developed. Relative to the feeling which exists between important officials of the exhibitors' organization—and those outside the breastworks. Let's lay the cards on the table. The chief difficulties existing between those groups outside the organization of the M. P. T. O. was simply this: They do not and did not like the Cohen methods, plans and quality. Now Cohen is away from the presidency. It is true that the board of directors is what has been called in exhibitor political terms "Cohen men." What other kind could have been elected to the board at this time? But the opportunity for all factions to become represented on the board and in other offices, is undeniably wide open. There is every encouragement in sight. There should be no need for two organizations of a national character of motion picture theatre owners. And the sooner that leaders of both factions put their feet under the mahogany—the better.

And so with the close of the convention, the M. P. T. O. of A. adds one more year to its record. Sydney Cohen said something when he pointed out at the banquet that for the first time in the history of this industry an exhibitor organization had met for five successive conventions. Just think. Five in a row. That's going some for exhibitors.

Now that the exhibitor organization is apparently set and headed in the right direction the very first thing that should be done is for Mr. O'Toole and his associates to try and work a get-together first with the allied and other exhibitor groups and secondly with the Hays organization. Let these various exhibitor bodies fight things out themselves. Behind closed doors. Let's end this public washing of dirty linen. Every industry has its problems. They always will have. You can't expect a millennium even in the motion picture business without certain sacrifices and certain difficulties and you are going to have them. But, if the exhibitor organization will actually cooperate, will actually try, will adopt a give-and-take basis and if the doorknob on the Hays office isn't regarded as poison then with a willingness to get somewhere, many annoying, difficult problems can be adjusted. Without effort wasted. Without excitement. Calmly. Coolly. Dispassionately.

And that's what an exhibitor organization should be rebuilt for—The development of better conditions for the exhibitor body as a whole and for the exhibitor as an individual. And it can be done. It should be done. It will be done.

President

Newspaper Opinions

"Abraham Lincoln"—1st Nat'l Metropolitan, Washington

POST—No character remains in your mind but Abraham Lincoln after the conclusion. The performance of George A. Billings as "Abe" imprints upon your memory an Abraham Lincoln worthy of any tribute.

STAR—One of the really worth-while moving pictures, one of the few that can be counted on the fingers of one hand since the very inception of the art, is "Abraham Lincoln," the screen version of the dramatic and vivid life and career of America's most picturesque and lovable figure. * * *

TIMES—This film is the first real dramatic biography to be contributed to art by the motion pictures. All films of similar nature must come to this production to find their standards.

"April Showers"—Preferred Reade's Hipp, Cleveland

NEWS—It is a photoplay without a villain or a vampire; its characters are pretty human but the prize fight which comes as the climax, alone saves it from being classed as one of filmdom's mediocrities.

PLAIN DEALER—The picture has been sensibly made; it holds the interest pretty consistently and it carries more of the breath of life than many of them.

"Broadway After Dark"—Warners Rialto, Washington

POST—Broadway of the great white lights is the theme of what can be called one of the finest pictures the Rialto has offered this year.

TIMES—* * * any director who, on his first attempt, can take an old-fashioned melodrama and inject into it enough imagination to make it both a good picture and a fine piece of dramatic art has "arrived."

"Conductor 1492"—Warners State, Cleveland

NEWS—Here is a pretty good comedy with little of the old slapstick stuff.

It actually is a melodrama made into a funny film. It has its villain and its hero, its thrilling scenes and its pathos, but principally it has its humorous situations and scenes.

PLAIN DEALER—This film may be the essence of ancient hokum, but you're going to find that it is good entertainment.

PRESS—It has a melodramatic finish. But the comic strain is preserved throughout, so that it adds variety and a climax to the picture without destroying its basic tone.

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall"—United Artists Orchestra Hall, Chicago

TRIBUNE—The picture has charm and romance and adventure. It has humor. It has beautiful costumes and scenery. The sets are all that could be desired. So is the direction. The acting is so good you forget it is acting.

"The Greatest Love of All"—Stanley, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—Here Mr. Behan as the immigrant son does a fine piece of dramatic work in his efforts to gain freedom for his mother. The mother role, essayed by Marie Di Bendetta, finds a genuinely aged Italian woman playing the part.

INQUIRER—It is more than a picture, however, for in the middle the screen slowly lifts to find the whole cast seated on the stage and the next part is acted out. Then the screen reappears and the picture goes on as usual.

NORTH AMERICAN—The picture was written and directed by Mr. Behan, and is a more than usually exciting melodrama.

PUBLIC LEDGER (MORNING)—In his latest photoplay, "The Greatest Love of All," is fully equal to the George Behan of the legitimate stage, and in both places he is a master of acting.

"The Great White Way"—Gold-Cosmop. New, Baltimore

AMERICAN—* * * packed the New Theatre yesterday through seven performances.

Short Subjects

"Family Fits"—Cameo Comedy Educ'l

Type of production 2 reel comedy
Good Comedy Number

According to "Family Fits" every husband should let his wife fight her own battle, (when it's with somebody else) because it doesn't pay to interfere. By the time the hubby in "Family Fits" had picked a good fight with the other woman's husband, the two wives had already "kissed and made up." This is a good little laugh getter with amusing situations offered in the sequence wherein the two couples, living in the same house, decide to settle their differences by dividing the rooms into two. The complications that ensue are funny although the slap-stick is laid on a bit too thick at times.

Ives-Leventhal "Stereoscopiks"—Educ'l

Type of production 1 reel novelty
Some Realistic Frights

There's some genuine bogey-boo scares in this latest type of film novelty. The reel consists of pictures, which, when viewed through colored gelatin lenses, have the appearance of reality. For instance in a scene showing a man approaching with a selzer bottle in his hand, the man appears to be coming right at you and when he squirts the selzer you're actually inclined to dodge to avoid the spray. This is a genuine novelty, should go big with any audience and should fit nicely on your program.

There were four or five hundred persons in line when the ticket office opened for the 10 o'clock performance * * *

NEWS—Think of being able to go to New York and meet a long list of celebrities in less than two hours! But that is exactly what you do in the Cosmopolitan photoplay "The Great White Way" * * *

"Happiness"—Metro Colonial, Indianapolis

NEWS—The play is not particularly thrilling. It is a series of episodes which Mr. Manners has written to accentuate his wife's personality.

STAR—Laurette Taylor's second screen vehicle, "Happiness," which opened at the Colonial yesterday, is a pretty good carbon copy of her first venture in the drama that moves but speaks not.

"How to Educate a Wife"—Warners Metropolitan, Baltimore

SUN (EVENING)—"How to Educate a Wife," while excellent in many ways is not up to the standard Bell has set in his two earlier productions. * * *

Considering the paucity of material offered, it is really amazing what he managed to evolve.

"Triumph"—F. P.-L. Stanton, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—A new Cecil De Mille picture, bearing the title of "Triumph" and answering well to the suggestion that this

"The Mysteries of Mah Jong"—Norman Jefferies Prod.—Arrow

Type of production 2 reel novelty
Mah Jong a la Mode

This should prove a nice novelty number and a good drawing card for exhibitors. In view of the current Mah Jong craze it shouldn't be difficult to gather in a good crowd with a title that promises a picture dealing with the popular game. For those who have heard a lot about it but haven't seen it played, the picture gives a fair insight into the game. If the producer intended it as a lesson in Mah Jong, his effort is rather futile because it would be practically impossible for a person, knowing nothing about the game, to get started from what they learn here. As far as the average brain is concerned it is still likely to be very much of a mystery after the end of the second reel. But as a straight novelty number it is interesting and serves to give those not familiar with the game a bit of an idea of what it's all about. Whether they can tell a "Pung" from a "Chow" an hour after is another matter. The offering has first rate box office possibilities and exploitation should be simple. Tie-ups and Mah Jong contests should advertise it elegantly.

title conveys, without that over-elaboration of spectacular display which too often over-weights a picture to the disadvantage of its story * * *

INQUIRER—It seems hardly possible that the man who directed those splendid scenes could be responsible for such an absurd thing in the first part of "The Ten Commandments" as "Triumph"

NORTH AMERICAN—* * * tho it has virtue triumphant, its plot doesn't come so near to getting anywhere.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—Cecil B. De Mille's latest picture, "Triumph" * * * is one of those delightful relaxations that he allows himself between production of spectacles and it makes the enthusiastic fan wish De Mille would go in for that type of picture more than he does.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—Cecil B. De Mille gets away from the grandiose and ancient and deals with the romance of modern business.

"Icebound"—F. P.-L. Park, Mall, Cleveland

NEWS—The picture is drab in places but it soars with vitality and, best of all, it doesn't contain one cheap thrill.

PRESS—And it is a fine, sincere picture, regardless of the fact that one feels that this frigidity is considerably exaggerated for the purpose of the story. It is difficult to believe that a family could be quite so cold and unfeeling as the Jordans.

TIMES—Richard Dix assumes the role of the youngest son and brings a sense of vitality to the part which stands out in relief against the utterly colorless background formed by the remainder of the cast.

"Lost In A Big City"—Arr Fay's, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—* * * It is mellow drama, of the sort that brings a big into the throat over the trials and tribulations of the little blind girl, Florence, mother, having married a rascal and assumed name, is deserted, and in a deavor to find him goes to New York.

"Mlle. Midnight"—Metro Madison, Detroit

PRESS—It drew large audiences Madison Sunday and promises to keep show house filled during the week.

TIMES—Mae Murray's agile love plus emotional acting of a high order ries "Mademoiselle Midnight" through smashing finale and Madison patron Sunday registered unmistakable approval the vivid melodrama * * *

"The Meanest Man in the World"—1st Nat'l Loew's Palace, Washington

POST—* * * proves that there is available somewhere, sufficient material goes toward making a highly successful toplay.

STAR—It is a story of everyday from a rent collector's point of view, a magnate to give orders for evictions for at least one clerk too soft-hearted obey.

TIMES—Bert Lytell and Blanche take the leading roles, which is about best thing that can be said about it.

"Men"—F. P.-L. Ohio, Indianapolis

NEWS—* * * Pola Negri * * * has real animation, more ability, more fire, more flair for tempestuous scenes which are credible than any other actress on the screen.

STAR—The result is a stirring performance, backed by a production filled with touches and novel ideas.

"Peter the Great"—F. P.-L. Strand, Montreal

STAR—The power and simplicity of sian drama are revealed effectively in a film, "Peter the Great," at the Strand, week. Hailed as a "flaming romance," rather a character-study of one of the standing personalities of Russian history.

"Puritan Passions"—Hodkinson Fox, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—Adapted from Percy Ayer's stage play, "The Scarecrow," screen version, although interesting in novelty, is rather slow in action, the a for the most part is unconvincing.

NORTH AMERICAN—* * * is on the motion pictures which do not depend those doubtful devices of picture making which have earned the movies their less-orable adjectives.

PUBLIC LEDGER (MORNING)—is well acted, capably directed and pleasing educational as to the customs and characters of New England at the close of seventeenth century.

PUBLIC LEDGER (EVENING)—A ture minus the gay frivolities and laughing youth, yet gripping enough to duce an interest throughout.

"Racing Luck"—Asso. Exhibito Circle, Indianapolis

NEWS—One of the wildest and at same time one of the funniest farces screen has shown in recent months is "ing Luck," the feature in which M. Banks is starring * * *

STAR—The spectators at the Circle terday broke out in applause during course of Monty's hilarious drive. I good fun throughout.

"Shadows of Paris"—F. P.-L. Capitol, Montreal

STAR—* * * Pola Negri plays the of a girl leading a double life, that of queen of an Apache band and the wife of a respectable member of society, is on which artistic merit and popular appeal been skillfully combined.

Photographic quality has a definite box-office value—your audiences appreciate it.

SERVICE

By DANNY

Mr. O'Toole and his public service ideas made a big hit at the Boston convention. Many of the old timers have regarded this "public service" as so much "window dressing." And in fact there hasn't been anything like as much done with the department as should have been. It's chiefly because so few exhibitors want to seriously consider such matters. But O'Toole's remarks woke them up, as did the expressions of General Brewster.

The important Southern exhibitor, listening to O'Toole's report said: "I'm mighty sorry I did not have all my house managers here to listen to what O'Toole said. I'm going to see to it that all of them get his report. That is great stuff. The power all of us get doing it the better off we will be."

And he is right. Building good is one of the greatest assets any exhibitor can have. Remember this: It matters not how many good pictures you show you always have a certain percentage of average, ordinary pictures; some of which may not please all of your folks. But if they are looking at you as something different than just a showman taking quarters and dimes there is an entirely different atmosphere about you and your house. And two or three ordinary pictures—even in a small town—will be offset easily if you have that atmosphere.

The national organization was where they would arrange in some way to have the O'Toole report reach every exhibitor in this country. And I asked so that he would be compelled to read it—absorb it, and make use of the suggestions.

It's mighty fine, great business building stuff.

Inside Stuff

Some people aren't going to believe it. But that makes no difference. It happens to be the truth. Up to the last minute Sydney Cohen refused to serve on the board of directors. He wanted to go his way and not be involved with the organization—except, of course, as a workman in the ranks.

It incidentally leaked out during the convention that Cohen was all set to retire at Chicago. When conditions which developed forced him to change about. Yes, I know the conditions are developing. But the facts are that Cohen had his report read—not typewritten—for that

Pyramid Seeks Relief

Wants Court to Modify Injunction Against Sale of Stock—Smallwood Denies Fraud

Pyramid Pictures, Inc., has filed an application in the Supreme Court to modify the injunction obtained last July by the Attorney-General, restraining the corporation from selling any more stock. Arthur N. Smallwood, president, states in an affidavit that the company can be put on its feet and the 4,000 persons who bought securities amounting to $750,000 in the corporation between 1921 and 1923, will have a chance for a return on their money if the corporation is permitted to sell at the present time $250,000 of five year profit sharing bonds.

Smallwood states that the $750,000 obtained by the sale of stock was all used in the production of six films and that the professional character of the Pyramid enterprises "compares favorably with the best in the moving picture industry." He stated that the company was not successful because its assets have all been tied up in the six films and because the American Releasing Corp., which was distributing them went into bankruptcy. He declares there was no fraud in the sale of any of the stock.

Smallwood also asserts that the Pyramid Studio at Astoria, L. I., is intact, and ready to produce films, and that the goodwill of Pyramid is a valuable asset. He declares that the corporation wants to exchange $750,000 in profit sharing bonds, for the $750,000 of unit certificates held by stockholders, and that a number of the stockholders have approved of

Stops "3 Weeks;" Rank Reduced

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Indianapolis—Capt. Ed. Schubert has been reduced to a lieutenantcy because he acted without authority in stopping "Three Weeks" from further showings at Mr. Smith's theatre last week. ## States, The Basis

Leaders of Allied Group Think the Territorial M. P. T. O. is Bed Rock for Nat'l Solidity

In response to a telegram sent by the FILM DAILY to the leaders of the Allied State Organizations, asking what they thought of the new plan of administration developed by the M. P. T. O. A. at Boston last week, replies have been received from Frank J. Rembusch of Indiana; H. M. Richey of Michigan; H. A. Cole of Texas and W. A. Steffes of Minnesota.

The new M. P. T. O. plan, as noted, will really vest the management of the entire organization in a committee of twenty-one directors, with not more than two directors selected from any one state. These directors are to be elected on the third day of each convention and by open vote on the floor. The directors will fix the salary of the president and also appoint the executive secretary who may or may not be an outsider.

Of the telegrams received in reply, Al Steffes is the only one who failed to make any statement for publication declaring that, since the Allied State organization was not affiliated with any other body, he felt he could maintain silence. The others express the belief that the state exhibitor unit is the basic foundation upon which a successful national body must be built.

Rembusch for Outside Head

Frank J. Rembusch, in his telegram suggests that an outsider be secured to head the exhibitor body. He says:

"I suggest a national committee elected one from each distributing center to conduct the national organization. This committee, in turn, should be subdivided into smaller committees of three, each with a chairman. Month periods with regular meetings at these times. The committee should be empowered to act on finance, legislation, better business methods, arbitration, and the like.

"All our past history proves that an exhibitor organization cannot succeed with a national president in full charge because the activities immediately pass into hands of small group. To interest the great mass, an organization must be so constituted that

Ancient History

When Louella O. Parsons told of the old days of the Essanay—for which she was scenario editor—she uncovered some skeletons and rattled them. In those days she said they paid for scenario's at the rate of from $15 to $25, and when she paid Rupert Hughes $75 for a story George Spoor told her she was "ruining" his organization. Twelve years later Hughes offered $3,000 for that same story.

"And Ben Turpin," she went on, "was an errand boy and extra man and when he was in a picture with Chaplin, Charlie, after seeing the picture, said he would never again make a picture with Ben in it. And he never did."

Omaha—The Supreme Court has reversed a decision fining Harry A. Taylor, a local exhibitor, $5 for alleged breach of the child labor law when he staged a prologue in which seven small children took part. The case attracted some attention here and was regarded as a test case.

Newspaper Opinions

"Sherlock, Jr."—Metro Washington, Detroit

PRESS—Buster Keaton's third feature-length comedy, "Sherlock, Jr.," * * * is about the best thing this "straight face" comedian has done. It is original, and the new gags kept Sunday's audience in an uproar.

TIMES—Assisted by a talented cast, the comic star has gone the limit in concocting ingenious scenes that induce laughter.

"The Shooting of Dan McGrew"—Metro Piccadilly, Rochester

DEMOCRAT-CHRONICLE—To the present reviewer the red-blooded virility of Robert Service's "Spell of the Yukon" was significantly absent until almost the very end when the introduction of the author's lines as subtitles gave the desired touch to the production.

HERALD—* * * the screen version of the much read poem of Alaska is so decidedly ridiculous that one can well expect even a Shakespearian re-writing for the movies.

"A Society Scandal"—F. P.-L. Eastman, Rochester

DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE—There is reason to believe that "A Society Scandal," the new photoplay starring Gloria Swanson which is the principal screen offering for the week, will prove as popular an attraction as other plays in which Gloria has appeared as a woman of fashion.

HERALD—Rod La Rocque might well choose better things in which to play. Gloria Swanson might well stay within her own province, which is not that of the social field. All told a disappointing picture.

TIMES-UNION—Nevertheless it is, in the last analysis, nothing more than piffle—and unwholesome, disagreeable piffle at that.

"Sporting Youth"—Universal Apollo, Indianapolis

NEWS—The picture reminds one of the racing stories done by the late Wallace Reid, for it has hectic action, a good deal of humor, excitement galore and a subplot of tender passion which is so necessary.

STAR—Only the deafening put-put-put of the Speedway cars is missing in Universal's auto race story, "Sporting Youth," * * *. The grime-covered drivers are there, cheering spectators and spills.

"Those Who Dance"—1st Nat'l Allen, Cleveland

NEWS—It's pretty stagey stuff from beginning to end. Melodrama? Yes. Hokum? Indeed. Entertaining? Hardly. Some people may find it entertaining, but others won't. I for one, didn't.

PLAIN DEALER—The action in this film rolls to unbelievable heights. Just when you think everything is hunky-dory for the hero, the plans go awry and he gets into a tighter pinch. Is he down hearted? Not this fellow. At the climax the girl and the hero pit their wits against a gang of toughs—and win.

PRESS—"Those Who Dance," * * * completes its title with "Must pay the fiddler." A familiar moral. The movie shows how transgression is punished.

"The Uninvited Guest"—Metro Regent, Rochester

DEMOCRATIC-CHRONICLE—* * * afford a fair amount of entertainment. Good photography, including some scenes done in color by the Technicolor process as well as a number of undersea views, is the most distinctive feature of the production.

HERALD—Some remarkable photography (colored and otherwise), various startling undersea pictures. Lefty Flynn of football fame and Louis Wolheim of "Harry Ape" fame in a fight that is more exciting than a World's Championship battle.

TIMES-UNION—While there is not much to be said for the scenario, the play, as a whole, will serve for an hour's entertainment by reason of the photography and the interest of the tropical and undersea scenes.

"Through the Dark"—Gold-Cosmop. Strand, Detroit

PRESS—* * * a melodramatic photoplay

The tale is unraveled neatly and proves engrossing from the first flicker to the final fade-out.

TIMES—Believe us, there is plenty of action! Everybody gets what is coming to him—trust the author for that.

"The Unknown Purple"—Truart Columbia, Washington

POST—Probably the outstanding feature of the picture is the uncanny manner in which the producers have handled the purple ray of light which predominates many of the scenes and in which there is a human body visible to the eye.

STAR—"The Unknown Purple", shown at the Columbia Theatre this week, the play of Roland West and Carlyle Young, transferred to the screen, retains the appeal that made it one of Broadway's successes a year ago.

TIMES—The Columbia is fortunate in having such an unusual photoplay as this mysterious and fascinating story of a man's revenge, as its major offering this week.

"The White Moth"—1st Nat'l Capitol, Detroit

PRESS—Few pictures of recent showing have been provided with such lavish scenes of gay parties, richly dressed women and handsome men. To lovers of pictures of this type "The White Moth" should prove decidedly entertaining.

TIMES—* * * it could as well be called "Dressing Room, Bedroom, Ballroom and Bath", because it goes one, two or possibly three, better than anything Al Woods ever offered on the stage in the line of sex daring.

"The Yankee Consul"—Asso. Exhib Crandall's, Washington

POST—"The Yankee Consul" is rip-roaring fun. The fact that the locale shifts from New York to Rio de Janeiro instead of to Santo Domingo only paves the way for a series of episodes in a supposedly haunted castle and a motor car dash down a mountain side that are packed with laughter.

STAR—Nothing of Raymond Hitchcock's famous musical comedy remains in Douglas McLean's picturization of "The Yankee Consul", but the title invented by Harry Blossom, Jr. The changes, however, make it a more suitable vehicle for the talents of the young screen comedian.

Karlton, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—There is dramatic action in "The Yankee Consul," * * * * * Conspirators to the right of him and to the left of him, hot-headed Spaniards all around him, and the stake a lovely girl.

INQUIRER—* * * the picture is a well worth while one, and the young comedian is very much at home and which keeps him on the go most of the time.

NORTH AMERICAN—Douglas McLean blows into "The Yankee Consul" on a summer storm and the rest of the reels are just as breezy.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—There is an amusing duel with a sword and an umbrella; there is a race down the mountain with Dudley in a car with no brakes; there is a great big chest of "gold," and all sorts of comical predicaments that Dudley has to overcome.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—The general idea of the story is not a particularly new one, yet the star creates quite a few original situations and by means of his clever pantomime causes a good deal of mirth.

F. L. Shellabarger has joined Selznick to handle publicity on "Missing Daughters".

Who Will Direct the Best Pictures this Fall?

Great pictures are, ninety-nine times out of a hundred, the result of carefully planned combinations of great stars, great stories and great directors.

In planning THE FAMOUS FORTY, having acquired the great stars and stories, Paramount could not, of course, be satisfied with less than the best directorial talent available in the industry today.

The directors of THE FAMOUS FORTY consist:

First, of producing geniuses who have proven their value to you at the box office by long and consistent successions of hits;

Second, of the most promising of the new directorial blood in the field, for this is emphatically the day of the up-and-coming director as well as of the tried-and-proved veteran.

I don't need to point out what stands back of these names:

Cecil B. De Mille, James Cruze, Ernest Lubitsch, William de Mille, Allan Dwan, Sidney Olcott, Herbert Brenon, Irvin Willat, Joseph Henabery, Alan Crosland, Victor Fleming, Dimitri Buchowetzki, Sam Wood, Wallace Worsley and Victor Heerman.

And here is the fresh, new talent among THE FAMOUS FORTY directors:

R. H. Burnside (formerly producing director of the New York Hippodrome), Paul Iribe and Frank Urson (producing under the supervision of Cecil B. De Mille), Paul Bern, Paul Sloane, and Roy Pomeroy.

These men will direct the best pictures on the market this Fall and Winter.

each section and each individual can participate in all matters and have some power to say and do things.

"The present Allied organization is built along this line. The Committee of Seventeen of which I was chairman four years ago had this idea. We went a step further in attempting to have the Honorable Judge Taft to be the head of the organization. The big man from the outside is still the best idea, but until we can finance such an organization we must do the work ourselves. In fact, if the organization is built along lines of control by a large committee and not a few, it will function without any big man."

States Should Pick Delegates

Colonel H. A. Cole, president of the M. P. T. O., who paid several visits to New York in order to develop some sort of an organization that could serve exhibitors in an effective manner stated:

"I believe direct membership of exhibitors in the national organization the wrong idea. Exhibitor membership belongs in state or zone bodies and the national organization should consist of one or more representatives, elected by each of such bodies.

"If the new move contemplates something like this, I believe it to be a step in the right direction."

Against Large Committees

Henderson M. Richey of the Michigan M. P. T. O. said:

"No state can afford to overlook any unselfish, sincere, well-directed attempt toward national organization. With only meager details available at this time of the proposed executive committee of twenty-one, no one could say just what Michigan's attitude would be.

"However, I am sure that it would depend on the personnel of the twenty-one plan of organization, the finance and organization, the objectives and methods of reaching these objectives. In the past such committees have been found to be unwieldy it would also depend on who would and sometimes unavailable. Therefore, it would also depend on who would be selected to carry on active management of such a project.

"Michigan has always felt that a successful national organization is not possible without a firm foundation of state bodies. Hence, its affiliation with the the Allied State Organizations."

A PICTURE

By DANNY

Here's one for next season. And it's in. "The Sea Hawk." And, incidentally, look for one Milton Sills to be a big star hereafter. Because when he takes off his ruffles; when he gets down to primitive, he-man stuff, he's there. Nothing Sills has ever done before counts. Sbatini must have inspired him. Or Frank Lloyd. Or—what's the difference. He counts definitely.

Besides being a great picture; a massive production, "The Sea Hawk" stands out conspicuously as the most ambitious effort First National has made of its own. And not surprising indeed, that when this was shown to the F. N. group at their annual meeting in New Orleans that they stood up and cheered. Exhibitors had finally become producers. Aided and abetted by Dick Rowland, plus Frank Lloyd.

From the box office viewpoint—from the one great test—how much will it bring in there is no question. Where women live women love. And there isn't a woman who will not be richer in romance, sentiment, and those finer things for seeing this great picture. It's a love story—and what a love story!

The touches which might have made this stand out even greater were missing. Some of the battle scenes might have been more effective through such touches. The introduction was perhaps a trifle long. But these are trifles when summing up the production as a whole. It is magnificent in its very magnitude; the alleons, the sea stuff, are not only new, but almost inspiring. The work of "Wally" Beery stands out conspicuously in an excellent cast. The comedy moments in which he was an important part were eagerly awaited.

This is the first. Of the several big, important productions First National will make. On its own. It is a splendid step. In the right direction. Let's hope the next will be as far a step ahead as

Hearst Goes Along

To Release Next Year's Product Through Metro-Goldwyn—Five Planned

It is understood that William Randolph Hearst is about to close a contract with Metro-Goldwyn to distribute his 1924-1925 Cosmopolitan product through the new combination.

Cosmopolitan will probably make five pictures. These will be "Zander the Great," originally held by Famous Players but purchased from that organization; "Quality Street," in which Marion Davies will star under direction of Sidney Olcott; "Never the Twain Shall Meet," in which, as noted Anita Stewart will probably have the lead; "The Temptress," a Blasco Ibanez story and "Janice Meredith" on which finishing touches are now being made.

"Yolanda," which is being held for fall distribution goes to Metro-Goldwyn under the merger. It is reported that Hearst intends breaking away from the costume picture, although "Quality Street" deals with the early 19th century.

Varner for State Units

H. B. Varner, president of the North Carolina M. P. T. Commenting on the new M. P. T. O. plan of selecting twenty-one directors, Varner thinks it is an improvement, although he would prefer to learn about the details before passing judgment.

Cleveland—Canton was the first large Ohio town to close Sundays and Massillon, the second. It is said a movement is afoot, backed by theatrical interests, to close up everything in those cities that are closed to Sunday shows. The thought is that if everything is "blue," public opinion will swing the pendulum back to a normal position.

Although the Supreme Court rendered a decision against Sunday shows, local authorities can regulate all activities falling within their sphere of power.

Pathe Executives Return

Miles Gibbons, short subject sales manager for Pathe has returned from a nation-wide sales tour concerning which, he says:

"The demand for short subjects is almost unprecedented. Theatre owners throughout the country are realizing more every day that variety is absolutely essential as a drawing card if they are to be assured of 100% box office results."

E. Oswald Brooks, serial sales manager is also back. "Wanted by Police" is the title of a new Pathe serial.

Deplore Indiscretion

J. V. Bryson's Letter on Entertainment Regretted by English Film Men

BY ERNEST W. FREDMAN
Of The Film Renter and M. P. News
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

London—J. V. Bryson, managing director for Universal in this country, has lately come in for adverse criticism from exhibitors following his very indiscreet circular to the trade in which he announced that he had authentic assurance that the Entertainment Tax would be abolished, and that the cost would be borne by the British Government.

Bryson's letter was the subject of a comment in the House of Commons and prominent members of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Ass'n. condemn it as being a document that is likely to retard the movement for the Entertainment Tax abolishment.

Another indiscretion by Bryson which has roused indignation amongst his fellow renters is his latest decision to immediately show all his pictures to the Censor in Ireland. The situation in that country is somewhat difficult as, owing to a monopoly having been created and resultant high prices charged for censoring, renters and exhibitors have joined hand in hand in a determination to boycott all pictures which have been submitted to the censor. The renters are, therefore, holding aloof.

Bryson, however, has broken away from the others and has decided to pay the censor's charges and have his films shown immediately. All the renters in this country have refused en bloc to move until the charges are reduced but Bryson's attitude has seriously embarrassed them. Further developments are expected.

Do You Buy on Faith or Are You from Missouri?

It's impossible for most exhibitors to see in advance all the pictures that they book. It becomes necessary, in some measure, to buy on faith.

Buying on faith is satisfactory if you have something REAL to put your faith in.

In Paramount's FAMOUS FORTY, you have faith in such stars and artists as Gloria Swanson, Thomas Meighan, Rudolph Valentino, Pola Negri, Jack Holt, Bebe Daniels, Richard Dix, Betty Compson, Rod LaRocque, William Farnum, Lois Wilson, Estelle Taylor, Glenn Hunter, Agnes Ayres, Adolphe Menjou, Raymond Griffith, Vera Reynolds, Mary Astor, Nita Naldi, Noah Beery, Theodore Roberts, and Ricardo Cortez.

In THE FAMOUS FORTY, you have faith in such directors as Cecil B. DeMille, James Cruze, Herbert Brenon, William de Mille, Allan Dwan, Joseph Henabery, Victor Fleming, Irvin Willat, Sidney Olcott, Ernest Lubitsch, Dimitri Buchowetzki, and Sam Wood.

In THE FAMOUS FORTY, you have faith in such titles as The Golden Bed, Feet of Clay, North of 36, Peter Pan, Forbidden Paradise, Sinners in Heaven, Argentine Love, Open All Night, Locked Doors, Merton of the Movies, Monsieur Beaucaire, Wanderer of the Wasteland, Manhandled, The Enemy Sex, Changing Husbands, and in each and every one of the entire FORTY.

But if you're from Missouri—

Go to your Paramount exchange today and ask to see these FAMOUS FORTY August releases:

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. Which a prominent New York theatrical organization wants to road-show all over the country. We turned them down. It comes to you August 11—a Zane Grey super-thriller produced entirely in color!

MANHANDLED. By far Gloria Swanson's greatest. A riot at Grauman's Million Dollar, Los Angeles, where it opened a pre-release run Sunday. To you August 4.

THE ENEMY SEX. A sizzling James Cruze comedy-drama that makes the average flapper picture look like afternoon tea at the Old Ladies Home! Released August 25th.

UNGUARDED WOMEN. Bebe Daniels and Richard Dix performing magnificently in a woman-picture with a marvelous title. Out August 18.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. Rudolph Valentino's return to the screen in Sidney Olcott's production of Booth Tarkington's world-famous love story. Released August 18.

CHANGING HUSBANDS. A brilliant marriage-comedy, with Leatrice Joy, supervised by Cecil B. DeMille.

Whether you book on faith or whether you're from Missouri, THE FAMOUS FORTY fills the bill.

Suit was filed in the Supreme Court yesterday by J. Searle Dawley Prod. against Selznick Distrib. Corp., Rose F. and Murray W. Garsson. Garsson Enterprises, Hamilton National Bank, and the Tec-Art Studios, Inc., for an accounting of money received from the distribution of "Broadway Broke." The plaintiff alleges that the rights were obtained by Douglas G. Hertz who assigned them to the plaintiff that subsequently the plaintiff spent $25,000 in making the film and needed $12,000 more.

The plaintiff alleges that $10,000 was then borrowed from Rose F. Garsson, for which she was to get twenty-five per cent of the plaintiff's profits. The plaintiff later borrowed $10,000 more for ten per cent of the profits and finally Mrs. Garsson agreed to furnish all the money necessary to finish the film, for which she was to receive twenty-seven and one-half per cent of the profits. The plaintiff alleges that she did not furnish more than $35,000 and demands an accounting of all money in possession of the Hamilton Bank which was named as depository. Mrs. Garsson contends that she is entitled to $65,000 received from the film, and asked the court to compel the plaintiff to reply to this allegation.

action with the Hays office for the repeal of the measure and the other from M. P. T. O. headquarters. Each claimed the credit for being influential in bringing about the repeal. Although there is a wide difference of opinion along those lines, both groups coincide in the belief that the relief will prove a most welcome one.

One statement emanated from the M. P. T. O. Special Committee and was prepared by H. M. Richey, of the Michigan M. P. T. O. as its secretary. This statement traced the formation of the Allied State Organization and the subsequent co-operative policy adopted by it in connection with the Hays office. At the point, it declares that J. R. Denston of Michigan appeared once before the Ways and Means Committee the representative of thirty-two states. A long list, containing something like 250 names of exhibitors who worked with the committee, was attached to the statement. In it appeared, not only the Allied leaders, but the names of Martin G. Smith of Toledo and Glenn Harper of Los Angeles, both of them strong Cohen men.

The M. P. T. O. statement was issued by M. J. O'Toole, the new president and, like the other, traced the efforts of the organization along the repeal lines. Both groups seek the credit for the Presidential recommendation that the amusement taxes be lifted.

Newspaper Opinions

"Women Who Give"—Metro-Gwyn Capitol

AMERICAN—* * * I could have enjoyed the melodrama more if the poetical titles had been less in evidence. I never like to have a picture unfolded by the aid of poetry * * *

So that whatever black marks we give this film we must say the director has followed the theme carefully and closely.

EVENING JOURNAL—* * * There are some exceptionally beautiful scenes in the photoplay, a terrifically impressive storm, and several shipwrecks. The story is sincerely made: * * *

EVENING WORLD—* * * a thoroughly enjoyable picture, especially the work of Frank Keenan * * *

Most of the scenes were shot along the coast of Cape Cod on the exact location described in the book and again we witness a remarkable shipwreck * * *

It is well worth the seeing.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * Right here we nominate Robert Frazer as one of our favorite leading men. He is quite irresistible, and his presence as the hero gave to the picture what interest it held for us. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * it presents refreshing characterizations of folk in a fishing village. It has the homely episodes familiar to this type of drama, and there is a note of humor which is pleasing, interspersed with the heartaches. * * *

POST—* * * There is plenty of excitement and romance and fun in the picture, greatly enhanced by some of the most beautiful sea photography we have ever seen. There's a storm in this film, too, which is thrilling enough. * * * The story itself isn't close-knitted enough to hold your attention at all times, and the acting, while adequate, doesn't reach any heights.

TELEGRAM—* * * Clearly and potently the story is told of the heroism in humble bosoms as the Cape Cod fishers set out on their hazardous quest. With touches of quaint humor and with incidents of strong sentimental appeal, the various characters are revealed. * * *

TIMES—"Women Who Give," * * * is much more interesting than one would glean from the title, being a fairly competent study of fishing folk. * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * The sea stuff in the picture gives the biggest thrills. Storms and the ships riding the waves, a wreck of a schooner and the rescue of the crew, all well done under the direction of Reginald Barker.

There is also a love story that carries. * * *

The picture looks as though it will get some money. * * *

WORLD—We cannot see any very great reason why anybody would sit up nights telling the neighbors about this picture * * *

"Maytime"—Preferred Rialto

AMERICAN—* * * Viewed from the standpoint of burlesque, "Maytime" might pass in a crowd, but as a straight honest-to-goodness production, in most respects, it is a total loss. * * *

The only ray of light in the whole long, long film is Harrison Ford. * * *

DAILY NEWS—"Maytime" happens to be one of those long drawn out love stories. * * *

* * * Certainly it must have been a happier thing behind the footlights than it is in its present form. Clara Bow * * * is almost entirely disguised in the corkscrew curls of pre-Civil War days. William Norris * * * furnishes some stereotyped comedy.

EVENING WORLD—* * * "Maytime" is, in our estimation, a fine film and good entertainment. * * *

By all means, if you enjoy good pictures and a generous supply of Art with a big "A," don't miss "Maytime," we should have been sorry to have let it slip by us.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * we had not dreamed that a picture with a lot of lilacs and apple blossoms in it could be so dreary. It drags as persistently as though it were trying to locate the body.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * While the love story involved is pretty enough, there is no reality to the film, and no atmosphere. Ethel Shannon, Harrison Ford and Clara Bow have leading roles, but as a Broadway production this all seems to be nothing to write home about. * * *

POST—* * * It isn't much in the way of a picture, being too involved in plot and so meandering in story that it's hard to keep your interest centered on it. * * *

We're sorry, but we can't recommend this as any more than mildly pleasant and soothing entertainment. * * *

TELEGRAM—* * * Mr. Gasnier has made an attractive film play, with an excellent cast * * *

TIMES—* * * and what adds to the tedium in this film is the occasional injection of feeble comedy and the constant old-fashioned acting. The story itself is nothing new and the climax comes as a happy relief. * * *

To those who like an old-fashioned romance told in a tearful way, with unrestrained poses and gestures and here and there close-ups of gloom, this * * * may have some interest.

WORLD—The plot of "Maytime" almost cracked under the strain of a musical comedy version—and that with much gay and lilted music to bear it up. Naturally it would sag more than ever after four reels of the silent drama. * * *

The C. B. C. Line-Up

One Stand On Tax

Circuits May Act Together in Determining What to Do About Admission Prices

It is understood that all of the important local circuits have decided to adopt a uniform attitude on the question of revised admissions, now that the war tax on tickets up to fifty cents has been removed.

It is reported that the leaning is in several directions. It may be decided to take off the taxable amount for the number and add it on again for the bill or take off the few cents payable on each ticket entirely. If it is decided to remove the tax completely, this action will, in many cases, make the actual handling of tickets and admissions at the box-office a more difficult operation and one that will involve an increased handling of penalties. Most of the admissions locally are on a flat basis, such as forty or fifty cents.

The question involves the majority of the Loew houses, the Fox theatres and the Moss circuit, all of which have blocks of seats that now become tax free.

New Color Process

Announced on Coast—Invention Hinges Around Shutter on the Projector

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—W. M. Thomas of Standard Laboratories and Foster Leonard declare they have perfected a new color process to be known commercially as "Spectrocolor."

The inventors claim the process is simplicity itself and that neither dyes nor equipment other than standard material is necessary.

A revolving color shutter attached to the camera puts color value into the film. The film remains black and white. By the combination of a special lens and a color wheel attached to the projector the color value that is already in the black and white film is brought out in its natural state.

Both the revolving color shutter on the camera and the color wheel on the projector are of red and green. When the former revolves, with the taking of pictures, the red and green and white put the color values into the negative, and by the turning of the color wheel on the projector, while the film is being screened true

Injunction Application Against American Releasing to Be Heard—Pyramid Involved

The application for an injunction against Selznick Dist. Corp., brought by Peter Licari, as trustee in bankruptcy for American Releasing will be heard in the Supreme Court on June 9.

Justice McCook has granted an application by Pyramid Pictures to appear in the injunction suit which would restrain Selznick from making any payments in connection with the films obtained from American Releasing. Licari alleged in his suit that Selznick acquired the films without consideration and will take in $600,000 which should be applied to the debts of American Releasing.

Pyramid states that it has contracts for exhibiting a number of the films referred to, and that its rights under these contracts entitle it to be represented when the suit is heard.

W. C. I. Doolittle, of Selznick has sent a form letter to all producers interested in the litigation, pointing out that American Releasing producers had ratified the action whereby the distributing company had taken over their pictures.

Fritz Lang's Ideas

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

London—Fritz Lang, director of "Die Nibelungen" declared in a recent interview:

"I would never dream of attempting to make a cowboy film for America. I could do it no more than the Americans can make historical films. How can they? They have no history. Unfortunately they try. But the fact remains that only the countries of Europe can really catch the medieval culture and tradition and represent the spirit of their old legends. My own trouble is that there are so many beautiful stories of the past crying out to be filmed that I shall die before I have time to do a quarter of them."

Not Out of the Ice Box But Hot Off the Fire

Paramount's Famous Forty won't come before the public cold—

Because:

1. Quite a few million people know about "The Covered Wagon."
2. The fact that Valentino returns to the screen in "Monsieur Beaucaire" has been publicized in newspaper columns, roto-sections and in every type of national magazine from coast to coast.
3. The marvelous all-color "Wanderer of the Wasteland" is more than a motion picture. It is revolutionary news that hits the front page news-sections of all newspapers and will receive tremendous publicity.
4. Every one of the Famous Forty will be brought before the public in (a) double-color, double-page and double-color single page advertisements in the Saturday Evening Post; (b) a four-color double-page advertisement in "Liberty," the new, million-circulation, color-roto magazine; (c) advertising in the Ladies Home Journal, the first black and white ads in the magazine, up among the reading matter; (d) pages in all of the motion picture magazines; and (e) a page advertisement in 400 newspapers of the United States.

It's the greatest advertising campaign for exhibitor-assistance ever launched.

Paramount is peculiarly able to capitalize on such a campaign because Paramount has been nationally advertised continually and effectively for 8 solid years.

Success is like a giant searchlight which picks some things out and leaves others in the dark.

For eight years the intense white light of national advertising has played steadily on the name Paramount Pictures.

Today there are millions of people who think automatically of Paramount the moment the word pictures is mentioned.

You can kid yourself all you want, but that is an asset that thousands of exhibitors consider it lunacy to neglect.

The public knows Paramount. The public will know the Famous Forty to the exclusion of everything else in pictures this season.

The Famous Forty will come to you, not out of the ice-box but hot off the fire.

You know that means something to you!

FACTS —about "A WOMAN WHO SINNED." In the huge trial scenes, Finis Fox used 7 cameras shooting from all angles. A stage 75 feet wide and 210 feet long was built to accommodate the huge mobs who worked in the picture.

More than 2000 people were employed in the giant shots. The picture required more than 9 solid months in the making and was filmed at a cost larger than any comparable melodrama in all the history of motion pictures.

A national title contest was staged which drew 16,788 suggested titles for the picture from fans, titles being suggested from short synopsis mailed out.

With MAE BUSCH now at the very height of her popularity and Irene Rich with a tremendous following, and Morgan Wallace and the new find Rex Lease plus this smashing Box office title you have one of the biggest productions to be released this year. ## Putts rl Hammons, Thomas Gaylor, Jr., and r Pearson remained overnight at the with the committee.

e over-nighters deplored the presence of Alicoate for a good and substantial an.

e Leblanc may not be actually in the business, but his entry in a checked suit green vest put him pretty close in among leaders as a "topping" dresser.

ck Meador, Metro-Goldwyn, who has promising for over three years to get ese tournaments finally appeared.

ong the best of the early scores was banded in by Jerome Beatty in reversal.

m Moore of Washington, one of the ups, started off with a wonderful and ous 15 foot drive which busted his ad good humor considerably.

st to make sure that Felix Feist would a good caddy, little Sammy Reiben e around with Felix coaching.

e prizes numbering in the neighborhood 20 were the objects of much admiring ment.

e threatening weather and rains in New c. held the early arrivals somewhat down, by noon there were well over 150 on and others were constantly arriving.

lton Cohen of Inter-Globe, ignorant of ethics occupied a prominent seat facing 18th green and he would argue as they ad. He was lucky he lived through the ing.

gene Zukor waited a long time for Ar- Loew to arrive from Rockaway and fin- went off without him.

m Evans did a juggling act as he ar at the club trying to recover his lost et while holding two heavy bags of al Those flashy sweaters! Competition eken, chiefly between Rudy Cameron and on Blumberg.

Graham Baker of Vitagraph played a round with Rock and Hedley also of his organization. The first appearance for Rock at the Tournament and like all others he promised never to miss another.

Charles Christie complained. He said he had to awaken so early that if he had been in Hollywood he would have just been going to bed. Figure the difference in time.

Frank Lloyd could not make it, much to the regret of Felix Feist.

Elmer Pearson fell down lamentably—he had a good try-out Tuesday afternoon and turned in a score of 46 but his morning round was very very sick.

John Spargo, Exhibitors Herald complain- ed vociferously of the ninth hole. Too much of a climb.

Earl Hammons was one of the many who insisted that his wife said if he didn't bring home a trophy he could never play again.

R. C. Seery, First Nat'l, Chicago, missed his buddy Jim Williams and made a rotten score consequently.

Billy Brandt, prond as a peacock over Brother Harry, insisted on walking around to see how brother played, to the amusement and regret of his pals, Edelhertz and Blum- enthal.

Louis and Bernard became real golfers. They took off their coats and vests while they walked around.

Louis Brock was a symphony in white. Thats all that can be said.

Of course "Dodo" Gulick was on hand and of course he shot his same rotten game.

Vic Shapiro, Samuel Goldwyn's organiza- tion, shot his first game of golf. Turned in 135 for the morning and admitted that he was honest in his count.

George Wilson and Guy Wonders of the Rivoli, Baltimore were on hand early. Guy wasn't so good. Just the ordinary common garden variety—56 for his first round. Wilson was truer to form with a 48 to start off. Fred Becroft of the News, the official umpire and starter put in his usual good morning's work.

Bruce Gallup of the committee in charge of handicaps suffered his usual troubles in the morning trying to secure cards and scores.

Maury Krans of the Kraus Mfg. Co., had a suggestion: that instead of playing 18 holes in the afternoon that nine holes should be enough plus three rubbers of bridge, total making the score. He figured that in this way he had a chance to win something.

Griffith's Plans

Reported—Though Denied—That He May Join Famous Players—Italian Syndicate Awaited

Although officials of his own organization, as well as executives of Famous Players denied stoutly that negotiations were on, a report was circulated in certain film circles yesterday that D. W. Griffith might make a series of specials for Paramount.

One of the Griffith executives declared that D. W. was planning his next production. It is also known that Griffith and his staff are awaiting the arrival of a group of Italians, representing important banking interests, for a conference relative to matters discussed by D. W. when he visited Italy recently.

As was noted recently, the road shows of "America" are being closed to permit of early release of the production. In some circles this was regarded as a desire to release "America" generally to offset the release of "Janice Meredith" the newest Hearst production which also deals with Revolutionary days.

Loew May Build

Considering New Theatres for New Orleans and Birmingham—One in Each City Now

The Loew circuit is considering the erection of two new theatres in the South; one in New Orleans and another in Birmingham.

E. A. Schiller and Leopold Friedman are back from a trip to those cities where they looked over the situation. In New Orleans, the circuit operates the Crescent and in Birmingham, the Loew house is the Bijou. At both of these points, however, it is felt that the houses are neither modern enough nor large enough to adequately take care of the company's new policy of vaudeville and week-run pictures.

Steger to Produce

Julius Steger, for the past four years director general of production for William Fox has resigned. He sails next week on the Paris and will go to Vienna. He will make several productions on his own, partly abroad and here. He has under contract a young director and is optimistic over his possibilities.

Prior to joining Fox, Steger was in charge of production for Hearst and before then had a long experience as a picture producer and on the stage.

Hearing On

Famous Players Introduces Defense at Resumption of Government Probe in Cleveland

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Cleveland—Bruce Bromley, assisted by John D. Robb has launched Famous Players' defense against monopoly charges instituted many months ago by the Federal Trade Commission. The hearings are being held in the Chamber of Commerce Bldg., before Examiner W. H. Fuller and Judge E. C. Alvord, who are acting for the Government.

Through cross-examination of O. T. Ruby, Pathe manager and Nat Barach, Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan manager here before the merger, Bromley sought to establish the fact that Pathe and Goldwyn sales methods are not unlike those of Famous and that local competition among distributors has not been hindered by the ownership of theatres by Famous or by its sales policies.

He failed to establish these points, however, due to objections raised by Fuller to his line of questioning and sustained by Alvord who said, comparisons of selling policies and statements concerning the fairness or unfairness of Famous Players competition should be decided by the facts in the case, rather than by testimony or witnesses.

Warner Group Returning

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—Abe and Sam Warner, Sam Morris, Mrs. Pearl Keating, Lon Young, Bobby North, Henry Siegel and many of the Middle Western and Eastern franchise holders of the Warner organization have left for home, following the convention at the studio.

Famous To Cut Tax

Public to Get Benefit of Reduction in All of The Many Theatres Operated by Zukor

Officials of the theatre department of Famous Players have decided to give the public the benefit of the admission tax reduction. The detail attendant upon a change of this nature in the actual handling of tickets and the like is now being arranged. New type tickets have been ordered. The number of houses involved is considerable.

The cut in admission will be effective July 1 when the new revenue bill becomes a law. Harold B. Franklin, director of the company's theatre department has definite ideas on the tax cut. "I think the public expects to be benefited by this measure," he said yesterday. "Secretary of the Treasury Mellon in his message to the President and Mr. Coolidge in his address to the public both pointed out that the public should be the direct benefactor of all reductions in taxes. If the exhibitor assumes an attitude that makes him small, I firmly believe he will open the avenues to new local taxation in his town, county or state."

Incidentally, Franklin is preparing to take a trip to Europe as soon as he can swing the new order of things into proper working alignment.

Exchange for Ohio

Meyer Fischer, formerly Harry Charnas's manager in Pittsburgh is in New York lining up product for a new exchange he intends opening to serve Ohio. He is making headquarters with Nat Levine at M. J. Winkler's office.

Golf Aftermath

Rain and Threatening Weather Could Not Affect a Great Party—More Prize Winners

If it had not rained in New York Wednesday there is no telling how big the crowd would have been at the Spring film golf tournament at Sound View, Great Neck, L. I. As it was over 225 diners were on hand and there were something like 180 players.

It did not rain at Sound View until after three in the afternoon and this caused some annoyance. But most of the players finished although they were soaking wet. But the "goofers" were in strong attendance, and the pinochle and poker players had a great day.

They were still talking yesterday

Many of the "goofers" were talking yesterday of their difficulties. And there were many. Newspaper Opinions

"The Sea Hawk"—First Nat'l Astor

DAILY NEWS—*** Wallace Beery, set an already excitable first night once tingling with new applause. He roundly, coarsely funny.

id Bennett *** is adequate. Lloyd es, Marc McDermott, William Collier, and Albert Priscoe are names which g high lighted out of a long list. production is superbly staged. Espe- impressive are the romantic galleons, carefully for the occasion.

VENING WORLD—*** is what one t call a magnificent picture. ***

ldom have we seen such a satisfactory ure, as pictures go. It does not sacrifice whit of the story or action to drag in es that are beautiful but meaningless. do not take this to mean that there is eautiful photography—for there is. ***

MORNING TELEGRAPH—*** Lloyd made something that will start the blood gling, the eyes to glistening and the t to beat the faster in many places for y days. He has shown genius in the of his material. ***

*** a well balanced cast throughout.

OST—*** This new film *** thrills, tes, amuses, touches, and altogether des you. *** aturally, "The Sea Hawk" isn't a per- picture. It has several minor defects, iding too great length; ***.

UN—*** The powerful hawk is played perfection in this entertaining yarn *** the *** customarily prosaic and interesting Milton Sills, who has suddenly me very Sabatini for the grand occasion. ut it is not so much his acting—as ellent as it is—that makes "The Sea wnk" so diverting. It is the fascinating s of the ancient ships ***.

The Sea Hawk" should not be missed.

ELEGRAM—To watch the "Sea Hawk" is to live anew in the spacious days he great Elizabethans, and to experience great surges of passionate gusty life swept over the world in those golden s.

If you want a few hours of glorious life and see "The Sea Hawk."

TIMES—An ambitious production, the set- of which must have cost the proverbial 's ransom ***.

his is far and away the best sea story t has ever been brought to the screen, we doubt if anybody who sees the nes of the galley slaves will forget them. ey are utterly different from any others sent in a film. Frank Lloyd *** is be congratulated ***.

WORLD—*** As a matter of fact, the Spanish Main has not been done so l *** on Broadway in many a day. Di- tor Lloyd, assisted not a little by the hor, has photographed a Mediterranean superb antiquity and glamour. *** The best performance in "The Sea Hawk" presented by Noah Beery, ***.

"The Marriage Cheat"—First Nat'l Strand

AMERICAN—*** some of the scenes with the natives are very well done. And the tropical storm is also a credit to this young man ***. I found "The Marriage Cheat" very unusual and well worth see- ing. ***

EVENING JOURNAL—*** The pic- ture presents a very human situation and John Griffith Wray, *** has treated it logically and developed it with understand- ing. The settings of the island, *** are beautiful, and Wray has set the precedent of filming an entire love story without one osculatory close-up.

EVENING WORLD—*** a beautiful picture photographically. And *** makes mighty good film entertainment. The wreck of the yacht Sultana is really one of the biggest thrills seen on Broadway screens for months. ***

HERALD-TRIBUNE—*** It *** is tawdry, obvious and ancient. It just seemed a little more than we could bear. ***

*** It ought to go great out west of the water tower. ***

MORNING TELEGRAPH—*** This much must be said for it. It contains some of the best ocean storms and shipwreck scenes of the season. In fact, one cannot complain about any dearth of "big" scenes. Anti-climaxes are almost as prolific as the sub-titles, although not nearly as fancy. ***

"The Marriage Cheat," on second thought, will probably please a greater majority than it will displease. ***

POST—*** resolves itself into a very tense and vivid romantic melodrama.

Some of the shots of the storm beating the sea against the island are magnificent and, in fact, the entire scenic production is very high class. ***

*** we can cheerfully recommend it as much better than average entertainment.

SUN—*** an unusually effective melo- drama, ***.

"The Marriage Cheat" is a good thriller that should have been much better.

TELEGRAM—*** The scenes of a wreck at sea and the buffetings of the characters in a tempest in the so-called Pacific Ocean show Thomas H. Ince at his best in the direction of a film, which, no matter how impossible some of the scenes and situa- tions are, is always handled in a masterly way by Mr. Ince. ***

TIMES — *** decidedly entertaining, even if the continuity writer has almost jerked the long arm of coincidence out of joint and inexcusably delayed the climax. ***

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—*** It looks like sure-fire from any angle. ***

WORLD—*** in spite of the usual, un- intelligent treatment of the eternal triangle, "The Marriage Cheat" has a certain genia- lity which saves it from being too irritat- ing. ***

"Miami"—Hodkinson Rivoli

DAILY NEWS—*** If you like the glossy, fashionable type of movie, this one will suit you excellently. Miss Compson is *** competent and Mr. Finney seems to be a new type of nice boy hero.

EVENING JOURNAL—The only excuse I can see for "Miami" is the scenery. The hero, Grant North, *** has about as much animation as a graven image. This is Benja- min Finney's first appearance on any screen, and if I know my pictures one-half as well as I think I do, it will be his last. *** EVENING WORLD—*** a swift-mov- ing thrillo-drama of ultra-modern society, with now and then interesting scenes show- ing rum runners at work and the United States Coast Guards doing the chasing.

HERALD-TRIBUNE — *** There are bootleggers and midnight raids; also a final scene of reconciliation which is absolutely the silliest thing we ever saw. It made us blush and look away. Now, that's "Miami," and if all pictures, or even nearly all, were like this one we should resign and go back to writing about dogs.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—*** Alan Crosland may be depended upon to get all there is out of his plots and casts ordinarily, but the finished product in the cast of "Mi- ami" is satisfactory only in spots. Some- where, either in the scenario or the con- tinuity or in the cutting room, some one seems to have missed it, ***.

POST—*** "Miami" is just "another of those things," rather better done than most in the way of settings, and pretty well acted by Betty Compson. ***

SUN—*** would have been a much more attractive feature if the producers had used their scissors ***.

TELEGRAM—*** Although the season has closed in Florida, those who delight in that tropical atmosphere may continue to enjoy it in *** "Miami."

TIMES—As a mediocre film entertainment with attractive exteriors and adequate interiors, "Miami," *** may appeal to some therefore there are stretches where one feels *** Alan Crosland, *** does not seem to have had his heart in this production, and impelled to close one's eyes. ***

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—*** im- presses as good summer entertainment.

Sexy, and embodying the jazz age ingredi- ent, it is supplemented by motorboats, yachts, polo, seaplanes and bootlegging which should comprise a list of insertions easy to digest during the torrid months. ***

Well produced and excellently photograph- ed. ***

WORLD—For those industrious conces- sion-holders along the roads of gay Miami, Fla., there probably has not been made in the last decade a motion picture more al- luring and more worth while than this ***

Says Crandall - "It's that kind of a picture"

EXECUTIVE OFFICES

CRANDALL THEATRES
WASHINGTON, D. C.

932-936 F STREET

May 31, 1924.

Mr. Richard Rowland, General Manager,
FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES, INCORPORATED,
363 Madison Ave.,
New York City.

Dear Rowland

I am firmly of the belief that in the Abraham Lincoln picture, First National has one of the biggest pictures ever produced - from many angles.

Never in the history of our theatres have we received the newspaper comments and the liberal space that every Washington newspaper allowed us on this picture, one paper even giving us a full half page writeup, of their own volition and at no cost to us. Many others gave us more than a column, and one paper gave us an editorial. Never in the history of the Metropolitan Theatre have we had such permanent audiences. I think I can safely say that the Lincoln Picture brought to us an entirely new patronage, at least ninety percent of the people who came in this week not being picture fans in any sense of the word but in fact, strangers to our house.

These things mentioned above are something that money cannot buy, and certainly makes the Lincoln picture an unusual box office attraction, not only for the present, but because of its effect upon the future of the business, as it will add prestige to the house that it would never get by running just a good picture.

In the Metropolitan Theatre, we have run many patriotic pictures, but none of them ever received the outburst of applause and cheers that was accorded the Lincoln picture. This picture is one that has peculiar box office angles, and it is one that FIRST NATIONAL should bend every effort in putting over for the good of producer and exhibitor alike, and, it is big enough to receive special consideration of your organization and of someone in it who is familiar with the peculiarities of this picture and who can get all the good out of it that there is in it, because it is a most entertaining picture, aside from its educational value. From every angle, it is the greatest picture that we have ever had the pleasure to run in any of our theatres.

I feel grateful, and highly honored, to have had the National premier in Washington, and wish the best success for the Rockett boys and the First National for producing and distributing such a picture.

With kindest personal regards, beg to remain,

Sincerely yours,

H.M. Crandall

Congested Market Blamed for Failure to Secure Bookings in Ohio Towns

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Cleveland—Several witnesses testified in defense of Famous Players before the Federal Trade Commission on the latter's charges of monopoly, at the second day of the sessions here, held in the Chamber of Commerce building. It was brought out by two of the witnesses that a congested market and also over production were partly to blame for failure to secure bookings by other distributors.

C. Thompson, Universal manager, questioned by Bruce Bromley, counsel for Famous Players, testified that the Universal sales policy incorporates block bookings whenever possible; that he has met healthy distributor competition in the Northern Ohio territory, and that any failure to secure contracts for Universal pictures in this territory was in no instance due to the fact that exhibitors were booked solid with blocks of

Fox Leases the Central

William Fox has leased the Central for six months, beginning Sept. 1.

Reports going the rounds yesterday indicate that Fox is also looking for another Broadway house. This was affirmed by the Fox offices, although nothing definite has as yet been done on the matter.

Deal Does Not Effect Famous

It was reported yesterday that a deal has been closed, whereby Famous will solely control five houses in Little Rock, Ark., operated by the Arkansas Enterprises, an F. P. subsidiary, buying out Saul Harris' interests. Harris controlled a quarter interest, Ike Kempner, a quarter, while Famous owned half. Harris sold out to Kempner, which in no way effects Famous.

Correction

The report recently published that Universal was planning to make a big special of "The Man Who Laughed," featuring Lon Chaney, is understood to have been without foundation. It is said that Universal has no idea of making the production at this time.

La Marr May Use Fox Plant

Although it is not definitely set, Barbara La Marr may produce "Sandra" at the local Fox studio. This is the only picture First National contemplates producing at the Fox plant.

Two New "Bagdad" Runs

"The Thief of Bagdad" has been booked into the Savoy, Atlantic City, July 27, for a five weeks' run, and at the Woods, Chicago, Sept. 1, Labor Day.

Sales Managers In Long Session

The Metro-Goldwyn sales managers had a long session yesterday. The meeting comes to a close this morning, after which many of the executives will go to Chicago to attend the sales convention to be held there.

Unhappy Conditions

Brandt Finds Admissions too High Considering Poor Business Situation, Especially in Mid-West

Unless something is done to improve conditions in the Mid-West especially, Joe Brandt of C. B. C. believes there will be hard sledding ahead for exhibitors. Brandt has just returned from a long trip.

"I think that in view of the poor business situation that admissions are far too high", he said. "In several cities, including Des Moines, Minneapolis and Omaha notably, the top admissions are 85 cents. In all of these cities business generally is way off. There are many stores for rent. Several banks failed in one of these cities while I was there. Yet the exhibitors charge 85 cents top. Perhaps they must because of their terrific overhead. But the spaghetti surroundings, the big orchestras, the fine prologues and solos don't help. And unless the picture is outstanding it gets no money and they lose. Where they do get money in their big houses it

Wants Contract Cancelled

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—Jack White, motion picture director, has filed suit in the Superior Court to set aside and cancel an agreement whereby he is under contract to direct pictures for the Jack White Co.

The suit is based on the ground that the agreement is inequitable and lacks mutuality of obligation. White asserting that the company, under the agreement, may discharge him at any time it sees fit. It also is asserted that White has no control over the matters required to be accomplished by him under the agreement.

Jack White comedies are released through Educational.

"Ben Hur"

Charlie Brabin is a mighty sick man. In Rome. Unless he gets a lot better he may not direct "Ben Hur." With Fred Niblo going abroad. Plus Marshal Neilan. Plus some more of the Metro-Goldwyn group most anything may happen in Rome. Be not surprised to see either Niblo or Neilan in charge. If Loew can tame them sufficiently to work together he will be a bigger man than he is counted.

Just how this will affect June Mathis remains to be seen. June was all het up about the making of this big special. There is hardly a secret that she had much to do with the selection of Brabin for the directorship. And she had practically control of selecting the cast. And there is talk now that the cast will be changed. Navarro to take George Walsh' part as the lead. Plus some more changes. Mathis selected Walsh. After trying out a number. In other words much of Mathis work will be upset.

Rome promises to be the scene of considerable interest. In a few weeks. It must have cost Goldwyn and now Metro-Goldwyn a pretty penny so far. How much can be salvaged remains to be seen. Mathis has confidently hoped to have the release set for Christmas Day this year. If this can be done they will be is offset by the losses sustained in their smaller houses. Or one big house eats up everything and the competition house suffers badly.

"From what I could learn, only two types of pictures are wanted by the public: excitement pictures like 'Sporting Youth', or sex pictures like 'Three Weeks.' There is no room in between. And we all know what will happen if you give them too much of sex pictures. The reaction will be terrific.

"From what I was told by certain exhibitors they only want 'big' pictures. Whether or not there is any profit to them in the showing seems besides the point. They want pictures touted as 'big' which means there isn't any room for the average type of picture on which they can or have made their money. Perhaps that is one of the reasons they are losing their shirts.

"I can't answer the problem. I can only tell you what I learned. But they are sure in trouble. Good pictures like 'Boy of Mine' and 'The Enchanted Cottage' aren't wanted. But the excitement stuff and the sex picture is in great demand."

STEGER STEPS OUT

Bill Fox isn't the sort of man who shows his feelings. But must be pretty well cut up with Julius Steger's resignation.
is—a real character in production—wants to step out on his Thinks he has a real find in a European director. Who isn't 30 years of age. And hopes to develop him to the American bol. That's a great idea. Several Europeans have shown a Since they landed here. Notably Lubitsch and Seastrom.
Buchowetzki seems starting in the right direction. So Julius have a chance. This is certain—the relationship with Fox of the kindest sort. So much so that Bill insisted on Julius chance to distribute the Steger productions.

GETTING AWAY

Looks like Barret McCormick is getting away to a good start.
Crandall's Tivoli, in Washington. Notice, for instance, what Washington Times said. About his program last week. With caption: "The Weeks Prize Pupil—Master McCormick." "If were a teacher, checking over the wit and humor of the final xms, with ink in our hair and madness in our eye, we would a big, impressive 90% on the sample program submitted by Barret McCormick, assuming that this presentation manager fred this program for the current week at Crandall's Tivoli.
Mr. McCormick does not strike twelve this week, he strikes aned near it—say ten or eleven."

BRUSH UP THE MEDALS

The French Government has made Doug an honorary officer public instruction. Whatever that means. Still it keeps Doug he limelight.

LET'S HOPE

Emil Jannings, probably the greatest character actor on the een may come to America. This is really interesting. Jang-gs says he may come over. To work with Ernst Lubitsch one picture this Fall. Here's hoping he comes. Because if proper material is found; if he can be set right Jannings will ow something. To make the screen prouder than ever. Of it's ssibilities. Who will ever forget his great work in several Gern made pictures; including "Othello" and "Deception." Boy, re's an actor.

BOW PLEASE FOLKS

This came from Harry F. Storin, manager of the Leroy, Paw-cket, R. I.:

"Dear Danny: After watching the work of new artists for the past season, for no reason at all I want to express my opinion that of the newer personalities of the year you can pass the laurel leaf to the following ladies, Pauline Garon and Clara Bow, and to these gentlemen, Adolphe Menjou and Raymond Griffith.

"My patrons seem to have enjoyed their work immensely."

THE TOUCHES OF THE MASSES

When "The Sea Hawk" opened Monday. Frank Lloyd was the audience. Yes. Not in the state box. But unbeknown to audience, he sat with the folks up in the second gallery. Bese, as he said, he wanted to get the pulse of the masses. Lloyd ew he was right when he said that the first nighters in the es and boxes would applaud anyway.

A PENNY COUNTS

Mr. Exhibitor. What's the poorest day of the week with you?
s, I know. You're mumbling about a lot of them being poor.

Well, if so, here's an idea. Effectively worked by Manager Cunningham. Of Prior's Broadway, in Danville, Va. He used about 70 lines over three columns, with a large cut of a one cent piece.
And this copy over it:

"First annual one-cent sale, at the Broadway, Wednesday," in very large type and then this in 12 point:

"For one day, we will sell two tickets for one cent additional to regular admission, as follows: One adult ticket 33 cents, two adult tickets for 34 cents; one child's ticket 10 cents, two for 11.
All tickets must be used at the time of purchase."

HICK STUFF

Over at Famous they're eagerly awaiting the arrival of George Brown. From Charlotte, North Carolina. George won the cup for the best ad written for a Famous theatre. Also a trip to the big city. And George has never seen New York. Yes; they're rinsing out the glasses.

NOT A JEWISH DISH

Charley O'Reilly wanted a mince pie. Ordered it from the New York Athletic Club. Of which he is a member. Had his stenographer shoot the order to the chef. Later the chef called.
Said he didn't know what Charley was talking about. "Why," asked Charley. "Well," said the chef, "I see you spell it 'mintz' pie and I want to tell you now that we haven't any of those Jewish dishes up here."

GOING ALONG

Hearst will stick along with Metro-Goldwyn for the coming season. So that is settled. And everybody interested can sleep better. If they want to. But just the same the Hearst moves are always important. And usually of interest.

USE THE SALT—BUT—

Harry Crandall, inspired by "Abraham Lincoln" and what Dick is doing at the box office. Plus the type of audience. Writes Dick Rowland quite a letter. Oh, yes; Crandall is one of the First National franchisers. And he might be expected to enthuse over F. N. product. But on the other hand Crandall has a mighty clean reputation. He isn't the type to rave—where raving doesn't fit. And the newspaper space he claims he received is easily understood. It's the type of picture that naturally will get a lot of free newspaper space. Because the subject is big enough; important enough, to make editors think. And that isn't an easy job in this business.

THE BEERY'S

Recently—we must be getting as dumb as Reichenbach says we are—we asked what had become of the Beery's—Wally and Noah—to which Sam Palmer of Famous busts off on his trusty typewriter:

Wha'd'ye mean—"What's become of the Beery's?"
I can't speak for Wally—he's not strictly of our gang—but Noah has been very much there, with whiskers, in the following recent Paramounts; "To the Last Man," "The Call of the Canyon," "The Heritage of the Desert," "The Fighting Coward" (Boy, what a fat part!) and "Wanderer of the Wasteland" (Where were you last Monday night?).
Right now, shorn of his bush, he is working in the current Pola Negri picture, "Compromised." When not before the camera he has been eating and sleeping.

And then Wally steps out in "The Sea Hawk" and steals the picture.

Apologies—many of 'em.

DANNY

Short Subjects

"Winning His Way"—"Fight and Win" Series—Universal

Corking Start for New Series

Type of production 2 reel fight drama

The first of the ten two-reelers Universal will make starring Jack Dempsey is a corker. The story by Gerald Beaumont is there—decidedly. That, plus the fact that Jack Dempsey is in it should be enough.

Dempsey is heavyweight champion of the pugilistic world. That means he is news and, as such, a figure before the public. You can bank on Universal getting behind this series to the limit. However, aside from that, there is actual quality in the first number to warrant exhibitor consideration.

Dempsey is Jack O'Day, a pugilist who is retired because of his mother's antipathy to fighting. He is rediscovered in a steel mill and is drafted to fight the heavyweight "champ", only because he needs money to send his mother to the country. The training starts but O'Day wins the heart of his manager, who had originally tried to frame him, by saving the manager's child who is in danger of death on a railroad trestle. O'Day saves the youngster and hangs over the side while the train passes by. A portion of the railroad tie gives way and Dempsey and the child are precipitated into a river many feet below. This scene, shot from above, showing the downward plunge is great.

There are plenty of fight scenes and others showing Dempsey in training. Dempsey, of course, knocks out the former "champ" and wins the title. The comedy business is fine.

"West of the Water Bucket"—"Fight and Win" Series—Universal

Funny and Entertaining

Type of production 2 reel fight drama

There are a number of good laughs in No. 3 of the "Fight and Win" series. Dempsey and his bunch of youngsters are down in a farm, since the orphanage proved too expensive to keep up. A circus hits town with a faker who passes himself off as Tiger O'Day. Despite a lame knee, injured in rescuing a couple of kids in a runaway wagon, Jack accepts the challenge of the fake "champ" and beats him.

A false extra tells Jack's manager in the city that the supposed champion had been knocked by an unknown. The manager hustles in a 'plane to find out the truth and breaks up a dinner tendered to Dempsey for winning the fight. The ending is weak.

The business where Dempsey insists upon wearing his derby because the opponent might hit him on the head and the trick of fighting while endeavoring to remove one shoe is funny. Universal hasn't spared much expense in creating a circus atmosphere. An entire village street, strung with banners was built for this.

"A Society Knockout"—"Fight and Win" Series—Universal

Suffers by Comparison

Type of production 2 reel fight drama

Of the three Dempsey two-reelers shown, the second is the poorest. While fairly good in spots, it does not hold up against No. 1 and No. 3. Following the acquisition of the heavyweight title, Dempsey as Jack O'Day is left in an orphanage for boys. One of the wards sets fire to the place and is rescued by Jack. The kid develops diphtheria and the place is quarantined, necessitating holding the Milk Fund Bout on the lawn. The former "champ" is secretly for Reggy, Jack's supposed opponent, and is getting the better of it. Jack detects the substitution and, despite a doped towel Jack knocks out his old time foe.

The comedy bits are rather feeble.

"In a Drop of Water"—Principal Pictures—Educational

Fine Scientific Reel

Type of production 1 reel microscopic study

Louis Tolhurst places drops of water taken from different sources under his microscope in this short reel and shows the spectator the teeming life contained in a single drop. The photography is excellent and the titles clear and easily understood, and while the subject matter may be slightly too scientific for a small minority, it will in all probability be found intensely interesting by many. The microscopic creatures are called by their scientific names and shown in detail so that the spectator can see wherein they differ from each other.

"On Guard"—Grantland Rice—Pathe

A Good One for the Men

Type of production 1 reel sport review

The art of self defence is shown in various phases in this issue of Grantland Rice's "Sportlight." The duel with foils of long ago, fencing brought up-to-date, and boxing by several well-known members of the ring, including James J. Corbett and Gene Tunney make this an interesting and swift-moving reel, which is nicely gotten together. It opens with a bit showing a primitive man defending himself with a club and closes with a bit of fun between Corbett and Frank Bacon.

"Suffering Shakespeare"—Spat Family—Pathe

Spats Spat with Shakespeare

Type of production . . . 2 reel comedy

Those who have followed the antics of the amusing Spat family in their various escapades will be anxious to see their latest outburst. It takes the form of a private theatrical performance held at the home of the Spats. Sidney D'Albrook, as the long-suffering English husband who invariably does the wrong thing is always funny. Not as uproarious as some of the others in the series have been, but still amusing.

Lawford Davidson suitable as the man with the yacht. But think how much better Adolph Menjou or Lou Cody would have been in the part. Others include Hedda Hopper, J. Barney Sherry and Lucy Fox.
.....Type of Story....Story of jazz life. Here's another modern girl story, only this one is a little more so than some of the others. Probably it only seems so but the gaieties of Miami and every indication of the luxuries that money can buy as well as gorgeous locations and a bevy of beautiful women and good looking men, certainly provide the latest jazz offering with a kick that offers a mighty fair substitute for the much coveted "fire water." And a fine time had by all" may readily apply to this latest Hodkinson release, a picture that has every chance of developing in a thoroughly joyful box office number. It has pep and then some. It glorifies Ziegfeld's well known "American girl" to the nth degree. It affords grand exploitation for the great Southern playground but then that isn't to be worried over because the pictures are about as close as the majority will get to the famous Hotel Flamingo in spite of the lure of "Miami." The story isn't important. Pep is the thing and the film has oodles of it.
.....Box Office Angle....Should go big. Beach parties, cabaret parties, club parties and petting parties. "Miami" is just one grand big party. You ought to know how these luxury boosting, jazz girl pictures go with your crowd.
.....Exploitation....Plenty to talk about. A trailer of any part of the picture, picked at random, will be enough to give them a good idea of the atmosphere. Promise them a great lot of thrills in the way of incidents in the career of a society girl who leads her followers a merry chase and ends up by marrying the girl-dodger. Use plenty of stills of Betty Compson and any decorations indicative of the South should make your lobby attractive. Fine hot weather feature.

"The Marriage Cheat"

Producer: Thos. H. Ince
Distributor: First National
As a Whole.... SOUTH SEA ISLAND TALE WITH FINE PICTORIAL APPEAL AND STORY THAT IS OF A FORMULA VARIETY BUT STILL APPARENTLY POPULAR WITH PICTURE FANS.
Cast.....A very good one. Percy Marmont, Leatrice Joy and Adolph Menjou make up the usual triangle. All well suited and thoroughly capable. Have some vigorous work to do in latter reels that qualifies them as excellent seamen as well as good actors. Laska Winter an interesting sidelight in the role of half-cast island girl. She's peculiarly attractive and especially good in this sort of a part. Director gives her many fine opportunities.
.....Type of Story....Drama. Frank R. Adams hardly deserves the credit for the entertainment afforded by "The Marriage Cheat" for it isn't his story that makes it interesting. Rather it is the splendid Thomas H. Ince production, skilful direction of John Griffith Wray and capable playing of a good cast. Adams' plot is the old tropical island theme with the white woman cast upon the island and her subsequent infatuation for the missionary. It happens that the woman isn't so easily rid of her worthless husband and he finally locates her. After the minister realizes he has broken most of the commandments he repents, gives up the woman to her husband but later they are reunited, following the husband's death. But with a thoroughly live presentation, attractive settings and genuinely realistic tropical atmosphere, plus some unusually actionful sequences toward the close, "The Marriage Cheat" becomes interesting. Whether or not it will pass censorship requirements because of the association of a clergyman and a married woman, and also through some pretty peppy scenes aboard a yacht, is a question. The early sequences smack strongly of Somerset Maugham's book, "Miss Thompson," which has been scoring on the stage as "Rain."
.....Box Office Angle.....Very likely a good box office number. Good audience appeal for the general crowd. Probably a trifle difficult if you cater to a small town, church-going clientele.
.....Exploitation.... If you know you can play this without incurring any trouble with ministers, etc., it should be easy to get your folks in. Just show a trailer of any of the more thrilling sequences, especially the wreck of the yacht or the rescue of the woman and baby from the reef. Naturally the title is a drawing card and will stand plenty of exploitation and prominence. Of itself it will serve to bring in many.

Baby Peggy Montgomery in "The Family Secret"

Producer: Universal-Jewel
As a Whole..... BABY STAR DELIGHTFUL AS EVER. STORY HAS GOOD HEART INTEREST TOUCHES.
Star.....Enjoyable as always. An adorably cute youngster who seems to improve with each picture. She's absolutely unconscious of the camera and her expressive little poses always bring a series of "oh's" and "ah's" in an audience.
Cast....Gladys Hulette pleasing. Edward Earle suitable as the husband. Frank Currier good type. Martha Mattox and Lucy Beaumont good in character parts.
.....Type of Story....Drama. You just can't help but love this adorable youngster, Baby Peggy. It isn't so much what she does but the way she does it that makes her work so charming. Oh, for a picture with Peggy and Jackie Coogan working together. "The Family Secret," adapted from Augustus Thomas' play "The Burglar" and Frances Hodgson Burnett's novel "Editha's Burglar," gives the little star an entirely appropriate vehicle and William Seiter has taken advantage of the opportunities presented to allow Peggy the full benefits of it. She's a little late in arriving in the story but the footage is correctly consumed with the establishment of a good premise that gives them something to work on and adds a little weight to the plot that otherwise might be a bit too slight. It deals with the separation of a girl and her husband by her father and the man's imprisonment on a false charge of the angry parent. After a lapse of time the parent relents and then tries to reunite the couple and their little daughter. The reunion happens by accident, but in time for a happy ending. There should be some explanation as to why the husband did not try to find his wife and baby after getting out of prison.
.....Box Office Angle....Very good indeed. If your folks appreciate a good heart interest story and a delightful child star who really worms her way into your heart, you can't go wrong.
.....Exploitation.....Promise them another splendid Baby Peggy entertainment. It's a charming little picture and if they don't enjoy it the trouble's with them, not with the film. Use a trailer extensively. Show them some of the cute bits with the baby star at her best, such as that in which she gives the dog a bath in her own tub. Play up the title with catchlines such as: "Have you any skeletons in your closet? See 'The Family Secret' disclosed at the blank theatre on (date.)"
.....Direction..... William Seiter; Good

"The Sea Hawk"

Producer: Frank Lloyd
Distributor: First National
As a Whole..... MIGHTY FINE PICTURE WITH STRONG BOX OFFICE POSSIBILITIES. SHOULD RANK AMONG OUTSTANDING SUCCESSES OF COMING SEASON.
Cast....Milton Sills outstanding figure in notable cast which includes Enid Bennett, Wallace Beery and many other names well known at the box office. Beery's performance exceptionally fine. Lloyd Hughes good as the weakling. Enid Bennett fails to satisfy.
.....Type of Story....Romance; with a background unusual to pictures. Of the old, old days when the Moors were fighting Spain. A love story full of excitement, adventure and intrigue with the lovers getting together at the finish of course. But lack of space precludes the possibility of telling in detail of many exciting developments which, however, broadly speaking will be sure fire to the average picture fans. Sills in ruffles and court costume not so interesting as Sills the he-man when he strips down to the galley-slave stuff and later as the leader of the Moors. A huge sum of money has been expended in the reproduction of Moorish galleys and Spanish galleons and the sea fights are full of intense action. This is the best stuff in the picture. Of necessity it takes about a half hour to get into the real story. Once the early planting of the characters has been done the story speeds along. You would never know that this was over twelve reels after the first three or four. It moves like lightning.
.....Box Office Angle....A sure-fire bet for any and all box offices regardless of size or community conditions. This one is in.
.....Exploitation....Just use your head. So many possibilities present themselves—the fact that "The Sea Hawk" written by Sabatini had a tremendous sale—that Milton Sills' following will be doubly increased—that Wallace Beery is a delight—that your people have never seen such stuff as comes with the battles on the galleons. Just run a trailer showing some of these battle scenes and your crowd will be there. You can interest many of your regulars by informing them that the atmosphere of this is entirely different from anything they have ever seen in pictures. Make use of bookstore tie-ups for the display of the book.
.....Direction ..... Frank Lloyd; By far his biggest and undoubtedly his best picture. Cutting would speed this up.

"THE ELEVENTH VIRGIN"

By DOROTHY DAY

Most happily chosen as the title for a book, "THE ELEVENTH VIRGIN" will at once appeal to motion picture exhibitors as a photoplay title which will stop every solitary pedestrian that passes their doors.

The book sprang into instant favor when published early in 1924 because of its title—and those who were curious to read it were loud in their praises of the strength and daring of its plot. It was inevitable, then, that it should establish a record for quick selling throughout the country; it is much too early to do justice to it as a "best-seller" since it is apparent that before the current summer is over it will have been read by at least ninety per cent of the people who are listed as regular readers of current fiction.

There were ten virgins in the Bible story—five wise who kept their lamps burning against the coming of the bridegroom and five foolish who were unprepared when the honored guest arrived. "THE ELEVENTH VIRGIN" is the embodiment of the modern venturesome young American girl who is driving her elders to distraction these days because of her absolute disregard for conventions and her determination to get all her knowledge at first hand.

There are action situations galore in this striking story by Dorothy Day which need only the careful treatment for which the WARNER BROS. producing organization is celebrated to translate them into motion picture entertainment of the highest possible type.

"The Good Bad Boy"

Producer: B. F. Zeidman

Distributor: Principal-State Rights

As a Whole.... PLEASING JUVENILE STORY THAT HAS GOOD HUMAN INTEREST TOUCHES AND EFFECTIVE HEART INTEREST BITS. STORY IS PRETTY SLIGHT AND MOVES RATHER SLOWLY.

Cast.....Joe Butterworth pleasing youngster who acts naturally and with assurance. Mary Jane Irving cute little girl who realizes that Joe isn't the bad boy the people think he is. Forrest Robinson contributes interesting characterization as the tipsy inventor. Others Lucy Beaumont, Arthur Hull, Edward Davis and Richard Wayne.

Type of Story.....Drama. There's not a great deal to the story but those who like human interest business and are interested in the antics of mischievous but well meaning young boys, will probably find "The Good Bad Boy" a satisfying film. It contains a lot of genuinely human and true-to-life juvenile stuff that will amuse a grown-up audience as well as one composed of young folks. The director has injected many effective little heart interest touches that provide a proper amount of pathos mixed with the humorous bits. Young Billy Benson is handicapped socially because of the poverty of his family caused by his father's devotion to his non-productive invention and equal admiration for his bottle. Billy is beset with all sorts of obstacles. The little rich girl realizes that Billy is not to blame for his father's acts and is the only one who treats him kindly. Meantime Billy has a strenuous time of it protecting his father from the attacks of neighbors and those who seek to steal his invention. After a climax that offers a little faster moving episode than the previous reels, the story ends in the success of the elder Benson's invention and Billy is the uncrowned hero of the day.

Box Office Angle....You have had sufficient opportunity through previous similar films to judge whether or not this type of picture pleases your crowd. Pleasing kid stuff should prove attractive to the majority.

Exploitation....Play up the juvenile angle and get your folks interested by telling them "The Good Bad Boy" is the story of a boy who was always getting in trouble because he wanted to shield his worthless father. Show them a trailer of some of the comedy bits, especially the sequence where the young hero steals the rich kid's clothes to attend a party. Joe Butterworth is a pleasing youngster and your patrons, both young and old, will be interested.

Hoot Gibson in
"Broadway or Bust"

Universal

As a Whole.....GREAT LOT OF HOKUM WITH THE SITUATIONS RUNNING WILD AND WOOLLY; STORY NOT AS GOOD AS RECENT GIBSON VEHICLES, BUT IT KEEPS MOVING.

Star....Has one of those knock-'em-dead hero roles in which everything but hard luck comes his way.

Cast...King Zany contributes fair comedy bits while Ruth Dwyer isn't an over important heroine. Here's a rather pretty girl if she only knew how to dress and arrange her hair. Gertrude Astor, Stanhope Wheateroft and Fred Malatesta others who haven't much to do. Wheateroft's part is especially light. He appears twice, each time to inquire "Is it true that cowboys have hair on their trousers?"

Type of Story...Comedy. After the first few shots of "Broadway or Bust," the plot and its denouement is as plain as the proverbial "nose on your face." In fact the title writer helped as much as anyone to give it away. After the girl inherits a fortune and goes East, leaving her cowboy hero minus a fiancée, you are told "this is hero's shack on his worthless piece of land." What a dead give-away that word "worthless" is. You know right then and there that gold or oil is sure to make it worth a million. And sure enough. Only it happens to be radium that brings the millions and sends hero to New York where there's some good comedy business in which he hires a "suit of rooms" for his horses and he and his cowboy pal "put on the dog." They get some laughs out of this idea with the two westerners getting acquainted with city manners. The yachting episode hasn't much humor, most of the footage being consumed with the effect of the rough ocean on the landlubbers. It does provide a grand rescue finish in which Hoot saves the girl he loves and they trot down to the beach where the waves make a nice background for a clinch.

Box Office Angle.....Pretty good amusement. Where they are usually satisfied with what Hoot Gibson has to offer you can count on this one holding its own satisfactorily.

Exploitation.....Title can be nicely exploited as per Universal's press sheet suggestion, that of getting a worse-for-the-wear looking auto, painting "Broadway or Bust" on the sides and running it about town or parking it in front of your theater. Play it up with catchlines about the cowboy who broke into Long Island society. Use a trailer showing the horses in a hotel room.

Direction .Edward Sedgwick; ample

"Wandering Husbands"

Producer: Regal Pictures, Inc.

Distributor: Hodkinson

As a Whole.....HAS ONE GOOD LIVE SEQUENCE BUT OTHERWISE IS A SLOW-MOVING, TIRESOME PICTURE WITH UNEVENTFUL ETERNAL TRIANGLE PLOT.

Cast .....Lila Lee and James Kirkwood well suited and pleasing as the couple who are being separated by the capricious "other woman," played effectively by Margaret Livingston.

Type of Story .....Domestic drama. If Lila Lee had only taken a more active part in putting a stop to her husband's attentions to the other woman earlier in the picture and given him a merry chase to start with, "Wandering Husbands" would not be such a tedious affair. As it is the first two or three reels just drag along without a thing of importance occurring. There are only a series of escapades in which the other woman figures and wife Lila sits home, frowns and suffers with the knowledge that her husband is untrue to her, for the sake of her child. Along about the fourth reel she hits upon a corking fine idea in the way of bringing iriend husband to time. Then for about another reel or two the story picks up, moves along at a good pace, affords some good amusement and is really entertaining. This episode, in which the wife decides to give the husband a "dose of his own medicine" is peppy and interesting. Margaret Livingston puts over her work in this part in fine style. The climax offers a fairly unusual climax with the wife inviting her rival and her husband for a ride in a leaking motor boat. When the situation becomes desperate the husband is forced to choose which woman he will save. Naturally it's his wife and the rival is cured of her attempt to steal the clever one's husband.

Box Office Angle.....Fair. Cannot be especially recommended because the picture, on the whole, is too slow. Its one good fast episode is not enough to hold them.

Exploitation .....If you know that the Lila Lee-James Kirkwood combination appeals to your audience you may be able to please them with this. Of course the title will bring in a certain majority and it might be effectively played up with catchlines such as: "Wives, Attention! If you want to make sure that your husband loves you and not the other woman, see 'Wandering Husbands' and learn a novel way of testing him." Or, "Lila Lee will give you some tips on how to manage 'Wandering Husbands.'" See her latest picture, with James Kirkwood, at the blank theatre."

Direction .....William Beaudine; ample, but should have speeded story.

Author .....C. Gardner Sullivan
 Scenario .....C. Gardner Sullivan
 Cameraman .....Ray June
 Photography .....All right
 Locale .....Long Island
 Length .....5,800 feet

May 29th, 1924.

Gentlemen:-

This is our pledge, not merely a promise. We guarantee the trade and the exhibitors through you that the Motion Picture Directors' Association will deliver for the season of 1924-1925, sixteen superb productions, based upon the following principles:

UNQUALIFIED FINANCIAL STRENGTH, PREPAREDNESS AND ABILITY TO PRODUCE, COMMERCIALY PROFITABLE PRODUCTIONS, BOX OFFICE VALUES BUILT UP BY BIG AUTHORS' NAMES, SURE FIRE PUBLISHED STORIES. EXCEPTIONAL CASTS AND CAPABLE DIRECTION.

In the matter of preparedness, the M.P.D.A. has been investigating, studying, and preparing for nearly four years to make motion pictures that would in every sense be their own. We have carefully thought out every minute detail in advance and are now ready to proceed. The production ability of our organization will be maintained to a high standard by every member of the Association. The market is assured by actual test records of the integrity and reputation of our members.

It is apparent to every one that the great value of this move will be the ability of our Association to capitalize its relationship with stars and players. The entire market and all its essential needs are at the command of this organization. Every production is assured of wonderful casts and stories that will not only set new standards in picture making, but will supply the independent market with a much needed stimulant.

A committee comprising the shrewdest and most successful directors of our group will select stories promising infallible box office winners.

This project, after long and weighty consideration, has been voted on step by step by all members of the M.P.D.A., therefore the united support in supervising, editing and titling, assures workmanship and finish that will be without parallel in the business. The financing of the entire production plan is underwritten by one of the strongest international groups of capitalists, therefore eliminating any necessity of economy at the expense of production. The financial policy will mean profitable productions and avoidance of costly ruinous waste, and only a director who is making his own pictures will know how to avoid these pitfalls. This move brings motion pictures directly from their creative sources to the independent exhibitors with a fuller value than they could ever hope to receive otherwise.

Yours very truly,

G.L.S./P.

6 Pictures Reviewed In 13 Cities

"After Six Days"—Weiss Bros. Madle Tabernacle, Indianapolis

STAR—There have been many film versions of Bible stories, but none of them has captured the dramatic essence quite so well as "After Six Days."

Garden, Milwaukee

NEWS & EVENING SENTINEL—The Cecil B. De Mille's "Ten Commandments" has not shown in this city, it can be better than "After Six Days" in so far as picturization of the Biblical characters and incidents are concerned.

SENTINEL—It is an unusual picture, recently produced. Whole cities were built to give an accurate background of the time, thousands of people portray the incidents.

"The Arizona Express"—Fox Fox, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—* * * "The Arizona Express" is one of those old fashioned, hair-raising thrill-a-minute pictures. It literally is an old-time fifteen-episode serial of villain and heroine compressed.

QUIRER—Those who have a weakness for melodrama of the old-fashioned kind will find a picture to their liking in "The Arizona Express." * * *

NORTH AMERICAN—"The Arizona Express" is an old-fashioned thriller, with the best brought down to date.

PUBLIC LEDGER (MORNING)—It can be justly called a serial compressed into one episode. There are as many thrills as usually finds in a serial continued from week to week. The picture runs at high speed from start to finish.

"Beau Brummel"—Warners' Aldine, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—The personality of John Barrymore, that of the "matinee idol," but beyond and beyond this, the skilled and finished actor, pervades the visualization of "Beau Brummel." * * *

PUBLIC LEDGER (EVENING)—* * * It is safe to say that "Beau Brummel" will command a place on every so-called list of the best of the productions that may be taken out from the studios in the meantime.

"Breaking Point"—F. P.-L. Capitol, Cincinnati

POST—"The Breaking Point" is being offered at the Capitol Theatre this week in three reels. But we tried pouring out the contents and found it to be a kind of the pipeline variety.

TIMES-STAR—Studies of amnesia and dual personality are always interesting. "The Breaking Point," adapted from the story and play of the same name by Mary Roberts Rinehart, treats of this theme.

TRIBUNE—The screen version of Mary Rinehart's novel, "The Breaking Point," * * * is a picture of distinction.

Missouri, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—* * * we consider "The Breaking Point," a Paramount picture directed by Herbert Brenon well worth seeing.

POST-DISPATCH—Melodrama and mystery are the principal ingredients in "The Breaking Point." * * *

STAR—The picture is generally diverting but never quite believable, a dish of this and that, of hot blood and chilled wine, surging passion and sweet love, murder in the dark, amnesia and a trick ending that leaves everybody happy but nobody quite convinced.

TIMES—Although the story is built on the somewhat overworked theme of the tangle resulting from a stroke of amnesia, it is presented in such a way as to make the film interesting.

"Conductor 1492"—Warners' Rialto, Washington

HERALD—In this particular sphere of acting, Johnny Hines holds an enviable position. He goes into a picture with vim and zest. He presents the clean-cut comedy and rough-and-ready humor that is a delight to the average American audience.

STAR—Johnny Hines * * * again proves his ability in comic roles, in "Conductor 1492." * * *

"Cytherea"—1st Nat'l Rialto, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—The manner in which this very capable director handled the material is remarkable.

"Dancing Cheat"—Universal World, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—The picture is somewhat better than the usual Rawlinson vehicles although the hero's role doesn't provide Mr. Rawlinson with anything out of the ordinary in the way of acting opportunities.

"Excitement"—Universal Broadway, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 24)

EXAMINER—If Universal is setting out to feature Laura in light comedies, it is following a good hunch. Miss La Plante is distinctly desirable, a fine blonde type, and has that quickness and blitheness which are the prerequisites of the comedienne ingenue star.

EXPRESS—In a difficult role Laura La Plante meets all the requirements admirably. She is pretty, not in a baby doll sort of way, but in the suggestion of good health, an abundance of pep, refinement of nature, a nice sense of humor and—best of all, intelligence.

HERALD—"Excitement" is a multiple reel production in which Laura La Plante is both charming and talented, albeit the highly geared action keeps her moving so rapidly that there is but little chance for subtleties.

RECORD—The humorous situations and subtleties in the film keep the audience in constant uproar.

TIMES—* * * Miss La Plante certainly cannot long escape the biggest kind of fame. She has grace, beauty, ease, one of the most expressive faces on the screen, and a comedy sense that equals Mabel Normand's.

"The Extra Girl"—Asso Exhib. Sun, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—It is Mack Sennett comedy which pokes fun at the much discussed idea of lone girls who go to Hollywood to become motion picture stars.

"The Galloping Fish"—1st Nat'l Park, Mall, Cleveland

NEWS—This picture has a mighty fine comedy cast, but I'm sorry to report it is neither as funny nor as entertaining as the press notices said it would be.

PLAIN DEALER—Noisy and pretty laughter is prompted by "The Galloping Fish."

"Gentle Julia"—Fox Apollo, Indianapolis

STAR—The tired business man should find relaxation and entertainment at the Apollo this week. "Gentle Julia," Booth Tarkington's comedy, the feature picture, is one that every one can enjoy.

"George Washington, Jr."—Warners' Strand, Cincinnati

POST—A good story, a good cast to support him and an abundance of real comedy, a great part of which is of the slapstick variety, go a long way in making Wesley Barry, the freckle-faced player of "kid" parts, a success in his first attempt to play the part of an almost grown lad * * *.

TIMES-STAR—But whatever the departures from the story may be, it is safe to say that it adheres closely to the primary purpose of the original, which was to afford unadulterated amusement.

TRIBUNE—The version is a fine, clean, fun-making picture which shows Wesley Barry in a new role—a fashionably attired young gentleman of society.

"Girl Shy"—Pathe Stillman, Cleveland

NEWS—In my opinion the picture isn't quite as funny as "Why Worry" but it is one of the breeziest and brightest comedies of the season and it will make any audience laugh its troubles away, which is more than can be said of most comedies.

PLAIN DEALER—"Girl Shy" is the funniest Harold Lloyd picture I have ever seen.

PRESS—There are more good comic situations in this movie than in any we have seen in a long time. It's a picture to make an audience laugh aloud.

"The Heart Bandit"—Metro Colonial, Indianapolis

STAR—"The Heart Bandit" is a typical Viola Dana romantic comedy, with the underworld for a background and the admirable Milton Sills for a hero.

Absolute Proof that Al Christie's Great Five Reel Feature "Hold Your Breath" is a Box-Office Sensation

June 4, 1924

Paul C. Mooney,

469—5th Ave., New York City

"'HOLD YOUR BREATH' played to the biggest business of any picture we have ever shown. Patrons shook my hand and stated it was the best picture they have seen in Newport for years, even far better than 'Girl Shy.' Am sending you a photograph showing the crowd waiting for the second show. We just packed them in for three days. Your last group of pictures have turned my house from a loser to a winner."

Season 1924-25—Thirty First-Run Pictures

"His Darker Self"—Hodkinson
Washington, Detroit

NEWS—Lloyd Hamilton was engaged to fill the lead role and the picture quite evidently went on in a haphazard manner. It comes to the screen without Mr. Griffith's name attached to it and we can't say that we blame him much.

PRESS—"His Darker Self" is funny in conception and funny in execution. The subtitles by Ralph Spence are about the funniest that have ever been written into a picture.

"Icebound"—F. P. L.
Columbia, Washington

HERALD—"Icebound" is a powerful and superb picturization.

Mr. DeMille has brought to the screen, in the central roles of this footlight classic, a truly notable Paramount cast.

STAR—William de Mille has directed the story splendidly, and has gathered a cast especially well adapted to the interpretation of the very real characters.

TIMES—True, to be hypercritical, one can find brief bits of hokum here and there but these are moments built primarily for the movie mob and by them recognized not as bunk, but as worthy dramatic effort.

"Just Mary"—Detroit M. P. Co.
Madison, Detroit

NEWS—Mr. Spence failed in his attempt to make it a big picture because the foundation had been blocked in with the old and shop-worn story of the misunderstood girl who shoulders the guilt of the indiscreet little girl and is stoned from the community for her trouble.

PRESS—The picture starts out slowly and at times seems to drag along uninteresting, but as the story unfolds interest is revived and the climax, which comes just before the end, is highly dramatic, filled with action and packed with heart interest that cannot fail to touch the emotions.

"A Lady of Quality"—Universal
Circle, Cleveland

NEWS—It is an atmospheric picture containing its quota of lavish settings, but skillful treatment alone saves it from disaster because the seventeenth century romance in itself is none too substantial.

PLAIN DEALER—We don't like to be mean about these things but "A Lady of Quality" seems to be a good example of much beautiful ado about nothing at all.

"The Law Forbids"—Universal
Strand, Detroit

NEWS—Realism and logic has been subordinated in several places to allow Peggy opportunity to display her charming pouts and smiles and the action halts occasionally to permit some comedy scenes in which the star never fails to score heavy laughs.

"Man Life Passed By"—Metro
Granada, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 24)

BULLETIN—"The Man Life Passed By" is swift moving, loaded with action and with skillful comedy touches.

CALL & POST—"The Man Life Passed By" is a surprise picture, real entertainment, a splendid story and reaches all manner of thrills and emotional heights.

CHRONICLE—"The Man Life Passed By", has strength, power, interest, fine direction and good acting to recommend it.

EXAMINER—There is a wealth of big-punch scenes. The story, dealing with the regeneration of a man, has been realistically handled and affords keen enjoyment for the spectator.

"Man's Mate"—Fox Express, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—Edward Mortimer, the director, keeps the plot moving and handles the players in a very competent manner.

"Men"—F. P. L.
Allen, Cleveland

NEWS—Pola makes the picture worth seeing. She shows flashes of her oldtime self, abandons much of the stereotyped posing of her last two pictures and does some real acting. When Pola acts, you know, she's worth seeing anywhere and at any time.

PLAIN DEALER—"Men" Pola Negri has been improving steadily. Now comes "Men," Pola Negri's greatest picture since she came to America and her first picture since she took out her papers. PRESS—The movie, however artificial, is told with a certain directness which is a real merit, and it provides for a wide variety of expressions in the closeups of Pola Negri.

"Mlle. Midnight"—Metro
Grand Central & Delmonte, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—"Mademoiselle Midnight" probably will be rated by many as Mae Murray's best picture. It certainly ranks high and presents the dancing star in a dancing role.

POST-DISPATCH—"Mlle. Midnight" the Mae Murray vitality is all there and she fairly dominates a melodramatic story in which a Mexican bandit and a venturesome young American match their courage and wits.

STAR—Mae Murray has been identified with a certain kind of role so long that it is a pleasure to recommend her in one that is a little different, that of the madcap senorita in "Mademoiselle Midnight."

TIMES—"Mademoiselle Midnight," a story of Mexico, and revolutions is a string of thrills which also shows Mae Murray in one of her most fetching roles.

"The Moral Sinner"—F. P. L.
Palace, Washington

HERALD—"The Moral Sinner" is a luxuriously produced, splendidly acted melodramatic romance of the Paris underworld, which constituted, in stage form.

STAR—Scenically considered, the story is limited to a Paris of handsome mansions, with nothing more sinister in the way of environment than the pleasant rooms where Kleschna lives with his daughter.

"Painted People"—1st Nat'l Capitol, West End Lyric, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—Laughter is the predominating effect upon the spectators in the First National picture, "Painted People," which is this week's attraction at the Capitol and West End Lyric.

POST-DISPATCH—Colleen Moore, the screen's current ideal of the flapper type, has a good medium for her beauty and talents in "Painted People."

STAR—Colleen Moore is rapidly developing a following as formidable as that of any screen star. In "Painted People," she has plenty of opportunity to entertain in her particular talents for mimicry and this will suffice to please her audiences.

TIMES—Far in the lead of the list this week is "Painted People," which appears at the West End Lyric and Capitol Theatres. This film with Colleen Moore as the star, is in a class by itself.

"Perfect Flapper"—1st Nat'l
Capitol, Detroit

NEWS—There are some preposterous exaggerations and few suggestive moves in the picture but taken in the sense of broad comedy, "The Perfect Flapper" is entertaining, with Colleen again proving her capabilities in this line.

PRESS—Colleen Moore, the screen's most perfect flapper, is seen on the Capitol screen this week in the sort of a role in which she excels, that of a gay, frivolous, smoking, dancing girl of tender years.

Circle, Indianapolis

STAR—Miss Moore, as one excited patron was heard to remark yesterday, is a "cut trick." Her flapper portrayals are probably more authentic than those of any other screen actress.

"Recoil"—Metro-Gold.
California, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 24)

EXAMINER—Rex Beach combines drama, vital human problems and unusual situations so cleverly in his stories that motion-picture producers clamor for "screen rights" whenever a new novel appears from his pen.

EXPRESS—"Recoil" emphasizes luxury with a prodigal hand, and the proletariat is duly grateful for the series of expertly designed flashes which display the Lucullan splendor of the idle rich.

HERALD—Vivid romance is a speciality of Rex Beach. It made him one of fiction's most popular authors and it has later made him one of the screen's best authors. It is contained in "The Recoil" in generous quantity.

RECORD—The story was worked out by Rex Beach in a sophomoric way, and has been little if any improved for picture purposes.

TIMES—Old admirers of Miss Blythe's may renew their acquaintanceship with her work—and at the same time meet a new Betty Blythe.

Merrill, Milwaukee

NEWS & EVENING SENTINEL—"Recoil" is well off the beaten path. The story is full of dramatic TNT.

SENTINEL—In fact, the story is the best part of it, for it is logically told and the subtitles which tell much in few words have been written by a master hand.

"Secrets"—1st Nat'l
Adams, Detroit

NEWS—In "The Song of Love," a silly story of the desert, Norma was just "a movie actress." In "Secrets" she is an artist, registering a personal performance that is almost flawless; a triumph such as comes only once or twice in the career of screen stars.

"Sherlock, Jr."—Metro
Eastman, Rochester

DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE—Ingenious comedy situations, trick photography and the peculiar type of humor the comedian has adapted for himself, a sort of expressionless sobriety, combine to make "Sherlock, Jr." an amusing screen program number.

HERALD—More genuine, almost exhausting laughter greeted Buster Keaton's performance of "Sherlock Jr." on the Eastman screen yesterday afternoon than this writer has seen given to a comedian of the cinema in that theatre, and it was laughter given for acting, not for purely accidental happenings.

JOURNAL & POST EXPRESS—Buster Keaton's newest comedy, "Sherlock Jr.," which is the feature at the Eastman this week, is only three-quarters of an hour long, but in that short time it crowds a couple of hundred laughs and leaves one with the impression that it a much more pretentious story than it really is.

TIMES-UNION—"Sherlock Jr." is one of those films not easily described. One can only say that it is well worth seeing and can be guaranteed to drive away the blues.

"Shooting of Dan McGrew"—Metro
California, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 24)

BULLETIN—Barbara La Marr appears in the role of "The Lady Known as Lou." It is a decided departure from anything this actress has attempted, and the entire play brings out a new phase of Miss La Marr's talents.

CALL & POST—There is power—a graphic magnetic appeal in the film play at the California this week. There is beauty, the exotic charm of "the lady known as Lou," as reflected by Barbara La Marr.

EXAMINER—At yesterday's showing in the California Theatre I was profoundly impressed by the success of the producers in translating the poem into a stirring screen melodrama, while yet retaining the spirit of the poem and using much of the body of it for sub-title purposes.

JOURNAL—The cast is a bully good one and there is no doubt that the picture is a great box office bet.

NEWS—So we can confirm all rumors of sai shooting of Dan and can add that the job is most artistically done, with but one exception—that of the dragging out by the heels of poor Daniel after being filled with lead.

"Son of the Sahara"—1st Nat'l
Loew's State, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 24)

EXAMINER—Claire Windsor and Bert Lytell enhance some exquisite photography of Algeria in Edwin Carewe's newest film "A Son of the Sahara."

EXPRESS—The fabrication itself is negligible—sheik stories have lost their first glamor from frequent narration. But in the manner of its presentation that excites admiration.

HERALD—At times it is splendid; at other bad. One moment it is unqualifiedly poor, the next it has risen to that height so seldom attained on the screen—naturalness.

RECORD—Although all the movie conventions are shattered, the picture is absorbing and replete with sensational episodes.

TIMES—I never knew of anybody who was especially interested in summering out on the hot sandy wastes, but this picture will show how they look in the height of the sheik-ing season.

"Temple of Venus"—Fox
Lyric, Cincinnati

POST—Drama, fantasy and romance interwoven into a photoplay of da splendor mixed with the beauty of bathing girls.

TIMES-STAR—The reviewer sat q and endeavored to be interested, but to find an excuse for the picture even t he searched hard as he watched the tastic production.

TRIBUNE—"The Temple of Venus" production of the spectacular kind, o pered yesterday, elicited many gasp awe and astonishment from the au throughout the showing of the scenic terpiece.

"Those Who Dance"—1st Na
Olympia, Boston

TRANSCRIPT—"Those Who Dance" is a bootleg truck, a brush with the revenue officers a consequent murder that lay the gr work for very passable melodrama.

Strand, Milwaukee

NEWS & EVENING SENTINEL—"Those Who Dance" is crowded with moments, dramatic scenes and bits pathos.

SENTINEL—Blanche Sweet is the and hereafter we would suggest that never again appear refined, for her work in this picture is done as the t young creature who is evolved by e from the insipid country girl of the part of the story.

"Tiger Love"—F. P. L.
Metropolitan, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 24)

EXAMINER—"Tiger Love" brings just the role for Antonio Moreno. A less, impudent and insouciant adventurer; the mountain trails of Spain.

EXPRESS—Not since "The Spanish cer," has handsome Antonio Moreno ba suitable a role as that of the aristoc Spanish brigand—a sort of "Zorro" or "in Hood"—in "Tiger Love."

HERALD—But these Sheik-Robin I D'Artagan things will flourish and make the box office as long as picture fans have and the price of admission.

RECORD—Some of the photography is tiful, and many of the incidents are amu

TIMES—The torrid Tony dashes thr the role of the bandit Wildcat, Senior Cast in "Tiger Love," down at the Metropol in a manner that's positively inspired.

"Wandering Husbands"—Hodkin
Kings, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—Cabarets a roadhouses abound throughout the pict not the least novel setting being a "b yard" cabaret for tired business men, taining see-saws, live cows and attend dressed in long linen dusters.

POST-DISPATCH—"Wandering Husband" is an amu and at times thrilling domestic drama.

STAR—Without attempting to tell husbands wander, "Wandering Husband at the Kings, demonstrates that they do, does it very entertainingly.

TIMES—Although containing a moral, film is presented in such a pleasing n ner as to conceal any "preachiness." Lee and James Kirkwood are the stars.

"West of the Water Tower"—F. P.
Piccadilly, Rochester

DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE—It i simple tale, simply told; but the thoug and receptive will leave the theatre a viewing this photoplay with conviction certain duties impressed upon their mi and hearts more indelibly than the invol reasonings of the most profound phil phers could ever impart.

HERALD—It is a faithful picture small town life, showing the temptati that come to the son of a minister and way in which he yields to them.

JOURNAL & POST EXPRESS—It perfectly cast, splendidly directed and t a human, absorbing story—a story that old because life and truth, which are much more in evidence in this picture t in most, are old. Yet it has a twist two that is decidedly different.

TIMES-UNION—"West of the Water Tower" is an easily mov tale of small-town life which, while it, its melodramatic touches, and its occasi improbabilities, strikes one as being, in main, very true to life.

Photographic quality has a definite box-office value—your audiences appreciate it.

PENNIES

By DANNY

Within a few days the largest circuits will decide on the tax question. That is, they are expected to agree that all will refund the admission tax. To their patrons. Just what other exhibitors will do remains to be seen.

Harold Franklin—and he's a mighty smart exhibitor—is of the opinion that the tax must be refunded. Otherwise it is his belief that there will be local and state taxation in reprisal. Because the public expects the tax cut to be passed on down to them.

He is liable to be mighty close to right. True, they are only pennies, and in most instances they will be considered unimportant. By the fans. When they get these pennies back. But just how they will look at it if they don't get these pennies remains to be seen.

That the tax refund should go to the patron is all right. Where the house has been openly charging the tax to the patron. But what of the exhibitor who has been absorbing the tax all these years?

This type of exhibitor will be in a hole. In a very serious predicament. Unless he can make clear to his patrons that he has been absorbing it. And, after making this understood, operate accordingly.

It is hardly a secret: that many exhibitors feel they can continue with their present prices. And thus offset some of their recent losses. Or, in this manner recoup and get on a better basis. And some of them believe they can satisfy their patrons without difficulty. But Franklin—and others—believe this will be bad business.

We're trying to find out. How exhibitor organizations—and individual exhibitors feel—on this mighty important subject. And hope to let you know something about it in a few days. And perhaps we'll have something to say further. On this subject. At that time.

Laurence Trimble became famous Directing "Strongheart." He now anticipates more fame. By writing a series of animal stories. Of course the famous dog will be written about. So will a lot of other animals.

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

London—The reaction of the Metro-Goldwyn merger tends to further readjustments and mergers among the large companies, "Kine," believes finally becoming trustified under one controlling group, and with regard to this, has the following to say:

"Very little attention has been paid here to the Metro-Goldwyn merger, and to a great extent it may be considered of small importance on this side, save in one or two minor factors which are none the less symptoms.

"According to Marcus Loew, the reasons for the merger rest on the need for stabilization and economy

Handling the Tax

Circuit Heads to Confer on Question in Early Future—Unanimity of Action Anticipated

Some time in the early future it is anticipated that heads of the several large local circuits, including Famous, Loew and Fox, will meet for the purpose of handling the admission tax repeal.

Harold Franklin of Famous is on record that in his belief the tax should be returned to the public and it is anticipated that the circuits generally will adopt this idea.

There is considerable question, however, as to the attitude of exhibitors generally on this point, especially where the exhibitor has been absorbing the tax—in other words, where the patron was not aware, through the admission price, that he was paying a tax.

"Manhandled"

One of the first pictures of Paramount's Famous Forty to reach you will be Gloria Swanson in "Manhandled," Allan Dwan's production of Arthur Stringer's story.

The very best way for you to judge its merits is to see it yourself.

When you do, I believe you will agree with these statements:

"What an actress Gloria Swanson has become! I am bereft of adjectives. You think me a raving cuckoo bird no doubt. What has happened to that Gloria Swanson? Don't ask me. All I can tell is that she has become flashing like a mirror and can reflect many things. All I can say is now she can act and does act. I can't think of one on the screen who could play the variety of roles this Swanson has been doing lately. And of all of them her finest is her little flippant 'Tessie McGuire' of 'Manhandled.' The picture has dramatic content and human interest to a point unequalled in any of Gloria's previous plots."
—Los Angeles Record.

"Something for every girl to see is 'Manhandled.' A story of chivalry and reality, a vivid drama of men who give and girls who take. The story is one of the trials and petty triumphs of a pretty girl. Thousands of just such girls live in every city. To them the story will prove valuable. Opens with such pure comedy that the audiences yesterday shook with laughter."
—Los Angeles Examiner.

"Check up another twirling hit for Gloria. She is all around the course this time and comes out one of the best little comediennes in the motion picture business. I'll wager that 'Manhandled' brings out a grand and glorious representation of everybody. More fun than anything I have seen in several weeks."
—Los Angeles Times.

"A novel cinema that has a generous touch of humanity. Gloria's work has improved surprisingly. She surpasses her excellent performances in 'Zaza' and 'The Humming Bird.' 'Manhandled' is an unusually interesting and worthy attraction, one which will give the Swanson fans and followers something to talk about for some time."
—Los Angeles News.

"In 'Manhandled,' Miss Swanson gives us everything that one could possibly hope for, and the acting, story, photography and direction are extraordinarily brilliant."
—Wire from Herbert L. Rothchild, San Francisco.

"Manhandled" is a picture that will get far more money for you than you've ever made on a Gloria Swanson picture, not excepting "A Society Scandal" or "The Humming Bird."

Miss Swanson's drawing power has increased tremendously, and with good reason.

"Manhandled" comes at a time when the showman can capitalize to the fullest extent on this star's enormous popularity. It has the greatest possibilities for the showman of any picture in the last six months.

It is a sure-fire draw and will give sure-fire satisfaction.

I am certain you will agree with me when you see the picture.

S. R. KENT.

Centralization

both in production and distribution.

"The advantages of operating with one studio instead of three are sufficiently obvious.

"Equally, the economic benefit of operating one set of exchanges in place of several in direct competition are equally plain.

"Together, these two things in theory (in Marcus Loew's theory as well as in general) should eliminate the production waste which is such a big factor in the high cost of pictures, and should provide cheaper, if not better, distribution service to the exhibitor.

"How that is likely to react here is a matter for speculation; but in theory the elimination of so much wasteful overhead should provide cheaper films without the screen quality deteriorating.

"When Marcus Loew was here last autumn he admitted privately, but very frankly, to us that the cost of production at that time was grossly excessive and that much of the cost was wastage. He also admitted that the conclusions arrived at as to the serious results which were likely to follow were rather under—than over-estimated.

"His general conclusion was that methods of economy were needed not only to prevent wastage but to keep the cost of pictures to the exhibitor at a level at which a reasonable profit could be made in the theatre.

"So far as America is concerned, the exhibitor seems dubious of the benefit to him of the combination. The allied concerns now control over a hundred 'first-run' theatres, and the average exhibitor does not believe that such big producer distributor-exhibitor combines can operate otherwise than against him.

"And, following the merger Adolph Zukor has been denouncing attempts at monopoly.

"Now for some years Zukor has been the head of the film industry, and Loew has now displaced him. Metro-Goldwyn is undoubtedly the biggest organization in the Trade, and both Loew and Zukor are ambitious men.

"It is unlikely, therefore, that Zukor will be content to let things remain as they are and further readjustments and mergers may be looked for.

"There are, at present, six big concerns: Metro-Goldwyn, Famous Players, First National, Universal, United Artists and Fox. To this, if the J. D. Williams-MacIntosh plans materialize, there may be added in the near future Ritz-Carlton.

"These between them dominate the Industry. As a generalization, there is not much left for the others, and still less for the independent producer who has no release through these channels.

"All of them have theatre interests either directly or through road shows—in the States, and most of them have already come into the theatre field in this country.

"What, then, is the direction in which the Industry may be supposed to be tending?

"There appear many signs that it is towards domination by three or four huge multiple organizations, ultimately to become trustified under one controlling group.

And the fight to be the one to form and to head such a group may well be between Zukor and Loew, unless the former is already satisfied with what he has done, and, tired, is preparing to step out of the fray.

"This tendency towards 'closing in,' which becomes increasingly noticeable, is already producing its reaction on the independent renter here and the State rights operator in America.

"It is tying up the product so that there is not enough 'big stuff' to go around among the independents, who, left with the dregs, are rapidly finding their position untenable.

"Pooling of resources, such as has taken place in a minor degree recently here and in several cases on a larger scale on the Other Side, may save the small distributor from extinction.

"But for the small exhibitor the situation offers a number of potential problems.

"Faced with the road show and the 'legitimate' theatre pre-release, the concentration of the big pictures into the hands of one or two enormous multiple combines, he may have to depend on what small stuff is available outside the Trusts and on late runs or high prices.

"His salvation lies in strengthening his own Trade Association, and in developing a new and protective capacity for acting loyally on decisions reached for the good of the exhibitor as a body rather than as an individual."

Newspaper Opinions

'America'—United Artists Forum, San Francisco
(Week Ending May 31)

EXAMINER—Upheld by those two high wings, melodrama and patriotic spirit, it moves with crashing force through great events of the early American days.

EXPRESS—"America" may be said to surpass Mr. Griffith's earlier and much discussed "Birth of a Nation." In some respects it shows a finer spiritual conception, more polished though less massive acting marks it technically.

HERALD—In staging "America," Griffith has created a film that will write his name indelibly in the pages of cinema history.

NEWS—Ponderously patriotic, brimming with vigorous action, "America" is an interesting vehicle which tells of the sacrifices that this nation might be born; it is a dramatic relating how our forefathers fought for their rights—our right—with flint and sabres * * *

RECORD—If Griffith had never accomplished or never was to accomplish another in his life, his "America" would entitle him to the eternal gratitude of Americans.

TIMES—"America" is really far from D. W. Griffith at his best in certain respects, but it is certain of a big appeal because of its theme.

'Broadway After Dark'—Warners' State, Cleveland

NEWS—It's one of the oldtime melodramas of yesteryear made over for the present, but it's quite entertaining.

PLAIN DEALER—The story is shallow, but it has a great deal of humor in it and has been finely directed. Bell, the director, is of the Chaplin and Lubitsch school, and their methods are always absorbing.

TESS—"Broadway After Dark" is just about the picture one would expect to be and "Broadway After Dark."

'Cytherea'—1st Nat'l Loew's State, Los Angeles
(Week Ending May 31)

EXPRESS—Picture of the photoplay is good. Its views of Cuba and smart New Orleans are filled with sparkling "atmosphere." The cover, the introduction of color in the scenes and the picturesque inns of the Spanish heights the piercing illusion of a romantic romance.

HERALD—"Cytherea" was superb as a picture of love and is splendid as a picture. It was written by a master, and turned into a screen production.

Warfield, San Francisco
(Week Ending May 31)

BULLETIN—The story is just sufficiently different from other pictures along the same line to make it novel and it moves with a freshness that combines realism with high fiction to make a finished photoplay.

CALL & POST—"Cytherea," * * * is a very good screen entertainment and it is going to prove a severe shock to those who have the idea that Hergesheimer's novel did not screen well.

CHRONICLE—* * * drawing packed scenes and entertaining them splendidly. George Fitzmaurice directed the transfer of the story from the printed page to the celluloid, and has done fine work.

EXAMINER—* * * "Cytherea," penned by Joseph Hergesheimer and filmed by George Fitzmaurice, makes admirable entertainment, interpreted by an admirable company of super-screen luminaries.

HERALD—The picture cannot be regarded as a milestone in motion picture progress. However, it will accomplish what the producers evidently set out to do, and that is, make a well-dressed box office attraction.

JOURNAL—As a mangle of other men's words George Fitzmaurice is no novice * * * same may not be said of "Cytherea." NEWS—* * * as excellent a silver sheet entertainment as movie fans have had an opportunity to see in many months.

'Daddies'—Warners Rialto, Los Angeles
(Week Ending May 31)

EXAMINER—The chances are very good "Daddies," now at Grauman's Rialto, make quite as much of a success in its celluloid way as it did when it was a stage play—a Belasco success. * * *

HERALD—Most of the action is cast in a farcical vein, with the romance between the author and the 18-year-old orphan rather syrupy in contrast with the juvenile activities.

RECORD—The story is directed for Warner brothers by William Seiter, chosen for his success with child actors. He has turned out a picture pleasing from start to finish.

TIMES—The opening and closing sequences move along at a slow tempo, but there are two reels of fun in the middle that are worth the time spent in catching the thread of the story.

'Darling of New York'—Universal Reade's Hipp, Cleveland

NEWS—Why they insist on making Baby Peggy act every moment she is before the camera is beyond me. The child star would make a much greater appeal if the directors would permit her to be natural. * * *

PLAIN DEALER—You will probably not agree with Baby Peggy's press agent in calling her "the Baby Bernhardt" of the screen—but you are likely to find considerable interest in the tactics of the chubby, wide-eyed little lady.

'Dawn of A Tomorrow' New Lyric, Minneapolis

STAR—* * * is an interesting slumming party and a very pleasing show.

TRIBUNE—The picture deals with the low strata of London life and the characters have been effectively portrayed. Jacqueline Logan is convincing, as the ragged street girl who made a world of sunshine out of her optimism.

Missouri, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—* * * a charming romance, uniting youth, pathos and tragedy, as well as religious fervor, and providing many a touching climax.

POST-DISPATCH—In its film version which is the current attraction at the Missouri Theatre, an effort is made to preserve the religious background, but the sustained impressiveness of the original is lacking.

STAR—While * * * gladness, child-like trust and optimism is a la Pollyanna in dubitably is an element in the story, the picture is far from the sickly sweet dish one might have anticipated from the stage play of the same name.

TIMES—Impossible as the story is, still it will appeal to the youngsters. Perhaps, that is its excuse for existence, poor as it may be. Jacqueline Logan dominating moll, is fair to look upon and acts well considering the impossibilities of the role in which she is cast.

'The Fighting Coward'—F. P. L. Alhambra, Milwaukee

NEWS & EVENING SENTINEL—A satire full of chuckles, on pre-Civil war days along the Mississippi, "The Fighting Coward," pokes fun at the code of honor of our Southern gentlemen of the time.

SENTINEL—Jimmy Cruze again demonstrates his infallible sense of humor in his latest production, "The Fighting Coward," which is a companion piece to that recent and delightful satire on life in the movie colony, "Hollywood."

'A Girl of the Limberlost'—F. B. O. Colonial, Detroit

TIMES—All the strange and loved characters of the fiction pages come to the screen and the story is followed more closely than one would believe possible.

'The Marriage Cheat'—1st Nat'l Rivoli, Baltimore

EVENING SUN—There are some "faked" scenes, to be sure, and these sad old eyes took due note of them, but what's the odds? "Faked" and "real" together, the combination is something a little bit more exciting than anything you've seen on the screen in some time.

'Miami'—Hodkinson Grauman's Metropolitan, Los Angeles
(Week Ending May 31)

EXPRESS—There is very little to the story that hasn't been projected before in tales of the jazz age. * * *

Florida landscapes and architecture are attractive backgrounds, and, if "scofflaws" are as prevalent as the film indicates, its climate must be wetter than the weather bureau reports indicate.

HERALD—"Miami" has plot—perhaps a little too much, but it moves with a zip and zest from the very start.

RECORD—Miss Compson is her usual charming self and gets over some interesting scenes in spite of the familiar character of the plot her director had to work with.

'The Perfect Flapper'—1st Nat'l Capitol, Detroit

TIMES—"The Perfect Flapper," aside from its pretensions presentation, boasts an unusually brilliant cast. * * *

'The Rejected Woman'—Gold-Cos. Kings, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—"The Rejected Woman" may be termed a vital drama. It touches the depths of emotion, but it is never heavy.

POST-DISPATCH—The plot is not highly original, but it is handled on a lavish physical scale with scenes photographed on the spot in Sherry's restaurant and the Ambassador Hotel and on the steamship Paris.

STAR—In most respects "The Rejected Woman," at the Kings, is just another picture. Everything in it is as standard with the movies as Ivory is with soap.

TIMES—The film has been produced in lavish style. Miss Rubens is given a wonderful opportunity to wear some elaborate gowns. Many interesting settings are provided in the picture.

'Rosita'—United Artists Grand Central, Lyric, Capitol, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—It is a masterful drama, in which the world's sweetheart has a role that combines the dramatic, humorous and romantic elements of entertainment.

POST-DISPATCH—Miss Pickford brings to the role of the supposedly scheming and none too upright singing girl a face as open as an Ingersoll watch. She is not an intriguing Spanish senorita at all.

STAR—* * * is sincere, colorful and eloquent, finely presented with a wealth of ultimate detail. It is enjoyable from the first to the last.

TIMES—"Rosita," in the person of golden-haired Mary Pickford, played her way into the hearts of movie-goers. * * *

'Through the Dark'—Gold-Cosmp. Strand, Minneapolis

STAR—* * * served with thrills, sprinkled with lots of gun 'totin' seasoned with shooting in the dark and garnished in quantities of love pathos. * * *

TRIBUNE—"Through the Dark," * * * is a picture which will undoubtedly interest enthusiasts of "crook drama."

'Triumph' F. P. L. Regent, Detroit

TIMES—Everything that goes to make for excellent screen entertainment is contained in Cecil B. De Mille's latest production, "Triumph." * * *

Granada, San Francisco
(Week Ending May 31)

BULLETIN—It has an unusually wide appeal, showing as it does the real romance of modern industry swinging in its cycle from the whirl and power of a big industrial plant to the heights of wealth.

CALL & POST—It is one of those powerful sociological and psychological satires for which De Mille is noted, and in its every scene clearly shows the craftsmanship of the master director.

CHRONICLE—The picture lives up to its direction; adds laurels to the brows of Leatrice Joy and Rod La Rocque, and introduces a newcomer, Victor Varconi, who promises to be heard from in the future.

EXAMINER—But whatever the name he makes use of, De Mille always turns out an interesting picture. "Triumph," while not as important as "The Ten Commandments," "Male and Female" and "Manslaughter," is no exception to the rule.

HERALD—It is uncommonly fine production, appealing to any class agreeing to the proposition that "all's well that ends well."

JOURNAL—* * * "Triumph," * * * does not refer to any outstanding accomplishment in the screen production, and neither does it suggest—as might be supposed from the possessive—the highest achievement in the cinematic career of the man who created for modern consumption, "The Ten Commandments."

NEWS—Whether you have read the story or not, we predict you'll enjoy the Granada version of "Triumph."

'The Woman on the Jury'—1st Nat'l Walnut, Cincinnati

POST—"The Woman On the Jury," * * * is our nomination for one of the best pictures of the year.

TIMES-STAR—"The Woman on the Jury," at the Walnut, is by all odds the best photoplay of the week.

TRIBUNE—"The Woman on the Jury," showing this week at the Walnut * * * is characterized by an array of stellar names that in themselves would prove an attraction for any movie fan.

"LADY LOU"

By DANNY

Robert Service would never know his "lady known as Lou." As she appears in "The Shooting of Dan McGrew." But that makes no never minds. Lou, as Service characterized her, is just about as censor proof as they can make 'em. Still, she isn't "Lou" as Service would have her. She is a nice, domesticated lady. With a baby, and a hubby, and all that goes with it.

My old friends—Sawyer and Lubin evidently figured they had to do something with "Lou." To get her the "old women of both sexes" as Rupert Hughes terms the censors. And they have. So it runs along minus the Service poem idea for some weeks.

Then all of a sudden it hits the harmony of the famous poem. And boy, how it shoots from there on. Only about two reels or so. But they're the kind that make an audience forget all the blah-blah preceding. From the minute "Lou's" husband drifts to the "pianner"—this one goes like a bird.

Perhaps much of the success of these reels is due to "Roxy's" idea. Of having the music stop. And only a piano played. It is fitting. You should do it in your house. It goes right with the Service idea. And fits like a glove.

The Binderup case is on again. Will take several weeks and then, regardless of the result, will be appealed. And so the appeals will continue until it again returns to the highest tribunal of the land. Binderup claims he was put out of business. By concerted action of 18 film concerns who "blacklisted" him. And the companies have two or three things. Or more. Which they claim against Binderup. It took four years for the case to go through the courts before. Golly; will the wait be as long this time?

It is refreshing to note what J. Gordon Edwards has to say. Of a brother-director: Charles Brabin. And his work on the big spectacle "Ben Hur." Here is a fine and notable instance of brotherly feeling. It puts

Resumed at Omaha—"Blacklist" Charge Again to the Front—Took Four Years to Go Through Courts in Former Trial (Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Omaha—The Binderup case, which, as noted, went through the courts for four years, and was finally ordered to a re-trial by the Supreme Court of the United States, is again on. A long string of attorneys represent the 18 film companies involved. William Seabury, who had the case in hand previously, is again in charge. Binderup is represented by A. P. Anderbury and others. He is suing for $240,000. If successful, under the terms of the Sherman anti-trust act, he will receive three times this amount.

Binderup built a chain of 28 houses in Nebraska, until in 1919 he claims he was "blacklisted" by film companies and was unable to secure service.

J. Gordon Edwards, builder of many important screen spectacles for Fox Film, and but just returned from Rome, spoke sincerely and enthusiastically yesterday of the work being done by Charles Brabin on "Ben Hur."

"I spent many days and nights with Brabin," said Edwards. "Of course the making of these tremendous spectacles does not upset me. I have made too many of them. There has been a prodigious amount of work done. It has taken a great deal of time. That cannot be helped. Any"

"A company will be formed in England to handle and distribute the Ritz-Carlton pictures, and later, I

Edwards Lands Material

J. Gordon Edwards, for many years director-general of Fox, has returned to New York, after spending 10 weeks on the Continent. He brought back a contract giving him the rights to picturize a famous Broadway dramatic production which ran for more than a year in New York.

When asked the name of the play and author, Edwards declined to give out the details, but said that arrangements are to be made immediately for the filming of the play with a cast of famous actors and actresses. Part of the picture will be made here and part abroad.

Praise For Brabin

one who tries to make pictures in Italy must console himself to their methods. It takes three Italians to do what one American can do. But the cost is infinitely less. They will take their own time, but if they like you they will give you results.

"On one occasion I took D. W. Griffith to see what Brabin was doing with 'Ben Hur.' Griffith had never met Brabin. He was very encouraging and spoke most enthusiastically of what Brabin was doing. Of course 'Ben Hur,' is the type of picture which demands what we call an 'artistic director.' Brabin is that if nothing. I am inclined to think considerable time has been lost in doing certain things such as planning decorations, etc., which will be lost to the camera. But the making of these spectacles is always fraught with certain matters which, in the end, are lost.

"The construction work on the big sets, the Circus Maximus, the ships, and other sets is taking time and costing a lot. The lighting plant put in must have been very costly. They had to erect a studio; because the studios obtainable were too small. They were held up on the costumes which were made in Germany. It has been a trying job for the director. But I am convinced that Brabin is doing very good work; he is whole souled about the task, and is living with it day and night. I doubt if anyone could do better. Certainly it seems inadvisable to make a change in the direction of this production unless it cannot be avoided."

Lee-Bradford Sales

Lee-Bradford has closed with The Capitol Film Service Co., of Boston for New England rights to "A Pair of Hellions," "The Lure of the Yukon," "Who's Cheating," "The Stranger From The North," 12 Ace High Productions, also 12 Redhead comedies.

The Enemy Sex

We've had a print of James Cruze's THE ENEMY SEX at the Paramount home office for several weeks. One of our sales executives has seen it six times. Three times he came back after supper when he heard there was a showing. His comment is the same as mine, "Wait till they see THIS one!"

I honestly don't believe there's a picture in sight this Fall surpassing THE ENEMY SEX for real honest-to-God audience appeal.

It's a woman-picture that makes the average flapper drama look like afternoon tea at the Old Ladies Home. Betty Compson, as the Follies girl who matches her wits and charms against the pocketbooks and wiles of her male admirers, is the niftiest piece of dimpled dynamite that ever hit the screen. We signed her to a contract on the strength of her magnificent work in this picture. Percy Marmont, Kathlyn Williams, Huntly Gordon, Sheldon Lewis and the other men and pretty girls in the cast excel any performances they've ever given before.

THE ENEMY SEX moves with the snap and speed of a lean, stripped-down racing automobile. Its plot frolics, skyrockets, grips, thrills and entertains every second. It's audience stuff PLUS.

See the picture at your Paramount exchange. Then you'll join us in marveling that Jim Cruze, after "The Covered Wagon," could turn right around and make another sizzling box-office success of an entirely different type.

THE ENEMY SEX is a FAMOUS FORTY record-smasher released August 25. It's exactly the type of picture they're crying for! Is your pocket-book listening?

Newspaper Opinions

"Flowing Gold"—1st Nat'l Regent, Rochester

DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE—A title "Flowing Gold," an author like Rex, a virile actor like Milton Sills,—ah, is a combination to stir the melodramatic instincts of the most lethargic person-

HERALD—Well it flowed absolutely too *** He is a picture that is obviously out to give thrills and gives so many to become most monotonous.

JOURNAL & POST EXPRESS—It might have been possible to put as many characters and plots into a book as there are in the picture without confusion, but the picture without confusion, but the picture on the screen is rather chaotic.

MEMES-UNION—*** to persons who their spectacles without looking too deeply into their whys and wherefores, the picture might carry a thrill *** the rest of the picture can be recommended as good entertainment.

"Forty Horse Hawkins"—Universal Cameo, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 24)
ALL & POST—Hoot Gibson has contributed something new in the line of screen humor in his latest photoplay, "40 Horse Hawkins." ***

CHRONICLE—Hoot Gibson's latest study likable boob is at the Cameo Theatre this week. Certainly a boob titled the play, for his official cognomen is "Forty Horse Hawkins." This in spite of the fact that only horses appear during the entire length of the picture and the hero is a taxi driver.

HERALD—Hoot Gibson does all sorts of unexpected things in his latest picture, *** a western picture with a New York touch. Hoot tries everything from cowboy for.

NEWS—Hoot Gibson has demonstrated an aptitude of screen humor in his latest photoplay. *** convinces one that seriousness of intent can make hearty laughter without placing the blame on the credulity of the one who laughs.

"The Goldfish"—1st Nat'l Metropolitan, Washington

HERALD—"The Goldfish" outlines, with humorous touches the experiences of a young man who falls under the influence of a French count, who plots to make her a countess and, in the process, engineers five divorces, four weddings and two divorces. CHAR—Constance Talmadge, one of the most popular young comedienne of the films, is one of her best stories in many months. The American picturization of the French picture, "The Goldfish." ***

MEMES—The Metropolitan bubbles over with week with the vivacious, irrepressible Constance Talmadge. Everyone succumbs to Constance's charms regardless of the vehicle which carries them along.

"The Great White Way"—Gold.Cos. Garrick, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE—"The Great White Way is a vivid melodramatic comedy.

"King of Wild Horses"—Pathe Miller's, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 31)
EXPRESS—Rex, the beautiful and proudly brave creature who is starred in "The King of Wild Horses," is a magnificent animal who responds to direction in marvelous fashion.

HERALD—"King of Wild Horses" at the Pathe is notable because it introduces one animal star to compete with Strongheart, Rin Tin Tin and Teddy, and because it carries the utmost in thrills.

"Love's Whirlpool"—Hodkinson Cameo, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 31)
BULLETIN—In "Love's Whirlpool," a picture is laid in San Francisco, and the feature of the bill at the Cameo, Lila Lee is a characterization entirely from any character as ever appeared in.

ALL & POST—The play is a stirring picture of San Francisco and deals with the nation of two crooks and the awakening of a selfish man through the force of good influences.

CHRONICLE—It is very much of a surface sort of thing, its appeal depending almost entirely upon incident. This makes for rapidity of action and a certain kind of interest, but doesn't leave much room for depth of theme or acting. With this material the players do the best they can.

NEWS—There is a touch of mystery in the play, many thrills, a big shipwreck, an escape from San Quentin and scenes of a spectacular police raid.

"Manhandled"—F. P.-L. Grauman's Third and Broadway, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 31)
EXAMINER—*** is something for every girl to see. It is a story of chivalry and reality—a vivid drama of men who give (?) and girls who take.

HERALD—*** Gloria makes the grade. She wears clothes and wears them well in "Manhandled" *** She wears them in many designs and in various quantities. But in addition she does much superb acting.

TIMES—Check up another twirling bit for Gloria. She is all around the course this time, and comes out one of the best little comedians in the motion-picture business.

"Maytime"—Preferred California, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 31)
EXPRESS—There is a breath of spring carried through this picture, which is elegantly mounted, smoothly directed and beautifully photographed.

RECORD—"Maytime," the current attraction at the California theatre, has all the ingredients of a sure fire success.

"A Society Scandal"—F. P.-L. State, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE—Although the vehicle lives up to its title as far as elaborate sets and lavish gowns are concerned, the portrayal of Marjorie Colbert by Miss Swanson dominates the picture.

"The Storm Daughter"—Universal Clune's Broadway, Los Angeles

(Week Ending May 31)
EXPRESS—Two of the principal reasons why "The Storm Daughter," at the Clune Broadway, is an enjoyable film are to be found in the presence of Priscilla Dean and Tom Santschi.

RECORD—In "The Storm Daughter," showing at Clune's Broadway. Director George Archainbaud gives us a tame little heroine. While there are spots that remind one of the Priscilla Dean they know, they are all too few.

Rivoli, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—Score another triumph for Priscilla Dean, charming star of the Universal Pictures Corporation. Also score another triumph for Universal, for in presenting "The Storm Daughter," now showing at the Rivoli Theatre, it has a distinct achievement.

STAR—Cut to half its present length, "The Storm Daughter," at the Rivoli, would be a somewhat distinctive picture of the days of iron men and wooden ships.

TIMES—It is a lively film, with the tossing waves for most of the sets. Those who prefer pictures made in the great outdoors will find "The Storm Daughter" to their liking.

"True As Steel"—Gold.-Cosmop. Strand, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 31)
BULLETIN—Rupert Hughes has discussed a daring theme cleverly, subtly and in an original manner in his latest production, "True as Steel," now showing at the Strand Theatre. The result is one of the most entertaining pictures of the year.

EXAMINER—*** presents a powerful story by Rupert Hughes, with Aileen Pringle, Huntly Gordon, Eleanor Boardman, William H. Crane, Louise Fazenda and Norman Kerry in the leading roles.

HERALD—The story is told without the use of melodrama, lurid situations or a superabundance of hokum.

NEWS—Hughes not only wrote the story, but directed the filming of it. And he has done well.

"The White Moth"—1st Nat'l Wisconsin, Milwaukee

NEWS & EVENING SENTINEL—Maurice Tourneur should be congratulated on the splendid fashion he produced "The White Moth," a story of the Parisian Latin quarters, without a doubt one of the most lavish, colorful and expensive things ever turned out by First National ***.

SENTINEL—This picture has been directed by Maurice Tourneur in a skillful way—you don't care whether it is probable or true to life for it is immensely entertaining.

Strand, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—The story is sophisticated in theme—at times risqué, but never dull.

Warfield, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 24)
BULLETIN—"The White Moth," a story of the Parisian stage, gives Miss La Marr a most spectacular setting for her efforts, and she does not fail to make the most of every advantage offered.

CHRONICLE—*** a brilliantly directed and well acted picture, "The White Moth," in which Barbara La Marr is starred ***

EXAMINER—"The White Moth" is Barbara La Marr's new starring production, and on the Warfield screen Barbara is scintillating as she has never scintillated before.

JOURNAL—An astonishingly fine picture, this piece given the light of day by Maurice Tourneur.

NEWS—The picture is as good as any we have seen Miss La Marr do.

"Why Men Leave Home"—1st Nat'l Stanley, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—The adaptation of this stage success is more effective in film than when produced by actors in person, ***.

INQUIRER—The picture is highly diverting and a clever and realistic depiction of many of the marriages of today.

NORTH AMERICAN—It is a comedy drama of rather amateur married life, in which at first the honors for tactlessness seem about even between the harassed husband and the injured wife.

PUBLIC LEDGER (MORNING)—If you need to be convinced that weak captions can spoil the effect of an otherwise fine picture, you should see "Why Men Leave Home," as adapted from Avery Hopwood's comedy by John H. Stahl.

PUBLIC LEDGER (EVENING)—Sometimes a picture which comes almost unheralded has far more real enjoyment, amusement and sparkling wit than those arriving amid a heavy barrage of praise. Such a one is "Why Husbands Leave Home."

"Woman To Woman"—Selznick Metropolitan, Baltimore

AMERICAN—If Betty Compson means more to you than a scenario, you'll enjoy the photoplay which comes today to the Metropolitan.

"Women Who Give"—Metro Century, Baltimore

EVENING SUN—One catches something of the ocean's mighty dignity, its solemnity, its restlessness and its cold indifference in this Reginald Baker production which is currently being retailed, or should we say wholesaled, at the Century.

The Chicago, Chicago

TRIBUNE—When you've seen "Women Who Give," you'll have seen a splendid picture.

"The Yankee Consul"—Asso. Exhib. Strand, San Francisco

(Week Ending May 24)
CHRONICLE—*** is drawing audiences of large size, and wildly hilarious audiences, for MacLean is very good indeed as the too rich hero of the story and the comedy is full of well calculated comic scenes.

HERALD—Douglas MacLean has taken the story from "The Yankee Consul" and given the screen a hilarious comedy that is as genuinely funny as it is clean and wholesome.

NEWS—*** give the happy audiences at the Strand an unusually hilarious good time.

Tokio Situation

Famous Closes Down—Many Offices Have Heard Nothing Direct as to the Situation

Conditions at Tokio, Japan, where, as noted, American films were boycotted, were unknown yesterday to most of the American companies having offices there. Famous Players was the only organization which had received direct word, and this was to the effect that the Tokio office had been closed. Information obtained through the Howell's office notified First National to temporarily hold up all shipments. Otherwise nothing was heard from the scene of the trouble.

Famous offices at Kobe, (headquarters) and Osaka, are still open and Bogart Rogers, of the Douglas MacLean organization, is in town. At the Algonquin. This is Rogers' first visit since he landed from France with the A. E. F.

How Exhibitors Will Handle The Admission Tax—Patrons To Benefit

That Seems To Be The Consensus of Opinion, Although Several Point Out That Increased Operating Costs Make For Difficulties

In an effort to determine how exhibitors intended acting relative to the admission tax repeal, THE FILM DAILY sent telegrams to important points throughout the country.

Not only were well known exhibitors with large chains questioned, but head of exhibitor organizations, both the M. P. T. O. and the Allied group were asked for opinions, because there seemed to be a difference of opinion: whether the refund would be passed down to the patrons, or whether, because of various conditions, exhibitors intended retaining present prices.

Replies received appear below:

B & K to Refund

Balaban & Katz, operating the big Chicago, and other important houses in Chicago, and also controlling the B. & K. Mid-West group which operates over 30 houses in Illinois, say:

"We are going to refund admission tax at our theaters. Believe this will be the attitude of exhibitors in this territory."

Lieber Plans No Refund

Robert Lieber of the Circle, Indianapolis, says:

"Circle theater does not plan to refund admission tax. Top price is 50 cents, and admission price would probably have been raised this season excepting for anticipated legislation.

"While I have made no survey, I rather anticipate that the same attitude will obtain with exhibitors generally in this community."

The Schine Idea

Ben Davis, representing the Schine Theatrical Co., Inc., of Gloversville, with houses in a number of surrounding towns, says:

Louis Brock of First National said that in his opinion the difficulty was only temporary; that Japanese liked American films, that there was insufficient quantity of foreign film to materially effect the situation, and that he believed the trouble would blow over before other films could be brought in. Horace Clarke, special representative for F. N. is en route to Japan now.

At Metro-Goldwyn no information had been received. Everything was moving as usual, according to Arthur Loew.

In the Courts

In the suit of J. Searle Dawley Prod. Corp. against the Selznick Dist. The plaintiff alleges that the proceeds of the film are deposited in the Hamilton National Bank, and that under agreements made, the defendant, Selznick, is entitled to the first $65,000 to be paid by Selznick and estimates that Mrs. Garsson advanced $35,000, and wants an accounting. The plaintiff wants the rights of the parties stated by the court. In the answer, the contracts between the parties are attached, and the defendants asked that the plaintiff be compelled to state whether or not it admits that these contracts were executed.

The Goldwyn Dist. Corp., filed a default judgment for $259 in the Supreme Court against John M. Moran of the Dolan Opera House, Cox-sackie, N. Y., for refusal to accept 14 films contracted for.

A default judgment for $1,255 was filed in the Supreme Court by the estate of Daniel Neuman against Lewis J. Selznick in a suit on a note executed in 1922.

Wanderer of the Wasteland

It's no secret that the head of a prominent New York theatrical organization, after seeing WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND at the special showing at the Rialto Theatre, made us an offer to road-show the picture.

"Here is a road show if there ever was one," this man, a great showman, said. "It's of the same caliber as THE COVERED WAGON and THE TEN COMMANDMENTS, and the public will be glad to pay $2 prices to see it."

Practically every showman at the Rialto performance agreed that WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND is a $2 production. But we aren't going to road-show it. We're going to give it to you. August 11th is the release date. If we started picking all the $2 pictures out of THE FAMOUS FORTY for road-showing, we would have hardly anything left on the release schedule!

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND is the kind of a picture that literally sweeps audiences off their feet with enthusiasm. For one thing, it is made entirely in natural colors by the sensational Technicolor process. There is a terrific kick in seeing the Painted Desert of Arizona and Death Valley, California, where the picture was made, looming before you in all their magnificent grandeur that a black-and-white camera never could touch. There's even more of a kick in the lifelikeness with which Jack Holt, Noah Beery, Kathlyn Williams, Billie Dove and the other players in the all-star cast appear. Your audiences will tell you that they never really knew these players until they saw them in color, as they really look.

Of course Paramount wouldn't have gone to the tremendous expense of making WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND in color if the story weren't there. It's Zane Grey's greatest. As a book it has sold over a million copies. It has tremendous dramatic power, lots of red-blooded adventure, fights, at least two scenes—one with an avalanche and the other with a rattlesnake—that have never been excelled as hair-raisers, a nice love theme—everything audiences like everywhere.

Jack Holt has the role of a man who thinks he has killed his own brother and plunges out into the Western wasteland to forget, repent, dodge the law and die. He meets gruelling hardships, battle, a bad woman, a pal, thrilling adventure, and at last the girl. He fights his way through it all, through all except his love for the girl. He tries to shake that off too. But he can't. It makes a free, honorable man of him.

I don't know of a man better able to produce an outdoor adventure picture like WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND than Irvin Willat. I take off my hat to him. He has done a corking job.

Better see WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND at your Paramount exchange and get this $2 road show quick.

S. R. KENT.

Competitors Alike

the Federal Trade Commission report, by Examiner E. C. Alvord:

"The sales policies of distributors competing with Famous Players in this territory, from 1918 to date, show that the majority of distributors here sell their pictures in blocks—that the majority of them refuse to sell their whole season's product in one block—that many of them refuse to sell the exhibitor any pictures out of a block unless the exhibitor will take all of the pictures in the block—that the majority sell pictures before they are made—that some distributor competitors offer for sale only one picture at a time, and some in a policy of permitting exhibitors to select such pictures as they want—that the majority of distributors who permit exhibitors to select, ask more per picture, in situations where they sell less than the number of pictures offered, than when the whole number is taken—that the selling cost where only a few pictures are sold at a time is prohibitive—that the exhibitors desire to buy pictures in blocks especially when the blocks consist of pictures of uniform quality to be released in a uniform manner, and are unwilling where there is a competitor, to split a given block with their competitors—that there is wide and effective demand for good pictures—that theaters are not blocked up with Paramount pictures so that competitors cannot sell their pictures—that there is a free and open market for pictures and active competition among distributors—that the competition received from Famous Players is little or any more important than that of such companies as Goldwyn, First National, Fox, Universal and others and that the sales in the aggregate amount substantially greater than the weekly sales of the Famous Players Lasky Corp."

The gathering of defense by Famous Players, in the Government's charges of monopoly, being investigated by the Federal Trade Commission, will be resumed Friday in the Chamber of Commerce Building, having been suspended since last week because certain witnesses called are out of town until Thursday.

Bohm Looking Over Product

Otto Bohm of the Deulig-Film organization, Berlin, is at the Astor. He will remain about 10 days. He is busy looking over material. Prior to his return he hopes to effect an arrangement for an interchange of productions between some American producer-distributor and his organization.

Deulig will in all likelihood release the Lubitsch and other Warner pictures in Germany.

Coast Arrivals

Charles E. Whittaker is here from the Coast. Other arrivals are Edwin Sturgis, formerly business manager for Owen Moore, who plans to enter vaudeville; David Kesson, Marshall Neilan's cameraman, and Hugh Ford.

Decide Against Exhibitors

Judge A. S. Van Valkenburgh, of the Federal District Court, for the Western district of Missouri, handed down a decision against 11 exhibitors in suits filed by music publishers for copyright infringement.

Burlingham Dead

Fred Burlingham, head of Burlingham Travel Pictures, is dead from kidney trouble. The remains were brought to Cincinnati last night, accompanied by Burlingham's mother.

Julius Bernheim and Bernard McConville, of Universal, have returned to the Coast, following a conference here with Carl Laemmle,

Patrons To Benefit

which operates a chain in New York State:

"We will refund the tax in most of our theaters."

Saenger's to Give Patrons Benefit

E. V. Richards, general manager of the Saenger Amusement Co.:

"We shall remove the tax and give the patron the benefit as the Government expects it and not raise our admissions as a camouflage to absorb it."

Comerford to Take Tax Off

M. E. Comerford is the head of one of the largest chains in the East, controlling many houses in Eastern Penna. He says:

"Admission tax repealed by Congress will be taken off prices of admission to our theaters when repealed measure goes into effect."

Brylawski to Refund

Julian Brylawski, operating houses in Maryland and the District of Columbia, says he will refund the tax at all his houses.

Stanley Co. of America to Refund

The Stanley Company, operating houses in Philadelphia and Eastern Penna., will refund the tax.

Trendle Expects to Retain Tax

George W. Trendle, of the Kunsy chain, Detroit, was of the opinion yesterday that the Kunsy houses would retain the tax, because of increased operating costs, and the fact that excepting for the anticipated repeal there would have been an increase in admissions. The question, however, was not definitely determined, as to just what might be done.

Finkelstein Silent

Minneapolis—M. L. Finkelstein did not wish to be quoted with regard to the question: should the benefit of the tax pass to the patrons.

K. C. Exhibitors to Make Cut

Kansas City—Frank L. Newman states that exhibitors in this territory practically all expect to refund the admission tax. "Personally, I am going to reduce my loge seats to 50 cents, so that I will have no admission tax, in any of my theaters," Newman says.

Samuels' Patrons Will Benefit

Atlanta—Sig Samuels declares "the public paid the freight and I believe the public should now be relieved of the admission tax. The Metropolitan will reduce its prices to 31 cents and 45 cents and I am inclined to believe that all exhibitors in this territory will do likewise."

Kearse Will Raise Admissions

Charleston, W. Va.—T. L. Kearse expects to advance prices in all theaters, especially in cases where a 22-cent admission is charged. These prices would be raised to 25, and 40-cent admission would be raised to 45 cents. This is due to the competitive conditions between theaters. Kearse believes that "the tax has been carried by the exhibitors and I think the majority of them feel as though they would be warranted in maintaining present prices and making no refund, this due largely to the fact that they have been absorbing the tax in the past."

The heads of the more important circuits, including Famous, Fox and Loew, will meet in a few days to determine just what action will be taken at their houses on the lifting of the tax, although there is almost a certainty that the public will benefit.

Exhibitor Leaders Ideas

A number of the wires went to heads of exhibitor organizations throughout the country. Here are the replies.

William Brandt, M. P. T. O., N. Y.

"For over two years exhibitors have been assuming the tax, and exhibitors have not increased admission prices, despite that all operating costs have advanced materially ever since the tax became effective some years ago. As an idea of our advanced operating costs: film service has advanced from a maximum of $250 a day to $400 a day. We used to get mighty fine pictures for $100 a day. No more. Operators salaries have increased from $25 a week to about $65 a week. Musicians salaries have doubled, tripled and quadrupled. Fully 90 per cent of the exhibitors in the Greater New York territory have been absorbing the tax hoping for this repeal. They have not advanced admissions. They will, in my belief, leave prices as they are, especially where they are in round figures like 25, 30 or 35 cents. Where the odd prices have been kept because of the tax there may be a change."

O'Reilly Favors Cut

Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the T. O. C. C. said "it is my opinion that wherever the theater has added the tax to its regular admission price, the same will be discontinued beginning July 3."

H. B. Varner, North Carolina, MPTO

"It is my opinion that the theater owners in North Carolina will not lower their admissions as the majority of them have been absorbing the tax and 90 per cent of them are at the present time losing money."

J. Wells, Tri State Theater

"Regret cannot inform you what will be the attitude of individual exhibitor in this territory as to reducing his admissions to the amount of the repeal. This matter our state organization could not handle or enforce. It is as a matter of course that theaters are going to conform to new condition which has been strenuously striven for."

Harry Davis, Pittsburg

"As far as possible, those who were not absorbed the tax themselves taking it off".

H. A. Cole, M. P. T. O. of Tex.

Exhibitors throughout Texas lower their prices where admissions has been in excess of 25 cents. I believe it best for the moral effect on the public in general, and will aid in combating adverse legislation.

Boston Meeting Today

Ernest H. Horstmann has called a meeting today of the Massachusetts M. P. T. O. to discuss the tax situation.

St. Louis Prices Revised

The managers of the leading St. Louis theaters have revised their admissions, so as to give the public the benefit of the tax. The new schedules take effect July 3rd.

It's Raining Contracts at Universal Offices!

No. 385—Straight from the Shoulder
Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation.

These are exciting days at all Universal offices.

Contracts are pouring in—flooding in—storming in from all over the country—contracts with play dates, the only kind worth a rap to you or me.

The avalanche began with contracts for the Dempsey pictures. Then came Universal's greatest and most important announcement, listing its productions for the new season. It has hit the bullseye with exhibitors everywhere. There has been a magnificent response. Letters and wires, in addition to contracts, have poured in, congratulating us on our lineup for the coming season.

For example, all twelve of these Jewels have been booked by the Keith, Proctor and Moss houses, among the finest houses in the country, and in all the splendid Stanley theatres in Philadelphia.

"The Signal Tower" has been booked for the Mark Strand theatre in New York City. The Rialto, in the same city, is showing "The Reckless Age," starring Reginald Denny, beginning June 8th. These are the first two pictures listed among our new season's big Jewel productions. They are big in every way. But wait until you see Booth Tarkington's "The Turmoil"; and "The Gaiety Girl" with Mary Philbin; and Kathleen Norris' popular success, "Butterfly"; and the other big ones such as "Captain Fearless," "The Rose of Paris," "Love and Glory," "Wine," "The Tornado," "The Family Secret"—based on Augustus Thomas' play—and Mary Roberts Rinehart's "K—The Unknown."

Great titles—splendid casts—clean, wholesome stories—all in all, in every way, big productions!

So the goose hangs high!

I would be worse than ungrateful if I failed to express my heartfelt thanks for your quick response to our announcement. With this sort of cooperation from you I can continue to produce closer and closer to one hundred per cent of what you want.

I appreciate your cooperation and if I do not do my part by giving you the best lineup of pictures produced by any one company, it won't be because of any lack of hard trying.

When the Government talks it means something. Note, therefore, Mr. Exhibitor, what the Treasury Department says about the repeal of the Admission Tax. Also about the necessary certificate where tickets are destroyed. When the tax is off don't start destroying your tickets. Otherwise you will be in a jam. Wait until some Deputy Collector appears. Then destroy the old tickets.

Also be guided by the order relative to prices to be charged and what rights you have with your present tickets. Many far sighted exhibitors may have already ordered their new tickets and have prepared themselves for the situation. Doubtless, however, some exhibitors have not. Take no chances.

If you do not fully comprehend—do not thoroughly understand the ruling of the Treasury Department get it explained to you. But take no action until you know what you are doing.

While we're on the subject of Governmental Departments, etc., here's a tip for producers. If you have not had the new Census blank sent you with the Dept. of Commerce, do so at once. If you have failed to receive one make it your business to get one. And shoot it along. Don't forget this is the first actual census ever taken of this business. And while at the moment it deals chiefly with production it will not take long to get it extended to all other branches of the business. So cooperate. Let's get somewhere with this census.

The contract is "for a period of years," according to the statement, and approximately 65 releases will be handled by Regal during the coming 12 months.

Until some months ago, Goldwyn distribution in Canada was controlled by Jule and J. J. Allen, while Metro productions were distributed by Regal. When the Allen's failed, Regal took over the balance of the Goldwyn contract, but the new agreement now establishes Regal as distributor for the combined output.

Treasury Ruling

Regarding Repeal of Admission Tax—Certificates for Destroyed Tickets Necessary

The Hays offices yesterday received the following official notification from the Treasury Department in Washington on the use of admission tickets following the repeal of the Admission Tax.

"You are advised that tickets printed in accordance with the regulations issued under Revenue Act of 1921, the established price of which was 50 cents or less, may be sold until Sept. 1, 1924, for the established price printed thereon. A ticket printed 'established price 30 cents, tax three cents, total 33 cents,' may be sold for 30 cents, but such a ticket could not be sold for 33 cents merely because the established price and the former amount of the tax to be paid totals 33 cents.

"With regard to the destruction of tickets, your attention is directed to a provision which will appear in Regulation 43, Part 1, revised, issued under the Revenue Act of 1924. This section of the Regulation will provide that tickets which have become obsolete due to change in price or for any other reason shall not be destroyed except in the presence of a Deputy Collector or other representative of the Bureau. After the destruction of tickets a certificate will be issued stating the number of tickets destroyed, their denomination, and all other pertinent information. One copy of this certificate will be retained by the tax payer and another copy will be kept by the Collector."

Word comes from Astoria today that J. & V. have signed a ten year lease on a 1,000 seat house to be built shortly as a part of a building housing 12 stores, and considered Astoria's most important business deal since the new Astoria Hotel. Jensen & Von Herberg will spend $60,000 fitting up the house. It has also been stated that not long since, through a third party, an attempt was made by the same company, to purchase the Paramount, one of the choicest of Seattle's suburban houses. It is feared here that an attempt will be made to establish a chain similar to that of the West Coast. Methods of acquiring houses are similar in both instances.

Changing Husbands

I don't know when I've been so thoroughly entertained by a picture as I was by CHANGING HUSBANDS when the first print from the Coast was shown at the Paramount home office the other day.

This is the marriage-comedy, featuring Leatrice Joy, which Frank Urson and Paul Iribe, former assistants to Cecil B. DeMille, produced under Mr. DeMille's personal supervision. It is the FAMOUS FORTY release for August 11th.

CHANGING HUSBANDS is a fast, fizzy, champagney comedy-romance that takes the same sophisticated slant on marriage and life as did DeMille's famous "Don't Change Your Husband" and "Why Change Your Wife?" It's the story of a jazz-mad wife sick of her carpet-slipper husband and of a home-loving actress sick of the stage. The two girls look just alike. They swap places. The unsuspecting husband falls violently in love with the actress. The wife is infatuated with another man. Complications? Sensations? Fun? You said it!

Leatrice Joy has the time of her life in this picture. She bubbles over with the same carefree gayety as Gloria Swanson does in MANHANDLED. Raymond Griffith is a riot in a comedy characterization that is going to bring whoops of joy from every audience. Victor Varconi is excellent as the husband.

CHANGING HUSBANDS spins along so rapidly and so entertainingly that you think at the end you've only seen about two reels. It's merry, it's wise, it doesn't hesitate to slapstick for laughs—it's there! And the man who wrote the sub-titles deserves a place with the world's greatest humorists.

Mr. DeMille and the whole Paramount organization are naturally tickled to death that Urson and Iribe have rung the bell so resoundingly with this picture, their first effort together. Iribe is a Parisian, a well known French artist; the Frenchy touches in the action and the lavishness of gowns and settings are his work. Urson is an experienced director, having made several Wallace Reid pictures and others. And, of course, the guiding hand of Cecil B. DeMille shows throughout the picture.

Have your Paramount exchange screen CHANGING HUSBANDS for you and prove the picture is as good as the title.

Newspaper Opinions

"The Bedroom Window"—Famous Rivoli

AMERICAN—Ethel Wales steals the picture from May McAvoy, Malcolm MacGregor, Ricardo Cortez, and all the rest of the high paid favorites.

Those who like a good mystery story will find "The Bedroom Window" to their liking.

DAILY NEWS—Ethel Wales probably is the most interesting figure in a fine cast.

Ricardo Cortez, Robert Edeson, Charles Ogle and Medea Radzina complete a cast of good proportions. If you like the more or less mysterious drama, you'll be entertained by the picture. I was.

EVENING JOURNAL—It's a corking good mystery story, with a good cast, thrilling suspense, and logical conclusion.

It's impossible not to enjoy it, because it's that kind of a picture.

George Fawcett, Robert Edeson and the others do some very good acting.

EVENING WORLD—In so far as we can see "The Bedroom Window" should have a shutter. There is positively no excuse for any film of this sort being on the screen.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—If it is intended as a burlesque on mystery dramas, then we shall not apologize anyway; for it's a mighty poor burlesque which arises without ever allowing itself to be recognized.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—a neatly woven mystery story is unfolded, and credit must be given to Clara Beranger, the author, and to William De Mille, who directed the picture, for having made an interesting production.

While "The Bedroom Window" is not William De Mille at his best, it is a dignified offering, in good taste at all times, which is one characteristic of this director's type of work.

POST—The plot is logical, not implausible, and is worked out clearly and with a minimum of tricks and padding.

SUN—And if you like the "Who shot the character actor?" movies this De Mille photoplay will hold your interest. For it is one of the very best of its kind. Indeed, William De Mille is a fine and finished director. For he has taken a somewhat obvious detective tale that resembles a few of those pun by Mary Roberts Rinehart and nearly all of those of Carolyn Wells, and has shined it up with the polish of his skill—so that the final product impresses one as being quite intriguing.

TIMES—There is no doubt that this picture will keep a lot of persons guessing. They may go and be sure of a good entertainment and seeing a well-directed production, and what fault there is with it lies in the strained effort Miss Beranger herself makes in the story to maintain the mystery.

This is a reproduction which is a splendid entertainment, but we have seen better mystery stories.

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—A corking mystery screen play.

The mystery is sustained for almost an hour of the 70 minutes the picture runs.

WORLD—Here is a mystery melodrama which prods you eternally with: "Who committed the murder?" It is extremely well woven and intriguing "Who?" stuff.

After seeing "The Bedroom Window" we can say and, as a matter of fact we do say, that it is worthy of a decent title.

"The Shooting of Dan McGrew"—Metro-Goldwyn Capitol

AMERICAN—a delightful subject for a poet, but somewhat illogical material for a motion picture.

With Barbara La Marr and Percy Marmont and Lew Cody we have a cast that will get almost anyone into the motion picture theatre whether it be in New York or in the wilds of New Jersey.

The picture will be interesting to those who like Robert Service's poems.

DAILY NEWS—The cross-country travel doesn't help to bolster a flimsy and obvious plot. The sets are convincing, however, and Barbara La Marr earns her every closeup with some real dancing, real tears and real acting.

You'd never know rough old Dan McGrew. He's been sandpapered and polished into a regular celluloid sheik. Lew Cody is Dan.

The Alaskan sequence strikes a true and tragic note. The swing of the Robert W. Service poem helps speed the plot.

EVENING WORLD—Those who helped along in the "shooting" are Barbara La Marr, who plays "the lady known as Lou"; Lew Cody, who plays the title role; Percy Marmont and George Seigmann, the latter by far the best in the cast.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—In the last reel the actual lines of the Service poem are utilized as titles and here the story becomes very interesting. It is our idea that "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" would have been an artistic triumph in one reel.

Those who never have seen Miss La Marr act better nor look so well. Lew Cody is the Dangerous Dan McGrew and Mae Busch does excellent work. Percy Marmont does very fine things.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—this is a melodrama, only this differs from "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model" and photo-plays of that ilk in that it is presented seriously and played for sympathy.

POST—It is full of wheezes and creaks and the most painful of them all is Barbara. The good old poem has been butchered to make a Sawyer-Lubin holiday, and, as if that weren't enough, we are shown some seven reels of Barbara as a dancer (bad), as a heart broken mother (worse and funnier), and as Virtue (worst and almost impossible to endure).

SUN—makes a corking melodrama—a melodrama that is choked so full of lokum that it almost sinks, but which, nevertheless, is alive and kicking every instant.

TELEGRAM—But once the play had swung into the action of Service's own conception, events move consistently and would have moved thrillingly had not the musical director attempted too much realism by providing a ditty on the piano at the time the stranger was holding the dance hall inmates in a spell by his piano playing.

TIMES—Robert W. Service's poem is far better than on the screen. Those who have enthused over Mr. Service's works will find this picture a pretty tame effort. In stretches it is quite amateurish, and the only capable acting in it is Lew Cody's impersonation of the illustrious Dan.

Clarence Badger has endeavored to obtain mere box-office effects in most of the sequences, and it is doubtful whether such ideas will be appreciated event in the smaller communities.

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—The picture is rather a slow moving affair and the performance of Barbara La Marr is far from being inspired.

With the title "The Shooting of Dan McGrew" there should be considerable box office draft to the picture, but the picture itself does not stand out as great entertainment.

WORLD—It is at once garish and defiant and incorrigible. And still it has a fleeting something very like beauty. It is a picture that will leave the asthete quite cold in the end, but it will have thrilled him at least twice.

Barbara La Marr is beautiful. It is difficult to understand why she continues to go in for the disrobing scheme.

GERMANY

By DANNY

Those interested in the forward end of the business. Seem hopeful. Particularly as to Central Europe. Following Mille's retirement in France. We think this opens the way for a real settlement of Central European affairs. Which may mean the opening up of business in a real way.

The Dawes plan of settlement is expected. And if this works out it will mean business in Central Europe. Belgium. And this will automatically open the door to Russia. Far sighted are planning for the opening of Russia. And have been for some time. This is particularly promising territory.

Meanwhile reports from England continue that the price cutting tactics of several American companies is having a disastrous effect on English distributors. And producers. Price cutting is never a really valuable way of doing business. You may put the other fellow out. If you can stand the gaff long enough. But usually it demoralizes a market. For a long time, anyway.

The usual summer invasion of Europe by picture people seems promising. Loew, Niblo, Bob Rubin, Neilan, Liche Sweet and others sail tomorrow. Carl Laemmle leaves in a few weeks. So do Nathan Burrows and Dr. A. H. Gianinni of the River. Zukor will not go this summer. Perhaps next year. Lasky is in London now, conferring with Barrie. Over "Peter" Bill Fox is so busy preparing for next season. He may not get Jules Mastbaum is there now. Blumenthal sails soon. And there is a lot more.

Note the Allied group plan to extend. Also that the MPTO have set their financial plan. Hardly room enough in this country. For two national exhibitor organizations. This, regardless of what anyone else says. Only logical thing for them to do is to get together. Then they can get somewhere.

Files New Action

Unexpected Move Made by Trans-Canada Theaters Against A. J. Small Estate

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Toronto—A new and surprising situation has developed in the legal entanglements which followed the mysterious disappearance of Ambrose J. Small, in the issuing of a writ at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, by shareholders of Trans-Canada Theaters, Ltd., against Small, or his estate, for a cancellation of the agreement of sale of Small's circuit in Ontario to the Trans-Canada company and for the return to the company of the $2,000,000, which was paid by the plaintiff company for the Small properties. The shareholders of the company also ask for damages.

The claim is made in the writ that "the execution and carrying out of the contract was obtained by the fraudulent misrepresentations and concealments of A. J. Small in fundamental matters" and it is also alleged that there was deceit in connection with the formation and consummation of contracts. The writ is issued by Percy W. Abbott, James Ramsay, John Gillespie and C. C. Tatham in behalf of themselves and all other shareholders. The Trans-Canada company entered into the contract with Small in November, 1919 and an initial payment of $1,000,000 was paid

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Morhead City, N. C.—The M. P. T. O. of North Carolina convention, which has just closed here, was in effect a meeting of the Allied group of exhibitor organizations, rather than just a meeting of the state organization. A divided house must fall. Issuing statements of work done isn't sufficient. The big point is the work must be done.

The latest to be raved about: Marshall Neilan's "Tess of the D'Urberville's." Which the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executives have just screened. The tip off: it's a real picture. Even talking of putting it on Broadway for a run.

Newspaper Opinions

"$20 A Week"—Selznick Strand

AMERICAN—* * * one of those delightful, impossible, business stories, with the family fortune being saved at the psychological moment. It is better than some of these tales, for it has a little comedy. * * *

DAILY NEWS—* * * Amusing, exciting, everything a picture should be.

Mr. Arliss has something that no one else brings to the screen—a sense of the ridiculous. * * *

* * * Ronald Colman * * * is likeable without being pretty. * * *

Don't miss this picture. It's good. Yes it's even worth while waiting in line to see.

EVENING WORLD—* * * Mr. Arliss, in our estimation one of the best actors on stage or screen, has the role of a retired steel millionaire who is cursed with a spendthrift son, whom he cuts off with $20 a week spending money, a few days before the boy contemplates marriage. * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * a picture with George Arliss in it could not fail to hold something of interest. * * *

It is an amusing and rather ingenious tale * * *

TIMES—Being a farce-comedy George Arliss's latest pictorial vehicle, "$20 a Week," is hardly a production to compare either with "Disraeli," or "The Green Goddess." Nevertheless this new film affords a splendid light entertainment. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * and while it is a rather anemic comedy, it boasts of one of the finest male actors we have in this country. George Arliss is an actor who is pleasant to watch. He never irritates you and his poise and repose go a long way toward making this film possible. * * *

POST—This picture, * * * starts off with a rush, and you are all set for something really entertaining when—bing! something busts. For a couple of reels, while the plot is being introduced, it's mighty interesting and full of promises for some real fun later on. But * * * it starts going round and round in the same groove, with nothing happening in such large quantities that the sub-titles really seem humorous. * * *

WORLD—* * * So the burden of the piece falls on Mr. Arliss, who makes it worth while solely because he is always worth watching. For, of all the actors who occasionally venture from the footlights to the films, he emerges with the most vivid representations of his bland and sardonic personality.

"The Reckless Age"—Universal Rialto

AMERICAN—* * * Denny does his best, but Miss Dwyer does not give him the support and help that Laura La Plant had ready and waiting for him in "Sporting Youth." * * *

* * * some of the exteriors are very pretty * * * I have seen much worse pictures than "The Reckless Age," although not made by Carl Laemmle in 1923-24.

DAILY NEWS—The day of Denny is here. * * * Denny starts his starring career in a Wally Reid type of picture the fans will hold dear. He's like Wally as we remember him, big and clean and blond, with the most knowing grin in the world. * * *

* * * Very light and amusing.

EVENING JOURNAL—The theme of Earl Derr Bigger's story, * * * has splendid comedy possibilities, and Denny does his best to bring them out. Reginald is an excellent actor, and he relieves situations that need relieving. * * * there are plenty of fights, * * *

EVENING WORLD—* * * It's a Universal Jewel—and it's twenty-two karats.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * To others "The Reckless Age" may have seemed just a fast-moving comedy, but we sat there enthralled, realizing that we were gazing at what the screen would call an "epic," or perhaps it is an "epoch." * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—Harry Pollard has evolved a comedy, which is going to prove popular with the audience. * * * one of those comedies which moves along swiftly and deftly and the result of a director's knowledge of the value of humor—the particular brand of humor dealt with in this Universal picture. * * *

POST—* * * a curious hodge-podge of mistaken identity, slapstick comedy and long-drawn-out misunderstandings which leaves you wondering what it is all about—and why.

Mr. Denny may be all very well in prize fight pictures, but he doesn't fit into this one for a cent. The main trouble with the film seems to be that everything is over-emphasized and situations that are funny for awhile are squeezed for comedy long after the last drop of humor has been extracted * * *

SUN—* * * No one concerned with the production * * * seems to take it very seriously and neither does the audience. The latter, however, chuckles congenially as it does over a clever musical comedy plot and goes happily homeward to recommend "The Reckless Age" to the Joneses next door.

TELEGRAM—Reginald Denny, * * * to us, seems about the nearest thing to a recognizable human being as the screen has starred in sometime. Ruth Dwyer is not only easy to look at but she also has a whimsically delicious way of doing the work assigned her.

TIMES—* * * This is another summer story, well suited to Mr. Denny in other respects. The other players also give a good account of themselves, especially William Austin. * * *

Ruth Dwyer acquitted herself capably as the heroine, and John Stepping played the role of father with natural effect. This is a picture we would recommend for an amusing afternoon or evening.

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * The film amuses and should prove beneficial to Denny. A half filled house at the Rialto yesterday afternoon seem satisfied.

WORLD—"The Reckless Age" is made up of plot from the Saturday Evening Post and slapstick from the Universal Film Company. * * *

Reginald Denny and Ruth Dwyer romp through this comedy with evident enjoyment.

James Cruze has completed work on "Merton of the Movies" and will next make "The Cafe of Fallen Angels".

Monsieur Beaucaire

I can think of only one picture anywhere in sight this fall in the whole film business that will get the money for you that Rudolph Valentino in MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE will. And that's THE COVERED WAGON.

I've just seen MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE in uncut form, in sixteen reels. And I tell you frankly that it's a shame a foot of it has to be cut, though of course it will be.

There are only three $2 road shows that I know of—and I've seen them all—that can touch MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. And Paramount is not going to road show it! We're giving it to you in THE FAMOUS FORTY to knock your cash and attendance records skyhigh with on August 18th.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE is the most beautiful picture ever made; I know you and your audiences are going to agree unanimously to that when you see it. The gowns and settings are of a richness never touched before.

But the picture is not only beautiful; it's box-office. The romance that flames in MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE makes former Valentino films seem like prologues. The love scenes between Valentino and Bebe Daniels, and between Valentino and Doris Kenyon—well, see them as soon as you can! The picture thrills with action as well as love. Valentino dances, fights several slashing duels, emerges triumphant from a score of exciting adventures.

Never have you been offered such a perfect set-up as MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. Pages and pages of publicity have been printed about it, heralding Valentino's return to the screen after two years and raving about the vehicle selected for his return. Harriette Underhill saw a few scenes in the making and then wrote a story in the New York Tribune urging exhibitors booking MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE to "tear down your theatres and build bigger ones, for you will never be able to accommodate the crowds otherwise." You can't pick up a newspaper or a magazine today without reading similar praise of MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. It's easily one of the three best known pictures in America.

Rudolph Valentino, Sidney Olcott, Booth Tarkington (author of the story), Forrest Halsey (scenarist), and the great cast of over a hundred principals headed by Miss Daniels, Lois Wilson, Miss Kenyon and Lowell Sherman, have done a magnificent job. MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE is another FAMOUS FORTY gilt-edged offering the public is going to fill your pocketbook to see!

Happiness in

No. 389—Straight from the Shoulder
Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation.

ONE of the best advertising slogans I ever saw is "Happiness in every box," used by the United Candy Stores.

I wish I had thought of it first, and had applied it to Universal pictures—because there's happiness in every Universal picture, happiness in one form or another.

A critic who sees practically every picture made said to me recently, "You have the happy faculty of getting a spirit of optimism into your Universal pictures. That's a great thing if you can keep it up. It spreads happiness all over the world. It associates the name Universal with happiness or optimism. It surrounds Universal with an atmosphere of success and other good things."

There's no mystery behind the reason for this. Universal is a happy family. Thousands of exhibitors belong to this family as well as thousands of Universal workers in Universal studios, Universal laboratories, Universal exchanges, the Universal home office and all other centers of Universal activity.

This is a great spirit to have in an organization whose efforts are centered on giving entertainment to the world. It is a spirit which breathes itself into its product and into its method of handling that product.

Universal employees are mighty proud of the fact that they are working for a happiness concern. They are glad they never have to apologize for their company. They glory in the fact that Universal is known all over the wide wide world for scrupulously clean, fair dealing.

I'll never forget what one of our newly employed salesmen said to me one day. "I've worked many years in the picture business, Mr. Laemmle" he remarked, "but I never was thoroughly happy in my work until I landed with Universal. I attribute this to the fact that when I tell an exhibitor what company I am working for, the hard look in his eyes softens and he seems glad to see me."

We have our troubles in Universal, of course. But the spirit of overcoming troubles is the same Universal spirit which infuses happiness and the spirit of success into our pictures. It is the same spirit of optimism which the critic, mentioned above, was thinking of.

Clean pictures with a kick. Happiness pictures with a punch. Optimism in place of cynicism. Universal family pride peppered with Universal pep. That's the program and the ideal of the Universal happy family. That's the glow which lights up your screen when you show Universal pictures.

Millions upon millions of fans love Universal pictures. That's because the human mind just naturally turns to things which are bright, clean, wholesome, happy, hopeful, optimistic and good.

I'm glad you're a member of the Universal family, with happiness in every heart!

M. Sagal of New Haven.

A Committee of Labor Union officials headed by Peter J. Brady presented the case of the Allied Printing Trade counsel of Boston against the Hays organization stating that it was their desire to have the union label placed on all printed matter issued by the producing interests. In this connection they said that certain promises had been made to them which were not kept. They requested that the Theater Owners ask for the union label on all printed matter sent to their theaters.

Next Week on Broadway

The feature at the Capitol next week will be Rupert Hughes' "True as Steel." The Rialto will house "The Guilty One," with "Tiger Love" at the Rivoli. "The White Moth" will play the Strand.

Loew On "Ben Hur"

Prior to sailing today on the Leviathan for Rome, Marcus Loew issued a statement, saying: "In case we select Fred Niblo to take charge of the stupendous production of "Ben Hur", due to the illness of Charles Brabin, it will be because he has never yet produced a picture that wasn't a great success". Loew said further that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer would produce over 60 features before next Spring.

He announced that Marshall Neilan, who sailed last night on the Olympic with his wife, Blanche Sweet, would produce "The Sporting Venus" on a foreign location.

Buchowetzki Going Abroad

Griffith to Make Seven Reeler

Following his usual custom, D. W. Griffith is planning making a seven reeler—not a big special. He may make another of these before he starts on his next "big" production.

New Color Process Shown

Poor projection did not aid in the initial showing in this country of the Friese-Greene color process, which, as noted, was presented in London recently. The showing occurred yesterday at Wurlitzer Hall and was marred by poor projection.

The photography appears very soft, although some of the shots were not clear cut. This, however, may have been due to the projection.

It is reported that the new process is much more economical than several of the American color processes.

Nick Schenck has closed with Famous for a split of the "Famous Forty."

Rewards

Lots of executives might bear this in mind: there's something more coming to loyal, old employees than just money. For instance: there's John Kunsky, of Detroit. Now when it comes to selling John a picture—well, he's been called worse than hard boiled. But that didn't stop him—nary a stop—in sending two of his old employees, Tom Moule, and "Mike" Schoenherr, managers of his big houses, to the Coast for a six weeks' trip. Took along the Missus. And each had $1,000 in cash—also a gift—to see that they wanted for nothing. That's something like appreciation.

RECALLING OLD TIMES

The discussion. As to whether or not Charles Brabin. For some reason or the other. Might be relieved. Of making "Ben Hur." Lead old timers to recall when Herb Brenon was making "A Daughter of the Gods" for Fox Film. Down in Jamaica. Brenon and his company had been away a long time. Fox wasn't happy. So he sent Gordon Edwards down to Jamaica to look things over. And if necessary send Brenon back. The old timers recall that Edwards went. Looked things over. Reported back

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

May 10, 1924

The Play, From The Picture Angle

—By Robert G. Lisman—

“COBRA,” a drama by Martin Brown, presented by L. Lawrence Weber at the Hudson Theatre on April 22, 1924.

Without doubt, this is the most suitable product for pictures that the stage has offered this year. The “Cobra” of the title refers to the “tiger tiger” in the hero. He successfully suppresses his baser instincts and in the end wins the true woman, but before this happens, he has to battle with an accomplished vampire who is the wife of his best friend. The battle within the man between loyalty and his carnal instinct is exceptionally well done. This is essentially a triangle play with, in this case, a fourth angle.

This property can be made into a very human, fast-moving, gripping picture without necessarily being an extravagant production. The burning of a large hotel should be the most expensive item.

Mr. Louis Calhern, who has done a good many character bits in pictures, scored a personal hit on the stage in this play.

Lisman is right! The finest piece of picture property offered, not only this year, but for many years!

The picture rights on this wonderful play now for sale—price $250,000.

Will guarantee to refund part of this purchase price if the producer does not make $250,000 net profit.

A good 50-50 proposition for any “live wire” producer!

All offers will be held in strict confidence.

Rewards

to Fox that Brenon was the man to finish the job. And Brenon did. You all remember what an outstanding success it was, too, don't you?

SUNNY SOUTH MOVING

In the picture producing line. Seems strange to hear of pictures being made in New Orleans. But Leslie Peacock—Captain, if you please—has gone and done it. And made one called "Prohibition" with New Orleans money back of it. Been around town lately. Looking for two directors. Expects to build a studio there this summer. Moving along.

BURLINGHAM

We're going to miss Fred Burlingham. Who was called home a few days ago. One of the unusual figures of the business. With his long beard, and his soft manner. Who loved to go to out of the way places for shots. Burlingham was formerly a newspaper man. At one time he worked for James Gordon Bennett on the Paris Herald. That is he did—until Bennett noticed that Burlingham was going about Paris wearing sandals. That was too much for the aristocratic Bennett. He fired Burlingham on the spot. Because "Burly" wouldn't buy regulation shoes.

HARD STUFF—BUT IT WAS WATER

Charley Chaplin hasn't been in print lately. But he broke in a day or so ago in an unusual manner. The "dry" squad of Los Angeles got after him. Could not understand why he had so much of his embopoint. And Lou is sort of looking into a them and also a queer looking boiler, to soften the waters of Beverly Hills.

What a chance for Will Rogers to pull a wheeze?

SHOPPING

Lou Remy is in town. You'd hardly know him—he has lost so much of his em bopoint. And Lou is sort of looking into a new job. But in no hurry. "I'm just shopping around," said Lou, "just as the fans do. And I'll sorta pick the one I like best."

WEIGHT LOSERS

That lost weight of Remy's—they won't call him "Uncle" anymore; he looks so youthful—is putting him in company with a lot of picture folk. Nathan Burkan has been taking a diet; looks 15 pounds off; Herbert Yates has lost a lot more. Don't look so good. And yours truly is losing it at the rate of 10 pounds a month. Yep, we're all dieting. And cussing. They go together.

"GREED"

They're still cutting it—and at it—at the Culver City headquarters of the recent combine. They had a tough job getting it down. It was so big to start with. But finally they got it to 24 reels. After which Von Stroheim said if they took any more out he wouldn't know his picture. But they kept at it. And it looks now as if it will be released soon.

That's the only trouble with Von's pictures. He loves them so much; works in so much fine details, that when it comes to getting them down to a showable basis there is trouble. All of which runs the cost up a-plenty. And the worst of it is that it doesn't show. "Greed" must have cost somewhere around a half million—or more.

TALKING TO AUTHORS

Florence Strauss of First National. By the way—don't overlook her article in the Director's Issue next Saturday—talking to the Authors' Club in Pittsburgh. Spoke on the romance of hunting motion picture material. She could tell a lot. Not only of the romance in seeking. But of the fireworks which burst loose—when a turned down, rejected, dog of a story blossoms into a hit—when made by some other company.

But she talked. And they liked it. And they want her to come back. Smart woman.

A WARNING

Writes Anna Aiken Patterson in the "Weekly Film Review" of Atlanta, under the caption "The Public Must Benefit" and talking of the admission tax. Says in part:

"From some quarters none too friendly to the industry it has been hinted that exhibitors will not change their scale of prices when the repeal becomes effective; or if they do reduce the price of admission in an amount commensurate with the sum represented by the federal admission tax, they will take occasion at a later date to raise those prices.

"Such a move would be disastrous. Not only would it be unfair to cheat the public out of the benefit that the repeal is intended to grant them, but it would break faith with powerful factors who have helped the exhibitors make this fight, and who have been in good faith when they advocated the removal of the admission tax as a relief measure for the masses who find in the motion picture theater their chief diversion."

GETTING A CHANCE

Note that Mike Levee is giving Irving Cummings a chance. It's about time that Cummings got somewhere. It's really surprising that Laemmle let him out of Universal. Because Cummings is one mighty good director. And he's proven it. In lots of ways. He has made a lot of pictures on his own. Which means he knows economy backwards. And any time Cummings spends money you see it on the screen. All of which may not be important. But it surely does count. When the studio audit is the subject of discussion. And it's something a lot of directors shy at.

THAT TAXI

Talking of economy. Have you heard the story of Harry Rapp? And the taxi used in his production "Broadway After Dark"? Which Monta Bell directed. No? Well, the story goes that when Bell shot the scene of the theatrical notables leaving the Astor. He used a taxi—a real honest to meter taxi. At regular rates. Because he couldn't get a special rate. The taxi clicked all through the two nights of the shooting. So when Bell said "cut" and the sequence was over Rapp rushed forward. "All through Bell" he asked. "Yes," said the director. "Sure"? asked Rapp. "Certain," said Bell after thinking a moment. "All right," said Harry, "excuse me a minute; I want to pay that taxi man and get him away. He's made me sick sticking around here at 10 cents for every four minutes."

WHOSE WHO

Famous is being sued. Out on the Coast. Dr. Cecil Reynolds wants $2500 for professional services. They were anxious to get things just so—medically technical so to speak—for "The Breaking Point." On the other hand Lasky repudiates the bill. And the idea. And wants a like amount from the Doctor. Evidently for teaching him how to make motion pictures. Which reminds: o when George D. Baker shot a picture. And a critic declared the High Church wedding ceremony was not technically correct. George insisted it was. Said he had a Bishop of the church to look it over. In rehearsal. "Don't care," said the critic, "I know it was wrong. I was married in that Church. Nothing happened at my own wedding as you had in the picture." That critic overlooked that he had not paid a Bishop's price for the ceremony. He had just a plain, ordinary Minister. And there's always a difference.

"The Bedroom Window"

Paramount

As a Whole... MYSTERY DRAMA THAT PUZZLES. HAS WELL DEVELOPED PLOT THAT IS BAFFLING AND NOT LIKELY TO BE SOLVED BEFORE THE DIRECTOR GETS TO IT.

Cast... Wholly appropriate. Ethel Wales scores a personal triumph in the role of freak writer of detective stories. Handles characterization splendidly and puts over comedy business in fine style. May McAvoy pretty but has little to do. Robert Edeson, George Fawcett, Charles Ogle, Medea Razina, Malcolm MacGregor and Ricardo Cortez all satisfactory in their respective roles.

Type of Story... Mystery drama. For those who like corking good mystery stories Clara Beranger has written something that will keep them guessing for about six reels and it only takes about a half a reel for the denouncement. Plus an intriguing plot you have the careful handling of it by William DeMille who has managed to hold the interest, keeps the solution entirely out of sight and at the same time maintains a logical development. Even when the guilt appears to be setting upon one person, the spectator isn't inclined to suspect that particular character. One of the especially good features of this mystery theme is the excellent comedy by-play woven in. The character of the freak detective story writer, played so capably by Ethel Wales, affords plenty of good laughs. A rich girl's father is murdered. Two of her suitors are suspected and the evidence so strong against one that he is held. The girl's aunt, a fiction writer, decides to solve the case herself. Her method supplies both good mystery touches and comedy bits that bring the plot to an interesting conclusion and proves the family lawyer as the murderer.

Box Office Angle... The title is apt to be misleading unless you make clear what the story is about. "The Bedroom Window" is first rate mystery drama. Don't let them see this one backwards.

Exploitation... Properly played up with posters and ad sheets you can make sure that they get the right idea of the picture and don't misconstrue the title. Famous' press sheet contains plenty of fine suggestions with catchlines. Make use of these. You might ask your patrons not to disclose the plot for the benefit of those who will see the picture after them. Talk about the good cast using the names of the more prominent players. Mention the comedy angle and show a trailer including Ethel Wales in one of her comedy moments.

Direction .. William De Mille; very good.

Author ..... Clara Beranger
Scenario ..... Clara Beranger

"There's Millions In It"

Film Booking Offices

As a Whole... CONSTRUCTION A BIT FAULTY BUT PLOT HAS ACTION AND SUSPENSE THAT SHOULD MAKE IT ATTRACTIVE ENTERTAINMENT FOR MAJORITY OF PICTURE FANS.

Cast... Players not well known to audiences in this country. Fulfill requirements nicely and are usually well suited to respective roles. Clive Brook successful in putting over dual role and Catherine Calvert good but not very important in female lead. Cast includes long list of names but they won't mean a great deal to patrons here.

Type of Story... Melodrama. "There's Millions In It", an English production, is an adaptation of the Saturday Evening Post story, "Men of Affairs", by Roland Pertwee. It offers a rather fast moving plot with enough good action incident and suspense to make it attractive for those who like entertainment of an exciting type. Here's a case of wits battling against wits with hero just one step ahead of villain and his band all the way through. There's a radium field for the object of fight, a desperate band of connivers who plan to get in on the deal, and a clever hero who is really solely entitled to it and doesn't intend to have any trespassers take it away from him. The plan whereby hero avoids his enemies includes having a man double for him, the latter being kidnapped by the enemies who think they have hero. In the meantime the man they want is on his way to secure his concession. The band learns eventually that they have been duped and there's an exciting sequence in which they pursue hero. There's some good thrills in this especially where the zeppelin catches fire in mid air and the occupants are forced to take to parachutes. Here's a corking good thrill and a new one. It's well done and furnishes a first rate thrill climax.

Box Office Angle... An average picture but with a little boosting should bring them in and satisfy, particularly where you know they like action, thrills and suspense and won't pick on it for faulty logic, etc. Excellent thrill in zeppelin fire that can be talked up.

Exploitation... In your announcements and ads talk about the climax thrill. This is the picture's best angle for exploitation. It's out of the ordinary. Say: "See a zeppelin catch fire in mid air. See the passengers forced to descend in parachutes. These and more thrills in 'There's Millions In It'". A trailer of this part will get their attention and likely bring them back. No names to use but Clive Brook deserves mention for a good performance. They may remember Catherine Calvert's name.

Jack Hoxie in
"The Back Trail"

Universal

As a Whole... FINE LOCATIONS THE CHIEF POINT OF INTEREST ALTHOUGH THERE'S SOME GOOD ACTION IN THE WAY OF FAST RIDING AND RESCUES. PLOT OBVIOUS FROM THE START.

Star... Best when he's in action. Too much given to posing and accorded far too many close-ups in which to do it.

Cast... Includes regulation types of villains, cowhands, sheriffs, etc. Eugenia Gilbert suitable lead. Others Claude Payton, Billy Lester, Wm. McCall, Buck Connors, Pat Harmon.

Type of Story... Western. A regulation western plot formula with the fairly conventional situation of switched identities is the basis of "The Back Trail", the latest Hoxie vehicle, one that provides the star with fairly appropriate opportunities for action, riding and his usual line of stunts, but otherwise isn't especially strong on entertainment. Director Smith seems to have given far more attention to scenery and rather neglected the development of his story. He makes little effort to inject suspense and includes any number of touches that furnish direct leads in the way of giving away the plot. You know right from the start that hero, who is suffering from shell shock, is not the man they try to tell him he is. The presence of a mysterious, un-introduced character readily supplies the missing link and you don't have to think hard to figure out that the mysterious one is the real heir to the ranch. But villain hits upon the idea of presenting the shell shocked hero as the heir with the hope of collecting half the fortune when the estate is settled. Of course the real heir appears in time to clear hero and there's a heroine on hand for the usual clinch ending.

Box Office Angle... Average western. Where you know action and western villainy appeals to your patrons you won't have to worry much about the story not being original. Action will get it over.

Exploitation... No unusual angles for you to play up except that you might talk about the attractive locations. Picturesque ranch views, with the snow capped mountains in the distance, and excellent photography gives the film good pictorial appeal. If Jack Hoxie is popular with your folks you might make special mention of his name and tell them that he performs some more daring rescues and escapes in "The Back Trail". The customary trailer of action bits might also serve to bring them back.

Direction ..... Clifford Smith; fair
Author ..... Walter J. Coburn
Scenario ..... Isidore Bernstein
Cameraman ..... Harry Neumann
Photography ..... Very good
Locale ..... West
Length ..... 4,615 feet.

"The White Moth"

Producer: M. C. Levee.
 Distributor: First National.

As a Whole... BIZARRE, LAVISH AND WITH DOMINANT SEX APPEAL. A LIKELY BOX OFFICE ATTRACTION ESPECIALLY WHERE THEY WANT A BIG SHOW FOR THEIR MONEY.

Cast... Barbara LaMarr does a lot of vamping in a lot of new poses. Not as good in this as in previous pictures. Too much given to "making faces", particularly in the great quantity of close-ups. Conway Tearle the usual lover.

Type of Story... Dramatic romance. "The White Moth" is the type of entertainment that offers a long thrill in the way of dazzling, bizarre settings and a general atmosphere of glamor that evidently cost no small penny to provide. Maurice Tourneur hasn't spared any effort to make it a brilliant spectacle from start to finish. A Persian theatrical background with the vamping Barbara working her hardest and Conway Tearle, Charles de Roche and Ben Lyon fit subjects for her wiles, is the keynote of interest in "The White Moth". The story rates about zero both in substance and development. It deals with the little choir singer who becomes a famous dancer in Paris, vamps the fiance of a rich American girl and is in turn vamped by his brother who would save the engaged young man from the dancer by marrying her himself. There's a lot of nearly-naughty business in the suppressed longings of the poor moth when she finds she is a "bartered bride". Naturally Teare cannot resist her charms and eventually he admits he loves her. Maurice Tourneur hasn't stinted on display but some of his efforts concentrated upon better story development and less attention to unimportant, and at times distasteful bits of business, would have improved the plot. He has also allowed Barbara LaMarr to overact outrageously for long stretches at a time.

Box Office Angle... Lavish production, Barbara LaMarr, Persian theatrical atmosphere and Conway Tearle as the lover—these are high lights that will make this a successful box office number in the majority of communities.

Exploitation... You know best how to tackle a picture of this kind. Where you know a bizarre, spectacular production will get them, go after it from this angle. If Barbara LaMarr is a drawing card in your house boost her name and recall her previous productions. Use stills extensively and show a trailer, well in advance, containing some of the more elaborate settings, such as the masque ball scene. Conway Tearle's name can also be used in your announcements.

Direction... Maurice Tourneur; elegant presentation.
Author ..... Izola Forrester
Scenario ..... Albert Shelby LeVino

"A LOST LADY"

By WILLA CATHER

In the words of Zoe Akins, celebrated writer, "A LOST LADY is a graceful, fascinating, sad tale of a man's dignity and a lovely woman's stooping to folly." John Farrar, editor of The Bookman, calls it "a character study of strength and beauty."

These two critics, famous in the world of fiction, have well expressed the views which actuated Warner Bros. in selecting "A LOST LADY" as one of its big TWENTY for the year 1924-25. A character study of strength and beauty, invested with action, intrigue and the ever popular touch of sex interest, give to "A LOST LADY" everything that is desirable for a screen play.

Set in an atmosphere as individual and full of color as that of the old manor-houses in Russian novels, this Warner "Classic" unfolds an intensely interesting romance of the old West; not the West of pioneer days, but of the railroad aristocracy that grew up when the great transcontinental lines were being built across the plains.

A whole epoch lives again in the group of people so wonderfully pictured in this story of an incorruptible man and the beautiful woman who was his wife, and of the house in which their moving drama took place. It's a powerful red-blooded story, great in its appeal to all classes.

Richard Talmadge in
"In Fast Company"

Producer: Carlos Productions.
Distributor: Truart—State Rights.

As a Whole... STUNT STAR SUPPLIES ADMIRERS WITH SOME NEW FAST AND FURIOUS ACTION. STORY INCIDENTAL. MOST IMPORTANT OF ITSELF, BUT PROVIDES THE RIGHT OPPORTUNITIES.

Star... Is kept pretty busy. Offers great variety of action that includes his usual thrilling rescues, escapes and a prize fight that has laughs as well as action.

Cast... Mildred Harris attractive lead. Nicely photographed and pretty in close-ups. Gives star good support. Sheldon Lewis typical villain. Others Douglas Gerrard, Snitz Edwards, Lydia Yeamans Titus, Jack Herrick, Charles Clary.

Type of Story... Comedy stunt picture. A logical plot and substantial situations are not really to be expected in these action pictures that rely on a series of thrills and breath-taking stunts to entertain. "In Fast Company", by Alfred Cohn, isn't important as far as the actual plot is concerned but it affords a long line-up of thoroughly appropriate opportunities for Talmadge to "do his stuff" and he does it well. It's one of those all-hero things with the star knocking 'em dead from start to finish. Not one gets away from him. The film starts off with the staging of a wild party with which hero celebrates his expulsion from college. Then the excitement commences. Hero's father gives him a hundred dollar bill and tells him not to come back until he has made good at something. The bill blows out of his hand, thus providing a grand episode with Talmadge risking his neck in every foot of film. Comes in rapid succession, a prize fight, several daring escapes from the villain's crew, rescue of the girl, and auto dash over the cliff, another rescue and so on along the line until the usual clinch and the announcement that hero and the girl had already been married.

Box Office Angle... Truart presents a press sheet with some facts regarding Talmadge's stunts. These should make interesting reading for your folks and offer good advertising for his latest offering. You can promise a fast and thrilling feature in "In Fast Company". A trailer of any of the star's thrillers should also serve to bring them back. Where you have been showing recent Richard Talmadge features to satisfaction, it shouldn't be difficult to get this one over. If anything, it's even faster than his previous offerings.

Direction James W. Horne; adequate.
Author ..... Alfred A. Cohn
Scenario ..... Garret Elsdon Fort
Cameraman ..... Wm. Marshall
Photography ..... All right
Locale ..... California
Length ..... 5,411 feet.

Charles Jones in "Western Luck"

As a Whole... JONES OFFERS GOOD ACTION PICTURE THAT WILL PLEASE HIS ADMIRERS AND THOSE WHO DON'T TIRE OF SEEING HEROES OUTWIT BANDS OF VILLAINS IN GLORIOUS FASHION.

Star... Is kept pretty busy playing hero and saving the old ranch from being taken over because the option is about to expire and his old father can't pay up. Gives star usual opportunities.

Cast... Regulation types. Beatrice Burnham, lead; not important. Others Pat Hartigan, Tom Lingham, J. Farrell McDonald, Edith Rennie, Bruce Gordon.

Type of Story... Western. There's not much out of the ordinary in the plot but as long as it supplies the sort of action, stunts and thrills that folks expect in a western, and like, it doesn't matter very much that "Western Luck" doesn't boast of originality. It moves along at a fast pace and there's continuous action and thrills to keep the spectator's interest alive. There isn't much suspense and the few bits that are injected really don't provide any hair-raising moments because they are too old. That old timer, the hero-villain fight on the cliff, is too familiar to cause much excitement. The plot deals with the separation of two boys in infancy. One is reared by a ranch owner while the other becomes a no-account when the father finds wealth. It happens that the no-account becomes involved in a deal to cheat the rancher out of his property and at the same time double-cross his father. How the son, reared by the rancher, foils the scheme makes up the action bits. Naturally it develops into a fairly exciting climax with brother fighting against brother and the relationship finally becoming known and a happy reunion following.

Box Office Angle... Average western. You know best how you can use it. Where they are satisfied with a picture that gives them action and thrills in the way of fast riding, stunts, fights, rescues, etc. You can figure this one to please as well as any.

Exploitation... You might play this up by telling of the two brothers, separated when babies, and fighting against each other later on and not knowing that they were brothers. Show a trailer of the fire scene in the opening reel and some shots of Jones' rescue stunts. Use the star's name prominently, promising them that he lives up to his past performances and offers good thrills for their pleasure. There are no other names in the cast that you can use to interest them.

Direction ..... George Beranger; all right.
Author ..... Robert Lee
Scenario ..... Robert Lee
Cameraman ..... Joseph Brotherton
Photography ..... Satisfactory
Locale ..... The West
Length ..... 5,020 feet

"Those Who Dance"

Producer: Thos. H. Ince.
Distributor: First National.

As a Whole... UP-TO-THE-MINUTE, ABSORBING CROOK MELODRAMA THAT GRIPS FROM START TO FINISH. HAS FINE PLOT, WELL WORKED OUT AND WITH A CLIMAX THAT HAS KNOCK-OUT SUSPENSE.

Cast... Made for the parts. Couldn't be better suited to individual roles. Bessie Love great as the "dizzy" wife of the bootlegger, played especially well by Mathew Betz. Robert Agnew good as the innocent country kid; Blanche Sweet contributes excellent acting bit in latter reels. Warner Baxter fine, particularly in impersonation of notorious crook. His makeup great. Others unimportant.

Type of Story... Crook melodrama. Thomas H. Ince may, or may not, have intended his latest production as an aid to prohibition enforcement, but whether he did or not, there's enough sound reasoning and actual fact in George Kibbe Turner's story to make a lot of folks sit up and take notice. The plot deals with one of the most popular industries of the time—bootlegging—and deals with it in such a way as to be not only a mighty interesting picture but also a mighty powerful warning. It puts forth some cold facts regarding the illicit business of peddling booze on the q. t., the dangers incurred by the consumer, and the risk of the distributor. Outside of containing a theme of worldwide interest, "Those Who Dance", is a genuinely absorbing crook melodrama, has been splendidly developed and has enough tense moments to keep them on the edges of the seats most of the time. A few gruesome touches in the death house are a bit too harrowing and might be eliminated. Lambert Hillier has used both his cast and his story to great advantage. He hasn't missed a chance to make the most of either. His occasional comedy relief is also very fine. A good picture every way you take it.

Box Office Angle... Should be a real money-maker. Has unlimited possibilities and should be really easy to handle. Be sure to put this one down on your list for an early date.

Exploitation... Maybe the prohibition enforcers won't like the manner in which one of their members is exposed as working in league with the bootleggers but you can fully rely on the unlimited cooperation of all anti-liquor interests to boost this picture. Have a showing for clergymen and get their support. Get local authorities to provide you with the number of deaths in your locality from wood alcohol poisoning and use the figures in your advertising. Get in back of this every way you can. Business should be good.

Direction Lambert Hillier; excellent.
Author ..... George Kibbe Turner
Scenario ..... Arthur Statter
Cameraman ..... Not credited
Photography ..... Good
Locale ..... N. Y.-N. J.
Length ..... 7,312 feet.

"Daughters of Pleasure"

Producer: B. F. Zeidman
Distributor: Principal—State Rights

As a Whole... NOT ENTIRELY NEW IN THEME BUT NICELY HANDLED AND GIVEN GOOD PRODUCTION; RUNS TOO LONG FOR AMOUNT OF MATERIAL IN STORY.

Cast... Marie Prevost well suited and capable as the "jazz daughter"; Monte Blue fulfills requirements but he's not quite the right type for the role of the rounder. Wilfred Lucas first rate as a modern father and Edythe Clapman pleasing as the old fashioned mother. Clara Bow a cute flapper vamp who hasn't much to do.

Type of Story... Comedy-drama. While "Daughters of Pleasure" is on the order of the "modern girl" stories it differs from some of its predecessors of a similar kind in that it doesn't rely on cabaret entertainment. A little of this, however, might have speeded up some slow spots on the way where director Beaudine has lingered too long on close-ups and long drawn out sequences that tend to retard the interest. But in spite of lack of display "Daughters of Pleasure" affords interesting material and presents a not wholly new but still engaging situation in connection with sudden wealth. In this case it is more the father than the daughter who steps out when oil on the old farm suddenly makes him rich. His pleasures are mostly confined to bestowing gifts on a pretty flapper while his old fashioned wife believes he is true to her. When both daughter and wife learn of the father's affair the girl decides to run off with a rounder and the mother plans to leave him. Instead a vesper service gives the girl a change of heart, she marries and mother and father make up and arrive in time for the wedding.

Box Office Angle... Should please. Contains good production values, first rate cast and up-to-date plot that will make it interesting for the average audience.

Exploitation... You might stir up added interest by talking of this as a "modern father's" picture in contrast to the current rage on "modern girl" pictures. Use catchlines such as "It isn't always the daughter who steps out. See 'Daughters of Pleasure' and you'll find another member of the family is giving mother something to worry about." The title will attract many and you might show a trailer using the introductory scenes contrasting the dinner table before and after the appearance of riches. Use stills of Marie Prevost and mention her name and Monte Blue's in your announcements.

Direction ..... William Beaudine; good but should have speeded story.
Author ..... Caleb Proctor
Scenario ..... Eve Unsell
Cameraman ..... Charles Van Enger

Conditions Bad

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

St. Louis—The continued rainy, cold, unnatural weather of the past few weeks has played havoc with box office receipts. In Southern Illinois to this is added the closing down of the coal mines with no prospects of things opening up until September or October. Every day more theaters are closing. In one county in Kentucky 18 theaters have closed for indefinite periods.

Among the houses closed recently are: People's, Terre Haute, Ind.; Lannae, Worden, Ill., two nights a week; New Grand, Frankfort Heights, Ill.; Bijou, Scottsville, Ill.; Princess, Winfield, Mo.; Moonbeam, Modesto, Ill., and the Rex, Bevier, Mo., is closing on Fridays and Saturdays.

Jack Underwood of Enterprise is back from a trip to Arkansas. He reports that the cold, wet weather has completely killed cotton and the planters will be forced to plant their crops over again. Cotton is a big factor in Arkansas.

Capitol in Church Squabble

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Vancouver, B. C.—The Capitol, Ralph Ruffner manager, figured in a lively church dispute recently, when 90 per cent of the congregation of the Centennial Methodist Church attended church service and Sunday School in the theater rather than attend the regular services. The trouble arose when the British Columbia Methodist Conference appointed a successor to the pastor, Rev. Clem Davies, against the wishes of the congregation. The latter turned to Manager Ruffner of the Capitol for assistance and he placed the theater at their disposal.

Short Subjects

"The Chase"—Hammons—Educ'l

Get This Without Fail.

Type of production . . . 2 reel special scenic

This is an outstanding short reel. Don't miss it, and don't let the other fellow get it. It was taken in the Swiss Alps and has breath-taking thrills as well as some of the most exquisite shots of snow-covered mountains ever seen. The champion ski jumper is shown in the beginning being presented with a silver cup. A wager is made between him and the rest of ski jumpers that he has beaten that in a chase over the Alps lasting from dawn to sundown he will be caught. In other words, he will be the fox, and the rest of them "the pack". He is to scatter red paper to act as a scent. The thrills are little short of marvelous. The photography is exquisite and altogether it is a wonderful hot-weather picture. Get it sure.

"Grandpa's Girl"—Christie—Educ'l

Well-Produced and Moderately Funny.

Type of production . . . 2 reel comedy

Kathleen Clifford is the featured player in this Christie Comedy. She may be remembered by some of your folks for her male impersonation work in vaudeville. "Grandpa's Girl" gives her an opportunity to do much the same sort of work. Her grandpa is going to Europe, so Kathleen gets herself expelled from boarding school so she can go with him, but he disowns her, and advertises for a grandson. Kathleen applies and is hired. But after a wild party in a cabaret where she dances and flirts with the old man, getting him into a fight, etc., he takes his grand daughter back with open arms. This has a moderate amount of laughs and is well-produced.

"Young Oldfield"—Pathe

Well Directed.

Type of production . . . 1 reel comedy

An excellent introduction is used in this. Charlie Chase is seen winning an International automobile race in which Barney Oldfield is an also-ran. Oldfield is in it himself. Chase goes over to him, pats him on the back and gives him a cigar, telling him, "Don't you care, Barney. You're a good driver too." And then he wakes up to find that he is a clerk in his mother's drug-store and the mortgage is due at twelve o'clock. His mother goes to pay it but forgets the money and Charlie borrows a racing car—that he doesn't know how to drive—and proceeds, to get there. And he does. The titles in this are worthy of mention, and the entire comedy is the best Chase has made so far.

"The Iron Man"—Universal

Parisian and American Thriller.

Plenty of action.

Type of production . . . 15 episode serial

"The Iron Man", a fifteen episode serial, features Albertini, the foreign daredevil who has appeared in several European productions, and judging from the first three episodes, he lives up to his title of "Daredevil" very well. He is cast as a reporter on a Parisian newspaper and assigned to solve the mystery of the disappearance of the niece of a wealthy American motion picture magnate. Because the Uncle has never seen his niece, and because she has become heir to a great deal of money, a band of crooks kidnap the girl and substitute Mimi, a dancer. This, briefly, is the plot, but from the moment the picture starts there is action. Fights, brawls in underworld cafes, much haste, chasing, escaping, capturing, explosions, falls, etc., abound. There is always one thing or another happening. Where you know your crowd likes this sort of excitement, you should have no trouble in pleasing them with this. Play up Albertini. He really does some good stunts. The supporting cast includes Lola Todd, as the dancer, Margeret Morris as the niece, Jack Dougherty, Jean DeBriac and others.

"His New Mama"—Mack Sennett—Pathe

Langdon Does Good Work.

Type of production . . . 2 reel comedy

Harry Langdon succeeds in being really funny especially in the first reel of this. His facial expressions are sure-fire laugh getters. Madeline Hurlock looks very well in this too, and there is a good cast including in addition to the Sennett bathing girls, Alice Day, Andy Clyde and Jack Cooper. The early sequences, in which Langdon comes down the stairs in a nightshirt with a lighted candle in his hand, to look for Santa Claus are very funny, as is the sequence in which the old man chased him out into the snow. Altogether, it is an entertaining comedy.

Northwest Notes

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Seattle—Thomas Meighan was in Seattle with his company en route north, on location for "The Alaskan," Manager Von Herberg managed to squeeze in four personal appearances stealing the star from the Chamber of Commerce, for that purpose. Big crowds attended on short notice, making splendid advance publicity for the later showing of the picture.

Guy F. Navarre, former manager of Fox here, and past president in his second term, of the Northwest Film Board of Trade, was tendered a farewell dinner by that organization, before his departure for the East. He was presented with a gold charm appropriately inscribed.

J. A. McGill, of the Liberty, Port Orchard, Wash., has secured legislation through the city council establishing a $5 a day tax on all traveling vaudeville and tent shows. This has already deflected one show from this community. Recently an exhibitor in Colville, Wash., where the tax on such attractions is negligible, closed for three weeks, rather than try to compete with such a show.

more than the number of towns for which he contracted.

The line of defense is expected to then take the tack that because Binderup had exceeded his contracted arrangements by "bicycling" in other towns, that he was refused service by various film concerns. The cross-examination secured an admission from Binderup that he was able to and had obtained service after the dates which have been brought forward at the time that he was refused further service by members of the Omaha Film Board of Trade.

On the other hand, Binderup has been successful in establishing that various exchanges were cognizant or using old tickets after July 2. Pictures in whatever towns on his circuit that he chose.

Attorneys for the defending film companies cut down the damages for which Binderup is suing to less than half of the original amount of $724,000 in an attack on his valuations and by forcing him to produce records. Binderup also admitted on the stand that he had practically been running an exchange at Minden and supplying theaters with film.

"Arizona Express"—Fox Reade's Hipp., Cleveland

NEWS—The whole thing is so improbable you'll probably laugh aloud, but after you've seen it you'll admit they packed every melodramatic trick catalogued under the name of hokum into it. You might even admit you got a thrill.

PLAIN DEALER—"The Arizona Express," now in the Hippodrome, is the wildest melodramatic nightmare we have seen in two years of picture going. It fairly froths at the mouth and tears its hair in its anxiety to be going somewhere * * *.

"Bedroom Window"—F. P.-L. Grauman's Metropolitan, Los Angeles

(Week Ending June 7)

EXAMINER—At Grauman's Metropolitan this week is a regular deep-dyed mystery yarn, "The Bedroom Window." There's a murder, and half a dozen suspects, and you'll be as absorbed in ravelling the tangle as are the characters in the picture.

EXPRESS—This William de Mille picture, which is mildly amusing and rather interestingly created on the screen, is Ethel Wales' own, by reason of the eccentric character she conceives so adroitly in Matilda Jones, writer.

RECORD—Two things make "The Bedroom Window" "different" among mystery stories:

1—The person you suspect in the first reel actually turns out to be the guilty man.

2—The detective is a nice old maid authoress.

TIMES—William of the house of De Mille seems to be tired of trying to give the world delicate phantasy, whimsy and the rest, so he has dropped into the dime novel class.

Missouri, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—"The Bedroom Window" is in reality a mystery play, but differs in that it becomes more of a comedy after the introduction and keeps its secret to the very end, where an entirely unexpected climax is unraveled.

POST-DISPATCH—It has the merit of keeping the spectator guessing almost to the last, except when he feels sure that the murder with which the scenario opens will be blamed on the private secretary of the slain man—an eventuality that does not transpire.

STAR—Here is a cleverly contrived crime story, told with due regard for probability, suspense and climax, and lightened by delightful humor.

"Between Friends"—Vitagraph Merrill, Milwaukee

JOURNAL—Lou Tellegen does some of the best work we have seen from him in a long, long time as the sculptor. Anna Q. Nilsson performs capably * * *.

Tivoli, Washington

STAR—Besides its interest as a drama, "Between Friends," the film version of Robert W. Chambers' novel of studio life in New York, is a demonstration of the wonders that modern photography can perform.

"Boy of Flanders"—Metro-Goldwyn Capitol, Cincinnati

POST—The story is hardly of sufficient interest to hold an adult's attention. It seems a mistake to put so much of a burden on the shoulders of a child, and we believe that Jackie would be more of a success if he were used to supplement the finished actors.

TRIBUNE—It is such a splendid story for the films and so suited to the talents of Jackie that it is surprising that it wasn't thought of sooner.

Wisconsin, Milwaukee

SENTINEL—Jackie Coogan will wrap himself right around your heart in "A Boy of Flanders," which is essentially the type of picture best suited to his wistful pathos and comic abilities.

"Boy of Mine"—1st Nat'l Loew's State, Los Angeles

(Week Ending June 7)

EXAMINER—As a story, as a picture and from the viewpoint of cast, "Boy of Mine," over at Loew's State is a worthy film, with a fine blending of comedy and pathos, and possessed, all in all, of excellent entertainment qualities.

EXPRESS—It is as full of human appeal as Los Angeles is of real estate salesmen, and it would take a pretty flint-hearted individual not to feel a tug at the heart-strings * * *.

HERALD—* * * as fine and dignified a picture, carrying as much dramatic intensity, for all its lack of sex equation, as has been seen around here in a long, long time.

RECORD—But I do know that "Boy of Mine" is an honest-to-goodness simple, real story—first in a long time.

TIMES—Those much abused words, "human interest" and "heart appeal," may be regarded as shining clearly once again.

"Breaking Point"—F. P.-L. Ohio, Indianapolis

NEWS—The film is fair enough entertainment for routine stuff. Matt Moore, as the hero, is as likeable as always and as good an actor. Nita Naldi, as Patsy Ruth Miller and George Fawcett are in the cast.

STAR—Herbert Brenon, who knows his business as few other directors in the films, has done an excellent job in transferring Mrs. Rinehart's best seller to the celluloid.

"Code of the Sea"—Famous McVickers, Chicago

POST—"The Code of the Sea" leaves you feeling drenched and gasping for breath. It gives you all the thrills of a shipwreck, minus the anxiety that you may not weather the storm.

TRIBUNE—KIND—Sea-faring drama.

CLASS: Second.

ACTING: Splendid.

PHOTOGRAPHY: All right.

DIRECTION: Commendable.

STORY: A fairly interesting one.

Colonial, Indianapolis

NEWS—The best part of the picture is the last half, where there is plenty of excitement and incident. The rescue of the imperiled passengers by means of the breeches buoy is one of the high spots of the climax, quite making one sit up and take notice.

STAR—"Code of the Sea," * * * is a stirring picture of perils and rescues, of heroes and cowards, of a man's fight against an inherent cowardice * * *.

Strand, Omaha

BEE—It's dramatic romance, with emphasis on the drama part. Audiences that like action will find plenty in "Code of the Sea."

WORLD-HERALD—If you are looking for action you'll find it in Paramount's picture, "Code of the Sea."

Granada, San Francisco

(Week Ending June 7)

BULLETIN—The chief ingredients of the picture are slashing action and intense dramatic situations.

CALL & POST—It is enacted by a great cast, has a most appealing story with plenty of heart interest, and an occasional laugh plus the distinct novelty in that practically every scene is an exterior, many of which were "shot" just outside our own Golden Gate.

CHRONICLE—The picture is all sea with only one or two hits on shore. One gets a very good idea of things on the water, and there is a fine stretch of live-saving with rockets and breeches buoy.

EXAMINER—The plot drags considerably at the beginning while it is getting up "steam", but then the story moves along merrily to its climax * * *.

Palace, Washington

HERALD—* * * a rip-roaring acting picture with high romantic overtones that brings to the screen some of the most awe-inspiring and overwhelming glimpses of the ocean on a rampage ever confined to the celluloid.

STAR—"The Code of the Sea," to be seen at Loew's Palace this week, brings to the screen one of the best sea melodramas in some time.

TIMES—Frankly the picture didn't enthrall us. Its lashing waves had lost their punch, but we were interested. In all justice to the picture and this reviewer, it is good and no more, but that is worth your while and change.

HERALD—Directed by Victor Fleming, "Code of the Sea" should prove one of the most interesting films of the current season.

JOURNAL—The cast is excellent, the direction very good, the sea shots (or if you prefer tank shots) thrilling.

NEWS—If it's action the photoplay fan wants, there is plenty of it in the feature attraction "Code of the Sea" at the Granada Theater this week.

"Cytherea"—First Nat'l Allen, Cleveland

NEWS—* * * "Cytherea" has been made into an unusually fine picture and unless I am wrong it will be one of the most discussed films of the year.

PLAIN DEALER—* * * the picture is an intelligent and entertaining "domestic drama"—for the adult patron.

TIMES—The picture is well done on the whole, but it falls short of the book in many respects. A moralistic trend is brought in which weakens the written work, but which does bring the screen version to the expected happy and virtuous ending, not found in the novel.

Grand Central, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—Pictorially, it is a gorgeous picture, with some Cuban scenes, done in natural color, attaining the pinnacle of screen beauty.

STAR—* * * leaves one with the impression of having seen real human beings in moments of domestic stress, not the conventional stuffed shirts so often paraded in the movies.

TIMES—Nothing new in the picture, and little that is healthy. It certainly was not made with the idea of raising the moral standard of photoplays.

"Dawn of a Tomorrow"—F. P.-L. Garden, Milwaukee

JOURNAL—A Cinderella story, liberally sugared, is this adaptation of the Frances Hodgson Burnett story and play. If you don't get stuck in the glucose, you may derive a reasonable amount of entertainment from the film.

SENTINEL—A super dose of optimism is presented in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow", * * * which out-Pollyanna Pollyanna when it comes to rising smiling and cheerful from rather wretched circumstances.

"Galloping Fish"—1st Nat'l Rialto, Los Angeles

(Week Ending June 7)

EXAMINER—The production makes no claim to psychological or metaphysical import. It is built for laughing purposes only and caters with great success to the risibilities.

HERALD—One laugh gallops right after another in a continuous side-splitting procession in "The Galloping Fish." * * *.

RECORD—* * * I highly approve of the whole ridiculous picture—only it might have been so much more ridiculous.

TIMES—* * * ranks high among the humorous pictures of the year, and is entertaining generally. In other words, you will enjoy it a great deal if you don't expect too much, and you will get plenty of laughs even if you do.

Strand, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE—Thomas Ince's latest screen vehicle, "Galloping Fish," * * * is refreshing and diverting.

"Guilty One"—F. P.-L. Columbia, Washington

HERALD—One of this season's most powerful and fascinating mystery-dramas * * *.

POST—All of the thrills of the old-fashioned mystery play are given * * * in "The Guilty One," with Agnes Ayres as star.

STAR—The thrills of a new mystery melodrama are found in the picture shown at Loew's Columbia this week, under the title, "The Guilty One."

TIMES—* * * the story drags until the introduction of the murder mystery, during which the interest is well sustained and is carried through to a dramatic climax.

"Happiness"—Metro California, Los Angeles

(Week Ending June 7)

EXAMINER—"Happiness" at the California this week is all that the name implies.

EXPRESS—Miss Taylor does not maintain the excellent standard set in her cinematic debut. In "Peg o' My Heart" she registered about 100 per cent. However, her present slump in virtuosity is not her fault, because in "Happiness" she is handicapped by a hopelessly saccharine vehicle.

HERALD—Laurette Taylor, the winsome, brings a whole carload of charm, humor and good acting to the California theater this week in "Happiness," a picturization of the great play success written by her husband, Hartley Manners.

RECORD—Everyone knows Laurette Taylor in "Peg o' My Heart," and loved her in the role.

"Happiness," * * * is of the same pattern, and with the same star.

TIMES—Laurette Taylor * * * has done it again, has established herself firmly as one of the greatest personalities of the screen in "Happiness," which charmed and delighted us through and through yesterday.

"King of Wild Horses"—Pathe Apollo, Indianapolis

NEWS—"The King of Wild Horses," at the Apollo this week, has a magnificent horse as its star, in addition, which actually has the center of the stage and keeps it.

STAR—The picture is well directed, the scenes are interesting and beautiful.

"Law Forbids"—Universal Clune's Broadway, Los Angeles

(Week Ending June 7)

EXAMINER—Thematically, it's old, old stuff. But the child actress is used in plausible enough situations and succeeds in being cute throughout three-fifths of the film footage.

EXPRESS—For a story of the "papa loves mama" pattern, those concerned with the making of the film production deserve praise for fashioning new interest.

RECORD—Again it has been proved that no matter how hackneyed a plot may be, goot acting can carry the play. * * * Baby Peggy, the diminutive star, the child of the parents who have agreed to disagree, is charming in her comedy bits.

"Lilies of the Field"—1st Nat'l Eastman, Rochester

DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE—* * * there is little reason to wax contentious over such a production as "Lilies of the Field"; it is too ridiculously vapid for the dignity of argument. Meanwhile it is a very lovely optical anodyne even if it is intellectually negligible and morally flabby.

HERALD—This array of screen personages, none of them among the lesser radiance of filmdom, couped with some good lighting and, here and there some good photography, forms an excellent gloss for the rather insipid story of the play. In short this drama is well cast and well directed.

JOURNAL & POST EXPRESS—The story is told in a straight-forward way for the most part and is acted extremely well by Corinne Griffith—who is so beautiful you watch her almost breathlessly—and by Conway Tearle and their associates.

TIMES-UNION—The play is over-staged, the private homes being palaces and the apartment a mansion, while all the women dress like Parisian mannequins. * * * In its present form its interest is maintained, though the climax might be stronger.

COSTUMES FOR HIRE

New York's Newest and Foremost Costume Rental Organization

BROOKS

143 W 40TH ST. N. Y. C.

"Love Master"—1st Nat'l Karlton, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—"The Love Master," * * * is one of those intense human interest films which cannot help but win favor.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—Strongheart well portrays varied emotions. Ferocity, deep devotion, playfulness, the part of a perfect lover—all are shown faithfully. And the dog hero has a big advantage over his human co-stars in his so-evident sincerity and naturalness.

"Marriage Cheat"—First Nat'l Madison, Detroit

FREE PRESS—"The Marriage Cheat," the picture which is being shown at the Madison theater this week, combines thrills, intrigue and romance.

Metropolitan, Washington

HERALD—Combining the daring of "Rain," the dramatic forcefulness of "The Ten Commandments" and the charm of Tully's "The Bird of Paradise," * * * offers something for every amusement taste.

POST—Thrill after thrill fills "The Marriage Cheat," * * * For dramatic forcefulness it compares with "The Ten Commandments" and for daring with "Rain."

STAR—It presents many refreshingly human bits of characterization as well as smoothly unified action, logical rising to the climax with several big crises en route.

TIMES—"The Marriage Cheat" is the real stuff. It was filmed in Tahiti, where the swishing of grass dresses accompanies the melodious tootling of reed flutes—where tropical rains lash cruelly the grass huts and make a fine background for scenes of strong emotion * * *.

"Marriage Circle"—Warner Bros. Rialto, Omaha

BEE—Straight farce upon a screen has been and is one of the difficult things. If you like it—and who doesn't—don't miss seeing "The Marriage Circle."

NEWS—Old fogies who insist the screen is just a poor imitation of the stage should take stop-watches. First two and a half minutes are without a subtitle, and nearly ten minutes of the best dramatic action at the climax also takes place without intruding words.

WORLD-HERALD—Take a tip from us and see this production. It is one of the finest comedies we have ever seen filled with the newest ideas on direction.

"Men"—F. P. L. Capitol, Detroit

FREE PRESS—"Men" * * * brings exotic Pola Negri to the screen again in perhaps the best thing she has done since she flashed on the American film world in "Passion," which resulted in her desertion of Europe.

Piccadilly, Rochester

DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE—* * * the story content of the play fully justifies the title; that the theme is most decidedly a sophisticated one, though in no way offensive or vulgar in the manner of its presentation, * * *.

HERALD—Miss Negri has recovered from that slump in her acting which has, of late, been so apparent, and is again giving evidence of a fine technique and long training.

JOURNAL & POST EXPRESS—Buchowetzki is one of the European directors who display subtlety, finesse and a skill in the elimination of extraneous detail which few Americans have mastered. In this respect, "Men" is admirable.

TIMES-UNION—* * * it is cleverly directed and photographed and even the minor roles are sketched with clean-cut strokes.

California, San Francisco (Week Ending June 7)

BULLETIN—It is a much better picture than the last shown here starring Miss Negri, but it is not her best picture by any means.

CALL & POST—* * * Pola Negri has found a vehicle which gives full scope to her peculiar dramatic ability, as evidenced in her European successes, particularly "Passion," and which compares favorably with those successes.

CHRONICLE—She does some things very splendidly indeed; she wears her clothes well; she uses her fine eyes with consummate knowledge of their power and occasionally she gives the impression of suffering, but not often.

EXAMINER—"Men" is by no means a conventional drama. Pola Negri seems to realize this and rises to heights that she has not yet achieved in her American-made pictures.

HERALD—Good as was "Shadows of Paris" and the other American made Negri pictures, they somewhat fade compared with "Men."

JOURNAL—Miss Negri falls with gusto into a vivid picture of low life by the dockside. Drudgery, frowzy company, coarse-grained sailor-folk, the life of the gutter, fill the canvas.

NEWS—The plot of the story is strong. The captivating and temperamental little actress is equal to everything necessary for her to do and she makes the offering her masterpiece.

"Mlle. Midnight"—Metro-Goldwyn Stanley, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—The story itself holds more interest than the usual picture in which Miss Murray appears. The plot is laid in Mexico and is filled with bandits, revolutions and fights.

INQUIRER—In spite of the obvious conclusion of the picture, the plot holds interest to the end and has several thrilling incidents.

NORTH AMERICAN—Miss Murray has ample opportunity to display her entire bag of tricks, altho it seems rather a pity that, as the heroine in the Mexican story, she has to wear a black wig. She always looks best in the blonde variety.

PUBLIC LEDGER—It affords the temperamental star an opportunity to be temperamental and wear fine clothes and dance Spanish dances and protect her honor from the villain and rescue her lover from death.

"Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model"— Metro-Goldwyn Strand, Cincinnati

POST—It's wild melodrama and so wild it becomes funny. * * * As an example of what we have left behind us, we are glad to know it, but let us hope no more old-timers will be dug up.

TRIBUNE—It is one of the most distinctive offerings in months. Here is one of those good old-fashioned melodramas that has been brought to the screen with something of its original charm still clinging to it.

Garrick, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE—The stage story has been transferred to the screen with all its fascinating thrills.

"Perfect Flapper"—1st Nat'l Chicago, Chicago

TRIBUNE—The photoplay has its truths, its moral, its merry moments, and its sad ones. Certainly it does give one a different line on why some things are.

"Rejected Woman"—Metro-Goldwyn Rialto, Washington

HERALD—Alma Rubens and Conrad Nagel appear together as stars for the first time in "The Rejected Woman," * * * and both are to be congratulated on their superb performances in John Lynch's powerful drama of modern-day life.

POST—With underlying seriousness of motive, with many truly emotional scenes, the producers have nevertheless managed to invest the production with all the gayety and beauty of modern life.

STAR—"The Rejected Woman" is one of those triangle stories with a happy ending. The photography is excellent.

TIMES—Miss Rubens makes of Diane Duprez a strong character. Conrad Nagel has had few superior roles or played them better.

"Secrets"—1st Nat'l Imperial, San Francisco

(Week Ending June 7)

BULLETIN—Norma Talmadge never appeared in a better picture than "Secrets." In many ways the picture is her best.

CALL & POST—* * * the advance notices were no mere vaporings either as to the artistic or box office success of "Secrets" * * *.

EXAMINER—"Secrets" is, in itself, a most entertaining story, but its chief value to the star and to the audience lies in the varied roles that it offers Miss Talmadge's genius.

JOURNAL—A beautiful story, beautifully filmed. Artistic endeavor in its finest sense blooms from every scene in the screen version of "Secrets" * * *.

NEWS—Norma Talmadge has been growing steadily in artistic stature, and in her latest picture, "Secrets," * * * she does the best work of her career.

"Sherlock, Jr."—Metro-Goldwyn New, Baltimore

SUN (EVENING)—This comedy has some of the funniest gags ever perpetrated by the frozen-faced comedian.

Delmonte, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—* * * audiences * * * were kept in a continuous roar of laughter by Buster Keaton in his newest full-length comedy, "Sherlock, Jr." * * *.

POST-DISPATCH—With tempo a little slower than usual, but with many subtle twists of humor and several novel "stunts," Buster Keaton keeps well up to his standard as a comedy producer and star with "Sherlock, Jr." * * *.

STAR—"Sherlock, Jr.," with Buster Keaton at the Delmonte is as funny as one can wish.

"Three Weeks"—Metro-Goldwyn Stanton, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—The "spiciness" that makes "Three Weeks" a best-seller, must necessarily be deleted from the picture and there is little left except a meaningless and stupid affair which ends in a double murder, with the Queen finding rest "with the cold steel with Paul giving the tears."

NORTH AMERICAN—All the flavor that made Elinor Glyn's story of "Three Weeks" a sensation in its day has been retained in the screen version, now on view at the Stanton.

"Three Miles Out"—Asso. Exhibitors Kings, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—"Three Miles Out" is a comedy drama and it had the audience laughing heartily one moment and tremendously thrilled the next.

POST-DISPATCH—This is a swift-moving film in which are crowded melodrama, humor and some startling stunts of the type usually found in serial thrillers.

STAR—* * * illustrates that the plot is not the important part of a motion picture. With Madge Kennedy and Harrison Ford in congenial roles, the preposterous story affords plenty of entertainment.

TIMES—Thrills that make the cold chills race up and down the spine run throughout the picture, which discloses to some extent the methods used by rum runners along the coast.

"$20 A Week"—Selznick Metropolitan, Baltimore

POST—It is a typical George Arliss story and production and shows that actor up in the best possible light.

"Unknown Purple"—Truart Sun, Omaha

BEE—Well balanced throughout, beautifully staged and with some of the finest lighting effects ever achieved, "The Unknown Purple," * * * is an absorbing adaptation of the stage play of that same title.

WORLD-HERALD—You are going to be greatly pleased with Henry B. Walthall * * *. It is by far the best thing he has made since those early Griffith days when he undeniably was considered the greatest male star.

"Unseeing Eyes"—Metro-Goldwyn Fox, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—Barrimore gives an excellent account of himself in this story of the Canadian Rockies, where the picture was filmed amid the kind of storm scenes only available there.

INQUIRER—A thrilling melodrama, of the Canadian Northwest variety this time, is enfolded in "Unseeing Eyes" * * *.

NORTH AMERICAN—Mr. Barrymore gets happily away from pretty poses as the hero. Seena Owen makes an attractive but insipid heroine. * * *.

PUBLIC LEDGER (EVENING)—Mr. Barrymore and Miss Owen are up to their standard in the thrills, and the setting allows some particularly fine photography of mid-winter scenes in a wild and scenic country. It's an interesting picture—one that could be enjoyed on a hot June day.

"Untamed Youth"—F. B. O. Fay's, Philadelphia

INQUIRER—It is a screen adaptation of the stage play "Born of the Cyclone" and is replete with exciting incidents.

"When a Man's a Man"—First Nat'l Regent, Rochester

DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE—The play is well photographed, some of the natural settings being of exceptional beauty; the continuity and titling are satisfactory, and the members of the supporting cast are all equal to the rather limited tasks set for them.

HERALD—* * * "When a Man's a Man," despite its authorship, is a most entertaining motion picture of the regular shooting, hanging, rough riding type.

JOURNAL & POST EXPRESS—The picture seems to lack that vital "punch" which can make a western picture, constructed of no matter how hackneyed material, exciting. Some of the scenery, however, is delightful.

TIMES-UNION—The story is perfectly obvious western melodrama, with an effeminate eastern professor, played by Arthur Hoyt, thrown in for comedy, but the picture is, nevertheless, worth seeing for the breath of fresh air which it carries with it.

STARTING

By DANNY

No matter how small. If it's right. And you handle it properly. You get somewhere. It's a long way from the 14th St. Nickelodeons to the State theatres. Which dot this country. It Loew started in the Nickelodeons. And Zukor's start was far from what Famous is today. So those of you. Who would not consider the M. P. Directors' Asso. seriously. Might think again.

Phil Rosen, whose name appears as director for "Abraham Lincoln"—all that's some picture; is president. Others interested are Roy Clements, Clarence Badger, Joe DeGrasse, Billy Bludine and a lot more. Have organized. And will produce 16 to 18 pictures. Of which the chief output will be $100,000 negative cost production. And two for double that.

Grand-Asher have the distributing arrangements in hand. Sam Grand is about ready to get the low down on the product—from the exchange man's point of view. Selling 15 in a block.

Many of the directors interested are well known. Others in the MPDA—which will add to the personnel if the idea is successful—include some of the very best men in the business. If the idea works out and develops, look for something to happen.

The idea of banding a lot of directors together isn't new. It was hatched several years ago at one of the MPTO national conventions. This group of directors was to make pictures which were to rid the small exhibitors of block booking and their "existing evils." But like many of her ideas this one didn't work. And seemed as if the plan was to be abandoned. But Sam Grand and Harry Asher have revived it. And a lot of people will watch. And eagerly wait. For the result.

If this move can be properly financed—Grand says it can and will be, and at present is—and if the pictures produced are sufficiently valuable to find a place, there is no reason why such an idea cannot be developed in a material and important way.

Reports Profits for First Quarter

The Famous Players-Lasky Corp in its consolidated statement, which also includes the earnings of subsidiary companies, reports that for the three months ending March 29, 1924 net operating profits of $803,072.07 after having deducted all charges and reserves for Federal income and other taxes.

After allowing for payments of dividends on the preferred stock, the above earnings amount to $2.71 per share on the common stock outstanding for the quarter.

Sees Big Year Ahead

Storey Says Business is Much Better Than Last Year, and Considerable Than Two Years Ago

According to reports submitted by the various branch managers of Pathe, the business of that organization has increased tremendously during the past year.

"Pathe's business and collections during the first five months of this year were greater by a considerable margin than during the like period of 1923," said J. E. Storey, general sales manager. "Our business is holding in gratifying volume, with no indication yet of slowing down during the summer period. At this season there is always a lessening of productive activity in general, yet it is not as pronounced now as it was a year ago.

"It is of course impossible to make a comparison of business conditions by states because of the fact that such conditions are governed by the great diversity of activities, the difference

Application Withdrawn

The application by Pyramid Pictures for permission to issue $1,000,000 in debenture bonds, which came before Justice Tierney on a plea for a modification of the injunction granted to the Attorney-General last summer, restraining Pyramid from selling any more of its securities, has been withdrawn. The corporation intended to exchange $750,000 in debentures for unit certificates held by its investors, and stated that with the other $250,000, it would be able to get back on its feet.

Theaters for Children

Sol Lesser Launches Movement to Establish Children's Theater in Large Cities

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Hollywood—In order that the children of the world shall be given the chance to witness films suitable to their minds from an educational, moral and entertainment standpoint, Sol Lesser, president of Principal Pictures, has launched a move for the establishing in every large city in the United States, Canada, and England, of a children's theater. The theaters will be devoted entirely to the younger generation and the entertainment selected will cater exclusively to the mind of the child.

According to Lesser, he will have the cooperation of Child Welfare leagues throughout the country as well as the Parent-Teachers associations. Judge Ben Lindsay, known as the greatest juvenile jurist in the country, will also help.

European Conditions

Louis Auerbach Thinks More Big Theaters Essential—The German and Russian Situation

"The film industry in Europe today is in a most precarious position. The chief reason for this is that there have not been new theaters built with the exception of two now being erected in England, one belonging to Famous Players, the other to Al Woods and Ben Blumenthal."

This is the belief of Louis Auerbach of Export and Import, just back from the other side. "Unless new theaters are built throughout the continent of Europe," says Auerbach, the industry cannot hope either to obtain the prices which they expect nor can there be a healthy business. There isn't a question of a doubt in my mind but that the opportunity is excellent for the erection of large theaters in all of the large cities in Europe is most essential for the success of our business. The seating capacity of the present theaters is so small that it is impossible today to get sufficient money for the exhibition of pictures.

England

"The outstanding difficulty in England and today is the great competition between big producers—American producers chiefly—in the distribution of their pictures. Prices which they expect are ridiculous. The prices which they ask are more ridiculous.

Screen to Contribute

The British screen will have a similar reel, showing English industries. The American delegation will be headed by Maurice Caplan, president of the Metropolitan M. P. Co., Detroit.

European Conditions

The pictures are being rented for $10 which should bring $100. When this cut-throat policy is stopped pictures will again bring the prices that they should.

"In France, on account of conditions of theaters business is practically in 'status quo,' and nothing of any importance transpires there.

Germany Relapses

"Germany had a boom of American productions for about 60 days and then relapsed with a rebound worse than before. There is a panic on in regard to money. No one has any money and the big commercial houses are combining, as for instance in Hamburg, where 100 joined hands to protect their credit as far as the banks go. The banks refuse to loan money, and private individuals want such a tremendous amount of interest, on account of the risk they run, that it is almost impossible to obtain it. Contracts made are being repudiated right and left, but the worst of all is the 'Kontigent' which very few people understand or realize. Instead of the Government putting on an import tax on the negatives, they are distributing to producers and exchangers the right to import a certain number of meters. A small man will, for instance, get the right to import 300 meters, which is approximately a little over 1,000 feet. Some of these people have no use for this right but sell it to others, and therefore the price today has gone so high that by the time a man purchases the right again from the bootleggers, so-called, it is in some instances twice, or sometimes three times as high as the right paid for the picture. It is therefore practically prohibitive today to bring pictures into Germany.

"It is high time that the industry in this country take up with the State Department that the lifting of this 'Kontigent' is a necessity, although we do not want to deny the right of the German Government to put on any fair importation tax, but to make it open for everybody and not put the matter in the hands of misusers and crooks, who demand all kinds of prices and peddle this commodity around amongst each other. Until this thing is lifted, American films will have a hard row in that country.

Russia

"As to conditions in Russia, at the present time they are all at sixes and sevens. The Government offices located in Germany at the time have been closed. There are a great quantity of pictures bought which were intended for Russia which are lying on the border line of Russia today and no permission has been granted to import them into the territory. These pictures have to be returned to the owners, as only through the Government can importations be allowed, and this allowance has been withheld by them. As it is a question today of Government control, this control has been so strengthened that no picture, except those purchased by them, under their supervision, and with their consent, is allowed to enter Russia; and those pictures that have been bought by individuals and sent to the border with the intention of bringing them into Russia, are still laying there, and are being recalled daily, because the consent is withheld. The Government has today forced the production of films in Russia, and two or three pictures are being produced now, as they want to foster the industry there as much as possible, and as the Government likewise controls the theaters, the entire thing is naturally a monopoly by the Government, and I feel confident that very, very few pictures have been allowed to go in there up to this time."

Unguarded Women

You will have a chance to see UNGUARDED WOMEN for yourself when this picture is given a pre-release showing at the Rialto Theatre during the week of June 22nd. It is one of the first of THE FAMOUS FORTY to be exhibited in New York, and it deserves that honor.

Here is strong, red-meat drama that is going to hand the safe, contented people who compose the bulk of your audiences a terrific surprise. For it reveals secrets and impulses and clashes within the souls of men and women that ordinary folks either don't know or don't talk about.

UNGUARDED WOMEN says there is a type of woman who needs a man to love her and guard her or she is hopelessly adrift. Bebe Daniels plays such a woman in the picture. The man she loves, her husband, loses his life through the momentary, excusable hesitation of Richard Dix. A couple of years later, Dix meets Miss Daniels for the first time. He is engaged to another girl, Mary Astor. He finds the widow playing fast and loose, headed down the shoots, sneered at by society in which she was formerly a favorite. Dix is a man with a keen sense of honor. He feels responsible for losing the husband; he will save the wife, even if he has to tear his love for the other girl out of his heart to do it. In a short time, both women are in love with him, fighting for him. How these three people work their way out of this dramatic situation is a problem that will grip audiences and hold them tight, and the ending is one of the most sensational ever filmed.

The setting of UNGUARDED WOMEN is New York and the European and American society quarter of an Oriental city. The atmosphere is of nice people whose characters are being insidiously loosened by the influence of the mysterious East.

Bebe Daniels and Richard Dix, unless they repeat in SINNERS IN HEAVEN, can regard UNGUARDED WOMEN as the high point in their screen careers so far, as can Mary Astor. Alan Crosland, who has made "Enemies of Women" and other successes, has come through with a superb production.

UNGUARDED WOMEN is released on August 18th. Like the rest of THE FAMOUS FORTY, it has a good title.

“COBRA”

The Biggest Dramatic Show In New York Today!

So Will It Also Be The Biggest Dramatic Picture Made Next Year!

Concerning my ad about “COBRA” which appeared a few days ago, one of the biggest producers in the business called me on the 'phone and stated that he did not think I could possibly secure $250,000 for this wonderful play. Because this man is a friend of mine, I hate to contradict him, but if I cannot get $250,000 under my terms, I intend to make this picture myself or in conjunction with some other producer.

I would like to have either D. W. Griffith, Henry King, Cecil DeMille or Marshall Neilan, or some other big, well known director, direct this picture. I firmly believe they would make the biggest box-office attraction of the year out of this play. If I cannot get one of those mentioned above, I would like to engage some young Griffith, or a little King, or a small DeMille, or a teeny-weeny Neilan to direct this picture. For the feminine lead I should like to get Norma Talmadge or Corinne Griffith, and I would also like to have Rudolph Valentino or Antonio Moreno play the male lead.

My plans regarding this big dramatic hit are very ambitious!

All offers will be held in strict confidence

Theaters for Children

 When in Europe last summer, Les-approached his plan in council David Lloyd George and Lord Cromer, who are both in accord with the idea. Lloyd George will help assist in presenting the bill and bringing about its consummation in association with the free school system that is now in vogue in England.

Mr. M. Lesser, will depart for London next month, where he will confer with Lloyd George and Lord Cromer on the subject so far as the bill is concerned.

These theaters will be small but sufficient large to accommodate the children. Women attaches will be engaged to operate them and to govern their activities.

The first theater will be erected in Los Angeles or Hollywood. A site is being considered on Wilshire Boulevard and if this does not materialize a Hollywood location will be selected. New York will have the second theater.

After these are established in large cities, it is our plan to arrange for neighborhood houses, thus forming a chain that will grow continent and be operated on the same basis as the West Coast Theaters.

Ill. and Mo. Theaters Close

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

St. Louis—The following houses are closed: Hughes, New Haven; Idle Hour, Humphreys, Mo.; Grand, Frankfort Heights, Ill.; Dan, Mattoon, Ill.; Princess, Winfield, Mo.; Cozy, Dugger, Ind.; Palace, Universal, Ind. Policy changes have been made at the Noble and Dan, Princeton, Ind., running on Wednesdays and Saturdays; Divernon, Ill., operating six nights a week and in Carrollton, Ill., full time. Plaza Theater, Mt. Vernon, Ill., will close for three or four weeks for remodeling.

Fairbanks' Brother Arrives

Robert Fairbanks, brother of Douglas, has arrived from Europe where he has been touring with the Fairbanks-Pickford party, and brings the news that Doug and Mary have changed their plans entirely. Douglas's business affairs in London and Paris delayed him so long that his trip through Russia into Japan would seriously interfere with their productions. They are therefore coming back in a month or two by way of New York.

Pathe Salesmen Shifted

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

St. Louis—As a result of the resignation of Art Bright as city salesman for Pathe, George Custer will hereafter act as special representative on reels for the key towns; Jack Morgan will handle the west side of St. Louis, and Fred Strubank, the east side has left for the West.

Harry Shull, formerly with United Artists, is now selling for Associated Exhibitors.

In The Courts

Albert Redfield, as a director of Post Pictures Corp., filed suit in the Supreme Court against Clyde E. Elliott, who was president from 1918 to 1923, for an accounting on the ground that Elliott has obtained possession of nearly all the property of Post Pictures. He alleges that the corporation bought a dog to be used in a film and that the dog was of the value of $2,000 because of the attractiveness of the animal in pictures, and that it was entrusted to Elliott, but he claims ownership, and used the dog in other films without accounting to the plaintiff. It is alleged that the corporation gave Elliott $4,000 which he said he needed to complete 40 films but that after he had finished only five, he got $3,500 more to enable him to edit and title the remaining films. Redfield alleges that the corporation now has assets of less than $1,000 and liabilities of from $36,000 to $42,000, whereas previously, it had the 40 films, $1,000 in cash, and debts of about $35,000.

A suit for $500 by T. Carlyle Atkins, director, against George Behan, has been filed in the Supreme Court. Atkins alleged that he rendered services to Behan valued at $1,500 and that Behan only paid him $1,000. Behan alleged that he paid all that is due. The suit was brought in the Municipal Court and was called for trial in the absence of Behan who was making pictures in Chicago. The case is to be tried again this month when Behan will be in the city, as the result of the action of the Municipal Court in vacating a default judgment for $548 against Behan.

In a suit of the Republic Laboratories against Matthias Radin, a judgment for $638 was filed in the City Court. The plaintiff alleged that it had a claim against Radin Pictures and Tyrad Pictures for $1,178 for developing films, and the defendant agreed to settle a claim if the plaintiff would withdraw an action against the corporation. He paid all but the amount for which the judgment is entered.

New Philadelphia, O.—The Bankers' Commercial Security Co. of New York has filed suit against the Ulrichsville Theatre Co. to collect $5,062 alleged to be due on the purchase price of an organ.

"Business on Trial," Says Bloom
 Congressman Sol Bloom, in an address before the Jewish Theatrical Guild, at the Bijou, declared "the show business in on trial and the country is watching it," speaking on the tax question. "Washington is watching the managers," he said, and "if the managers do not give the benefit of the tax repeal on the 50 cents, or less, admission, Congress will give these managers scant consideration in the future."

Foreign Buyer Here

Mr. Reubenson of London is here to acquire product for the English market. At The Astor.

Supreme Court Justice McCook who heard the application of Famous Players for an injunction against Art-class Pictures, to restrain the latter from using the words "Ten Commandments" in connection with its film, "Moses and the Ten Commandments," on the ground that it is an infringement on the plaintiff's film, "The Ten Commandments," has decided to appoint former City Court Justice Robert L. Luce to hear the case as referee. Justice McCook decided on such a course because on account of the conflict of the affidavits in the case, it is necessary to take additional testimony, and each side was willing to submit the matter to a referee. The injunction is denied pending the decision by Judge Luce.

The suit of the American Sensitized Film Co., against Fred J. Harrison to recover $5,780 on the ground that he kept this money out of $17,340 given to him to buy raw film, from the Eastman Kodak Co., for shipment to Russia, was dismissed when it came before Supreme Court Justice Burr for trial, because the plaintiff did not appear. Harrison, who was arrested at the time the suit was brought in 1921, alleged that the action was filed against him by Jacques Cibrario, who controlled the plaintiff corporation, out of spite. Harrison was compelled to give a bond in the case.

Wheeling, W. Va.—A verdict for the defendant was returned by a jury in the $10,000 suit of Goldwyn vs. George Zeppos, manager of the Rex, tried in Part II of the Ohio county circuit court before Judge J. Coniff.

An alleged violation of a contract was the basis for the suit, the plaintiff alleging that the defendant contracted to exhibit certain pictures furnished by the Goldwyn company and later rejecting them. The jury sustained the defense contention.

A summons in a suit for $25,000 by Louise O'Neill against the Yoost Photoplay Theater Co., has been filed in the Supreme Court. The cause of the suit is not stated.

Del Andrews has signed to direct F. B. O.'s "Go-Getters" series.

FAIR PLAY

By DANNY

There's a little problem on. With First National. Over "The Sea Hawk." Because some exhibitors hold contracts for a Frank Lloyd special. And others have the big production contracted for. At a figure considerably less than what the picture actually cost to make. And so Eddy Eschmann is having a job. To straighten things out. And his position is refreshingly frank. And interesting. It's simply this: First National will deliver a Lloyd special to any exhibitor who has a contract for one. But it will follow "The Sea Hawk." Those exhibitors who hold contracts for "The Sea Hawk." At old price. Can have the picture. After being told the story, they still insist on holding F. N. to the contract. But Eschmann believes. And is good betting he's right. That the average exhibitor is fair. Or wants to be. And that there will be no difficulty in getting the little tangle straightened out.

This recalls the Heart difficulty. When he switched to Goldwyn from Famous. And had several pictures messed up. Because of the prices at which the product was sold by Famous. And which he wanted changed. After the Goldwyn deal was consummated. Right here in New York there was an awful squabble. But it was finally worked out. And rather satisfactorily, too.

It's true that distributors. At times, throw the hooks into exhibitors. By cutting out of a schedule a picture after it promises to be a bigger attraction than when it was set for delivery. But because that happens occasionally it's rather a broad crack to make. That every time one of these over costly pictures arrives, and the quota is changed, that the distributor is out to "clean up." There is no way to stop this, of course. It's very simple: don't buy a block. Buy what you need them. Then these things cannot happen.

Only Way to Persuade South Carolina Legislature to Lift State Tax, Says C. W. Irvine

The following communication has been received from C. W. Irvine, manager of Famous Players' Imperial theater, Columbia, S. C., relative to how the admission tax should be handled:

"South Carolina is the only State in the Union now paying a 10% State Admission Tax.

"In my opinion, the exhibitors who do not give the public the benefit of the tax, are inviting State taxation. I feel sure that unless every exhibitor

FAIR PLAY

Don't forget this, Mr. Exhibitor: large concerns have been block booking for a long time. But still a lot of Pictures have been sold by these very concerns—and not in blocks.

SAILING

Gone to Europe. Many important matters going on. Want to get first hand information. Hope to cover a lot of ground quickly. Rome first. To see what the shooting is about. Regarding "Ben Hur."

This is scheduled to be one of the "big" pictures for next year. It should be. It will cost enough. There promises to be much interesting matter develop. With Charley Brabin possibly getting out. And Niblo going in. And Navarro taking George Walsh's place in the lead. How June Mathis will like this and what may happen? Well, it's interesting.

Want to look into the Russian situation, also France and England. Also going to Holland.

For in Holland there is an exhibitors' organization. And they have worked out a plan with the distributors by which it is practically impossible to show pirated prints in that country. Only place in the world where such a move is on. Want to learn a lot about it. First hand. Because pirated prints cost this industry a fortune. Every year. "The Kid" was pirated to such an extent that it cost First National many thousands. The Coogan pictures have been "apple sauce" for pirates.

The Passionate Journey

Out at Paramount's West Coast studio, Pola Negri has just finished a picture under the direction of Dimitri Buchowetzki called THE PASSIONATE JOURNEY. This is THE FAMOUS FORTY release for August 25th, completing the August list of seven surefire subjects. Here it is:

MANHANDLED, WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND, CHANGING HUSBANDS, MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE, UNGUARDED WOMEN, THE ENEMY SEX, and THE PASSIONATE JOURNEY—a Gloria Swanson picture, a Zane Grey story produced in natural colors, a marriage-comedy supervised by Cecil B. DeMille, a Rudolph Valentino picture, a Crosland production with Bebe Daniels, Richard Dix and Mary Astor, a James Cruze picture with Betty Compson, and a Pola Negri picture.

I don't believe you can equal that line-up for August anywhere. Or for any other month on the calendar.

THE PASSIONATE JOURNEY was made by the same man who directed Pola Negri in "Men." From the reports coming in from theatres which have played "Men," a May Paramount release, it is by far the most successful Negri picture made in America. Critics, exhibitors and audiences all over the country have assured us that the Negri-Buchowetzki combination is a winner. It is at its best in THE PASSIONATE JOURNEY.

This picture was adapted from a famous novel by Sudermann and play by Edward Sheldon. Raymond Griffith, Ben Lyon, Noah Beery and other good names are in the supporting cast. It is the story of a pretty girl of unusual appeal who, brought up in an unfortunate environment, makes a loveless marriage. When she falls in love with a handsome young fellow, she realizes her mistake. How she works out her problem to happiness in the end makes an exceedingly gripping drama.

In THE PASSIONATE JOURNEY, Miss Negri shows all the unique qualities that first made her famous and which audiences like in her. The picture was originally called "Compromised." Paramount yielded to many exhibitors' request that the original title be changed.

Have you booked THE FAMOUS FORTY?

Reduce Admissions

South Carolina reduces admission prices when the tax comes off, that we can never persuade the State Legislature to remove the State tax. By doing so, we have a strong argument with the Legislature, for the public had not just the theatre is benefitted by the tax relief. The Legislatures, and Congress too, are not especially interested in relieving the motion picture theaters—it is the public they want to relieve of tax, and I am sure Congress had the public in mind more than the theaters, when the Federal tax was removed.

"If the admissions are not reduced, some strong member of Congress may bring a lot of pressure to bear to have the tax put on again, citing many instances where the theater owners did not keep faith with Congress."

"Every theater in the Nation, to my mind, should by all means reduce admissions."

Will Not Affect Indianapolis

An Indianapolis daily has this to say, with regard to removal of the tax:

"Removal of tax on theater tickets, which goes into effect July 2nd, probably will not affect local entertainment-goers, as the prices now in effect are the same as before the tax was levied, the management taking the burden."

To Discuss Tax

The Cleveland M. P. Exhibitors' Ass'n, has called a meeting for June 18, to discuss the matter of admission price reduction.

Only Three First-Runs for Detroit

Emil Offerman Awarded $75,000

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—In his action for damages against Robertson-Cole and F. B. O., Emil Offerman has been awarded a jury verdict of $75,000. Offerman sued for $183,000, alleging violation of contract. He claimed a term contract when he was dismissed as studio manager by R.-C. The defense charged but a week-to-week understanding. Judge Valentine granted a 30 day stay of execution and the defendant will probably prepare a notice for a new trial.

SENTINEL—"...most probably it is the entire ensemble who have made this racy little yarn mighty pleasing."

"Son of the Sahara"—First Nat'l Park & Mall, Cleveland

PLAIN DEALER—"The picture can boast only of natural backgrounds. The interiors, while beautiful, could easily have been made in Hollywood—perhaps they were. The whole trouble is with the story which I found pretty dull going."

Washington, Detroit

FREE PRESS—"The Fox Washington theater is showing an excellent melodrama in 'The Shooting of Dan McGrew.'"

NEWS—"One really hates to pan this picture, knowing the players were taken down to Algeria to film it, but really I think it's a pretty sad reward for the money expended."

Warfield, San Francisco

(Week Ending June 7)

BULLETIN—"Photographically and scenically, 'A Son of the Sahara' is one of the finest bits that has played the Warfield Theater, where it is now the attraction."

CHRONICLE—"A Son of the Sahara" is picturesque first, savagely interesting second and well acted for good measure."

EXAMINER—"Action is the dominating characteristic of the production, as is usual when Bert Lytell appears in a stellar role. And unbounded romance, as was to be expected with San Francisco's popular actor and Claire Windsor starring together."

HERALD—"Characterized by sincerity, gripping action, fine suspense interest and 'the real thing' when it comes to location..."

JOURNAL—"Discarding the story and the lovemaking that are, of course, the main attractions, the picture is great."

NEWS—"A Son of Sahara" fits itself neatly to photoplay production and in it is found much of the charm of the desert. It touches on the melodramatic at times, while through it runs the love of a Bedouin prince for an English girl."

"White Moth"—First Nat'l State, Cleveland

PLAIN DEALER—"The White Moth" is pretty fair entertainment—if you don't take the story too seriously. If you do, then it's not so much, because that's exactly what the story is."

Circle, Indianapolis

NEWS—"The White Moth," the feature film at the Circle this week, is routine stuff pretentiously done. A vapid story has been all dressed up..."

MURDER!

By DANNY

If important distributors operated in America. As they are going in England—wonder if they'd remain in business long? Here's what some of them are going—over there.

One concern offers a list of about twenty pictures. And tells Mr. British exhibitor he can buy the lot for £150. In other words less than $750. In other words less than $15 for each picture. The normal selling value of these productions should not be less than $50.

Another one offers a list of 12 pictures. Tells Mr. British Exhibitor to take his pick of these for about $12 each and points out that every sixth exhibitor booking in this manner will get his product for nothing.

No wonder British distributors are considering going out of business. If this keeps up perhaps the American distributors will also think of going out of business.

There was in New York a few days ago an English buyer. He came prepared to spend one million dollars for film. For independent distribution in England.

Up to a few days ago he had not bought one foot of film. He said it was impossible. Prices were extortionate. And no American producer seemed to appreciate the difficulties facing the British Distributor of Independent American-made pictures.

How the independent American producer can operate under the circumstances was to this gentleman a most difficult matter to figure out. And he was pretty nearly right.

Loew Predicts Greater Earnings This Year—Reports Advance In Gross

"The cost of pictures is being reduced, because companies are becoming more efficient, cutting down overhead. More amalgamations of picture companies would help this industry.

Attack On Famous

M. P. T. O. Charges Juggling of "Famous Forty" in Local Territory To Boost Prices

Famous Players is attacked for its sales methods in the local territory in a circular letter sent out to all exhibitors in Greater New York by the M. P. T. O. A. The letter is also being sent to all independent producers and distributors in this territory.

The objection centers around the claim that of the "Famous Forty" the Loew circuit has booked only twenty while Paramount salesmen are telling exhibitors that Loew has the entire group; that Famous will take twenty away from Loew to turn over to individual theaters, provided those exhibitors make it worthwhile in the way of higher rentals.

The letter goes on to say that Marcus Loew, before his departure for Europe advised a committee of the

"U" Buying Theaters Only to Secure Outlets, Says Laemmle—Now Controls 14

Carl Laemmle declared yesterday that Universal has been forced to become active in the exhibiting field, because of the closed first-run situation in many important points throughout the country. He said that Universal was not interested in exhibition, and that it found the purchase of theaters an irksome, but necessary expedient to carry on its business in a proper manner.

Universal intends annexing several more houses in key points before ending its theater-acquiring campaign. Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution is on a trip embracing points as far West as Chicago.

He will look into the theater situation in some of the cities he visits.

"We have been forced to do this," said Laemmle yesterday. "After many years we find that the only way we can break in is to acquire our own houses. It is a bad practice and we know it. It ties up capital. We are making pictures and do not want to turn exhibitor. We will not do so

M. P. T. O. A. that he only had room to play twenty of the Paramount block in his theaters, because he needed additional playing dates for his own pictures.

"Confirmation of his statement," the letter states, "is had in the fact that the New York and Brooklyn Strand theaters, for the first time, are going to play a number of Famous Players pictures for the coming season, beginning with Valentino in 'Monseieur Beaucaire'. It is well known in the trade that the Loew circuit has consistently refused to play any pictures on their circuit that played the Brooklyn Strand.

"The Famous Players Lasky Corp. representatives are approaching theater owners in this territory, telling them they are trying to prevent Mr. Loew from taking the entire output of forty pictures for his entire circuit and asking theater owners to help them in doing this. This condition does not exist, and if theater owners are thus misled they will tie up almost every play date between Aug. 1, 1924 and Feb. 1, 1925".

An effort made to reach S. R. Kent at Famous for a statement was unsuccessful. It was gathered, however, in other circles, that Famous had made no, or practically no attempts to sell the "Famous Forty" in the metropolitan district, in view of the fact that the major deals with the circuits had not been set.

The Side Show of Life

If you have seen THE COVERED WAGON, you know that probably the outstanding performance in the picture is that of Ernest Torrence as "Bill Jackson." More people go out talking and laughing about "Bill" than anything else they've seen. THE COVERED WAGON showed the world that Torrence is a great actor, and Paramount signed him. He has appeared in several pictures since THE COVERED WAGON, but "Bill Jackson" has remained the high spot.

Now I think "Bill" has been eclipsed. Torrence has just completed, in THE SIDE SHOW OF LIFE, a characterization that, in my opinion, is even better than the one that made him famous. We've all read a lot of stories about actors actually living their roles, and usually it's bunk. But if ever an actor did come near living a part, Torrence does it in THE SIDE SHOW OF LIFE. Here is a performance that is going to be numbered among the great ones of the screen, along with Tom Meighan's in "The Miracle Man" and a few others.

THE SIDE SHOW OF LIFE was produced by Herbert Brenon from William J. Locke's novel, "The Mountebank," and the play by Ernest Denny. Locke's books always sell into the hundreds of thousands. This one, his latest, has been no exception, and the story is of such outstanding dramatic merit that a Broadway stage play was made of it also.

Torrence has the part of a clown in a small traveling French circus. His partner is a poodle, one of the best dog actors I've ever seen. This dog, whom Torrence loves, is killed on the same day the circus goes smash and Torrence meets a pretty down-and-out French girl. Two derelicts, they form a professional partnership and take up life together in Paris. The war comes. Torrence enlists. Suddenly he finds himself. He is a natural-born soldier. Before the end of the war, he is a brigadier-general, a favorite of London society, loved by an English lady. He loves her in return. He is torn between two fires. Shall he marry the English girl and take up the new life his meteoric rise in the world has opened to him? Or shall he return to the French girl in Paris, who is wholly dependent upon him, and the circus?

To see Torrence play this character and work out his problem to a happy finish is a wonderfully entertaining experience for any audience. Anna Q. Nilsson, Neil Hamilton (hero of "America"), Louise Lagrange and the others in the cast are excellent.

I rate THE SIDE SHOW OF LIFE as a top-notch among that great line-up of top-notchers, THE FAMOUS FORTY. It will get the crowds and the money, and it will keep them talking long after it has passed along. Paramount is releasing it on September 1st.

In The Courts

Distinctive Pictures Corp., has appealed from an order of Supreme Court Justice Delahanty denying its application to strike out part of the complaint in a suit of Jetta Goudal for $100,000 damages. She alleged that the defendant hired her on Oct. 22 last, for six months at $500 a week, that she was to play only the leading female part in pictures and to be featured above all other women. She appeared until Nov. 17, when she alleged she was discharged without cause.

The allegations which the defendant asked to be stricken out, were that she was advertised as leading woman in "Blood and Gold," that someone else was engaged to take her place, and that the advertising was changed accordingly. In refusing to strike out these allegations, the court said that they had some bearing on the issues.

Powers Film Products, Inc. has applied in the Supreme Court to punish Rex Laboratory, Inc., and William K. Hedwig, president of the corporation, for contempt of court, because Hedwig failed to appear in the Supreme Court to testify concerning the ability of the corporation and himself to pay a judgment of $1,400.

F. G. Conklin, receiver for Preferred has been ordered to increase his bond from $25,000 to $50,000.

Our Salesmen Are Working for You

No. 391—Straight from the Shoulder
Talks by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation

I ASK YOU to take this little talk at its face value because I was never more in earnest in my life. It is about the relationship of Universal salesmen to you and to me.

First, read the following extract from the printed instructions carried by every Universal salesman:

“The basic principle and policy under which our pictures shall be sold is that no exhibitor shall be asked to pay one penny more than our product is worth to his theatre—but no exhibitor shall be permitted to pay for our product one penny less than it is worth.”

Now, that’s on the level. It was not written to be published (even though I am publishing it today) but it was written for the purpose of hammering the Universal policy home to our salesmen. I am jealous of our reputation for fair dealing. I don’t propose to have that reputation jeopardized by any salesmen who might be over zealous. A Universal salesman is as much your representative as he is mine. Laugh, if you feel a laugh coming, but it is the truth just the same.

We have more battles with our salesmen than you do!

They are constantly telling us when we are wrong on price. They tell us the facts about your theatre, your location, your capacity, your general business conditions. They give us all the reasons why we must not ask this or that price from you. They are in personal touch with you. I cannot be. If our salesmen were on your payroll instead of mine they could not use more arguments in your behalf than they now use!

Bearing in mind that our salesmen are as much your representatives as mine, I want to impress another fact upon you, namely, that never in the history of the Universal did our salesmen have so much to say about pricing our goods as they now have. When we make up our price lists, they tell us where we are wrong and where we are right, what you can afford to pay and what you cannot—and why. After we have battled the lists to a finish, they are authorized to accept contracts from you without waiting for Home Office approval.

Now I ask you to read one more extract from the printed orders to salesmen: “We want the salesmen to fight for our customers’ rights just as much as he fights for the company’s interests, because the welfare of our customers means the welfare of the company. I want no disputes—no enemies. Universal cannot afford enemies. There is no profit in enemies.”

My idea of business is that it must be based upon principle! Any other basis is a fake. Universal’s policy is “Live and let live.” Any time any Universal man departs from that policy, let me know!

Small Interest in State and Allen, Cleveland Reverts Back to Loew's Ohio Theaters

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Cleveland—Fred Desberg, general manager of Loew's Ohio Theaters, Inc., was one of the final witnesses to appear at the closing session of the Federal Trade Commission investigation into Famous Players' activities here.

The examination developed the fact that Loew's Ohio Theaters, Inc., had undergone a process of refinancing and that the bonds held by Famous Players in the company owning the State and Allen theaters had been paid off in full about three weeks ago.

Other witnesses were Frank Drew, Fox manager and Eddie Fontaine, Paramount manager.

Drew, testified that he had no difficulty getting first run showings of Fox pictures in first class theaters in this territory. He further testified that Fox pictures occupied ten per cent of available exhibition time in this territory.

Fontaine testified that the sales policies of Famous Players were similar to the sales policies of other distributing companies. He further attempted to show that Paramount pictures occupied about 15 per cent of the available exhibition time in the Northern Ohio territory. This testimony, however, was excluded by Examiner E. C. Alvord.

Famous Corelli Work Finally Purchased by Lasky—To Be Made on Ambitious Scale

Negotiations have finally been closed by Famous Players with the executors of the estate of Marie Corelli, for the rights to "The Sorrows of Satan." The deal was closed in London by Jesse L. Lasky.

For six years, negotiations have been under way for the purchase of the book, some leading producers having made bids for it. John Cecil Graham, head of the Famous London office begun dickering for the rights in 1918, through the author's agents, Watt & Son.

It has not been decided who will direct, or who will be starred, but it is understood the production will be one of the company's most ambitious pictures for next season.

Extends Olive Branch

Invitation to M. P. T. O. A. and Allied Group to Join Hands Made by Billy Brandt

The M. P. T. O. of New York has stepped to the front and has issued an invitation to leaders of the M. P. T. O. and the Allied States Organization to meet at the state convention in Buffalo, July 7 in a spirit of cooperation. The invitation has been extended by Billy Brandt to M. J. O'Toole, R. F. Woodhull and Sydney S. Cohen of the M. P. T. O. and the various prime movers in the Allied States Organization.

Brandt extends the olive branch and passes the issue on to the exhibitor leaders. He says the breach must be healed, so that one united front can be presented.

"The fact that this meeting falls at a time when the attention of the exhibitors throughout the country has been focused upon the all important need of proper organization by recent developments in the producing and distributing ends of the business, and that it comes close upon the heels of important group conventions in various cities, makes of this Buffalo meeting an occasion which can be turned to the benefit of the exhibition end of the industry in general and every exhibitor in particular," says Brandt.

"To this end, we extend a cordial invitation to President Michael J. O'Toole, Sydney S. Cohen, Peter Woodhull and other officials of the M. P. T. O. A., President W. A. Steffes, H. B. Varner, H. M. Richey, H. A. Cole, Jake Wells and other members of the Allied States Organization and every organization leader and individual exhibitor to attend this convention in Buffalo.

"The time has come when the exhibitors, each and every one, must weld themselves into a solid, tightly bound, financially unhampered organization which will at once act as an instrument to fight producer-distributor domination of the motion picture industry and at the same time, by its very strength, to be a formidable obstacle to future actions tending to cripple and weaken the independent exhibitor.

"This is too well known to require further elaboration, but it cannot be too well known that, in its present state, broken up into numerous un-

Newspaper Opinions

"True As Steel"—Metro-Gwyn Capitol

AMERICAN—* * * "While I did not find "True As Steel" especially convincing, I found it interesting and better material than I have seen on Broadway in the last two weeks. * * *

"True As Steel" misses a big chance, and one I thought Mr. Hughes would take—a chance to really give a pictorial discussion on woman's place in the business world. * * *

DAILY NEWS—* * * It's a good picture, but decidedly adult stuff. * * *

EVENING JOURNAL—* * * Rupert Hughes has made an interesting picture by drawing his characters human and understandable. And he has treated the situations with enough sympathy to make them logical. * * *

EVENING WORLD—* * * If there is one writer for the prints and for the screen who knows what the public wants his name is Hughes. * * * no matter what he is doing, he makes his audience like it. * * *

"True As Steel" is well worth while. * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—Rupert Hughes. * * * has disappointed us. He has made a morbid picture and has named it "True As Steel." * * *

* * * The trouble with the picture, we are sure, is that it is miscast. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * It impresses on the whole, but it is a question whether it should be put forth as Summer entertainment. Comedy is almost entirely lacking. A few jazz dance scenes and several clever titles drew the only laughs. * * *

But there is no question about the inherent quality of "True As Steel." It must be classed as a good story honestly and well directed, admirably acted and very well photographed. * * *

POST—* * * is one of the most curious pieces of work we've ever seen. * * *

It has neither plot nor villain. It conforms to no time proven formula. There's absolutely nothing startling about it, and a good deal of it strains your credulity to the last notch—yet most of it is interesting. * * *

SUN—* * * "True As Steel" then is recommended as an interesting if not precisely exciting picture, and one that is ever so faithful to life in les Etats Unis. * * * the settings and clothes are correct and handsome and the actors display an uncommon amount of what might be called plain horse sense. * * *

TELEGRAM—* * * If you want to see what an author can do in the way of consistent character developments, rational plot unfolding and clever caption writing, go see the picture. * * *

TIMES—We were agreeably surprised with this pictorial effort, which, while it is no masterpiece, is such a distinct improvement * * * that we emerged from the theater satisfied with life. * * * but in "True As Steel" he has actually neglected hokum, which fact makes this photoplay vastly more entertaining. * * *

The picture is quite a good entertainment, possibly all the more amusing for its abundance of impossible situations.

WORLD—* * * Because of her work and because of the excellent construction and clear cut direction of this picture * * * you somehow feel that Mr. Hughes is not half as shocked by the results of his research as his title writer would have you believe. He may have been pained by his discoveries but certainly a breathless and eager audience yesterday was vastly entertained. * * *

"Tiger Love"—F. P.-L. Rivoli

AMERICAN—* * * While the motion picture will never be as high in art as the opera, it is not bad entertainment. * * *

George Melford is the director, and it is many a day since I have seen as good a Melford picture. * * *

DAILY NEWS—* * * It all goes to show a movie isn't a movie when it hasn't a story. Here we have Antonio Moreno in a colorful role, good direction, some fine photography—but what a story! * * *

A Spanish dance or two cannot disguise that plot. You'd know it in an Eskimo setting. * * *

EVENING JOURNAL—* * * Estelle has the dark hair and eyes necessary for a heroine named Marcheta, and there are all the usual fights, holdups and interesting scenery expected of an outlaw play. * * *

EVENING WORLD—* * * It's one of those films with a box office title (this time not so salacious) that should "pack 'em in" out where alfalfa is the main crop. * * *

But any film with Antonio Moreno and Estelle Taylor as its featured players must be at least interesting and, in a measure, entertaining, so that's exactly the way we have enjoyed "Tiger Love." * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * A picture may be entirely different from a play and still be good. But "Tiger Love" isn't good. In fact the only thing in it that is worth looking at is Antonio Moreno. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * "Tiger Love" may serve to wile away an hour or so. There is always the probability of course that some people will overlook the conventional story and believe and enjoy it. * * *

POST—But it's pretty good stuff at that. The picture has been well directed by George Melford, and Estelle Taylor, * * * Tony Moreno, * * * give convincing performances. Some of the photography is very lovely. So, outside of the usual amount of hokum and a terribly blah ending, "Tiger Love" will soothe and please you. * * *

SUN—"Tiger Love" * * * easily misses being an entertaining photoplay. * * * Then, too, "Tiger Love" suffers a bit from having a Spanish heroine that doesn't look the least bit Spanish, and who is not quite attractive enough * * * to inspire the sort of love that is so eloquently and vividly described in the title. * * *

TELEGRAM—* * * much of the strength of the original story has evaporated, and the tragic atmosphere has vanished altogether. Several of the episodes seem improbable, and there is a real tendency toward the happy ending—one of the bugbears of film production.

The photography itself is remarkably beautiful, especially in the outdoor scenes. * * *

TIMES—* * * "Tiger Love" is nevertheless an interesting film in which the denouement is not blessed with the spark of originality. * * *

George Melford, * * * was fortunate in his selection of Antonio Moreno for the role of the Wildcat, but the same cannot be said regarding the casting of Estelle Taylor as the heroine. * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—* * * The story is rather trite, but the action is heroic and sustained. Should be a splendid circuit feature that will please all classes and sorts, free from extreme sex and stirring as well as romantic. * * *

WORLD—* * * The background surrounds this musical comedy film with its native atmosphere of adobe, pepper trees and Spanish donkey trains. There is also a real wildcat, which in many ways was the most energetic and convincing actor of the cast. * * *

"The White Moth"—First Nat'l Strand

AMERICAN—* * * "The White Moth" * * * is much more elegant than convincing. It is one of those films that appeals to a certain element of movie patrons; the kind who choose always to have cream puffs instead of the more substantial roast beef. * * *

DAILY NEWS—Barbara La Marr says this is the best picture she has ever made. Maybe she's right. * * *

It all depends upon how you like your Barbara La Marr. * * *

Beautiful sets, good photography, Babbie at her best (?), a naughty scene or two—that's "The White Moth." * * *

EVENING JOURNAL—Maurice Tourneur has produced the story with minute attention to details of Parisian atmosphere * * * Barbara, who is very well cast for the role, does several dances, and the picture will interest those who like that sort of a story. * * *

EVENING WORLD—Anything, estimation, that Maurice Tourneur directed the screen is worth while. * * *

And so, if you take our advice, journey to * * * see "The White Moth" picture, we think, is one of the most * * * we have seen in months. * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * is almost silliest picture we ever saw and yet we not, that it will make millions for it duceers. Right here we predict that it heralded as a box-office attraction all the country after it leaves the Strand T because of a lot of scenes which verify suspicion that we were gazing on almost silliest picture we ever had seen. C story we shall say nothing. The tale is and for us to comment on it would more so. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * its brilliant setting, proves to be a fairly popular specimen. * * *

Maurice Tourneur has provided a decorative setting for an artificial story, way Tearle shares the honors with Barbara La Marr. * * *

POST—* * * Whoever induced Barbara La Marr to do this picture did her a turn. Just about two more things like one and her last week's effort, "The She of Dan McGrew," will cook her good the estimation of all persons possessing the slightest intelligence. * * *

SUN—* * * "The White Moth"; then, he described as a typical motion picture Parisian night life as seen through the of a Hollywood director. That is to s is dripping over with scenes of nudgy gamey views of frolics in the Latin qu of Paris. * * *

TIMES—* * * It is true that this picture is to a certain extent an attractive entertainment, as it contains exotic and interesting scenic effects with beautiful lighting. But the story that limps through different scenes is filled with exaggerated situations, which would never have been accepted if Mr. Tourneur had been intent on fashioning a masterpiece. * * *

WORLD—* * * we do say that are scenes of interior decoration of splendor. We still can't quite understand why Tourneur neglected to put a grand and a radio in that bath room. * * *

This will be my least term as president of the M. P. T. O. of New York State. My time has been freely given to exhibitor organizations in the past, but my own private business now requires my complete attention. As an individual exhibitor with a large investment, however, I cannot help but recognize the growing menace to the independent theater owner from within and without the industry and see plainly the great benefit to me, as a private person, of a firmly welded national organiza- tion."

Tips to Projectionists
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Coronto, Ont.—Some tips which may prove valuable to projectionists in the care and operation of their machines, are reprinted below, from "The Canadian Moving Picture Digest":

Many projectionists use a typewriter cleaning brush for brushing out bits of film, etc. from their machines. This is not always effective. If your theater owns an electric vacuum cleaner with an attachment for cleaning curtains, rugs, etc., it can be passed into this service, as the strong suction easily removes all traces of lint and dirt without damage to the machine.

A medicine dropper or fountain pen filter is a very handy and neat way of applying cement when making splices such as even doubling up single reels on double reels. The dropper is sucked full of cement and by pressing the rubber bulb a neat line of cement can be drawn along the scraped edge on the film to be spliced."

By DANNY

And supercilious attitude. The "higher-and-mightier-than-thou" stuff. Pulled by some newspaper critics. And other critics of the motion picture. Which tends to make many of us ill. Including your humble servant. Where they stand on the mountain top and disdainfully look down at pictures. Ad picture people. And have a great time "kidding" them. This happened most outrageously a few weeks ago. When a certain critic of a New York newspaper evidently thought he was smart. In his manner of treating the opening of "The Sa Hawk." Later he retracted some of his ideas. But much damage had been done.

You, Mr. Exhibitor, may have the same sort of treatment to deal with in your town. And there is only one way of handling it. Go right to headquarters and complain. Tell the owner of the paper. Tell him the critic can criticize to his heart's content. Knock as often as he wishes because in these days of better pictures the boosts must come faster than the knocks. But tell him you don't want pictures "kidded" and spoiling fun at them.

This country is suffering from an impaired credulity. Arguments appearing in the Monday morning papers on differences of pulpit opinion on the subject of Christ automatically tends to deteriorate youth's faith in God; oil scandals deteriorates youth's faith in their Government; violating the statutes, such as prohibition, deteriorates youth's faith in law. We must not allow the motion picture industry to deteriorate youth's faith in Life.

As we automatically become stabilized, so we must stimulate the public faith in this business as a stable industry.

These are old words. Old thoughts.

New Finance Unit

Consolidated Plans Six Million for Investment—New "Lab" for Hollywood

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Los Angeles—Construction of a $2,500,000 laboratory in Hollywood next Fall and the expenditure of $6,000,000 by January, 1925, in the financing of pictures are planned in the program of the Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., of New York, as made public here.

The financing of motion pictures is part of the original program of Consolidated since the Erbograp, Republic and Craftsmen laboratories were merged. It is quite likely that a sum of money will be set aside for the financing of Eastern-made productions as well.

"The Guilty One"—F. P.-L.

Rialto

AMERICAN—If the photographer gets the credit for making Agnes Ayres look so well * * * then she should insist that the one who manned the camera * * * be a permanent fixture in all her films.

Joseph Henabery, * * * does a fair job. * * * it is far better than the usual run, although it is nothing to get excited about.

Miss Ayres has been supplied with an exceptionally good cast. * * *

DAILY NEWS—There's a nice murder to chill your overheated veins * * * Agnes Ayres helps along the drop in temperature with her usual icy presence. * * *

If you want to give your imagination a rest, "The Guilty One" is highly recommended.

EVENING WORLD—* * * "The Guilty One" is another one of those "mystery" plays in which the accent should be placed on the miss. * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—"The Guilty One" is a story of a murder and who did it. * * * We cannot tell whether these fictitious people are really uninteresting or whether they were uninteresting only to us. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * It proves to be an interesting picture, sustaining the suspense until the end * * * * * it is dramatic and tense. It is a very good offering.

Agnes Ayres is pretty * * * Edward Burns, Stanley Taylor, Craufurd Kent and George Seigman make up a good supporting cast. * * *

POST—* * * starts out like one of these neglected-bride-turns-to-other-man-for-comfort stories and ends up with a thrilling murder mystery. * * * But creaky as it is in construction, both halves are quite interesting. * * * is better than lots of 'em, and you'll get an hour of honest entertainment. * * *

SUN—Murder and blackmail and Edward Burns are the only interesting features of "The Guilty One." * * *

TELEGRAM—* * * "The Guilty One" * * * staggered along manfully in an effort to be as dramatic as its name implies. That it fell and slipped more often than it was able to stand up doesn't matter much, for in every way it was a perfect vehicle for Agnes Ayres. * * * The supporting cast proved less interesting * * * with the exception of Stanley Taylor. * * *

TIMES—* * * contains quite an interesting story, weakened, * * * by a rather hasty ending. Joseph Henabery, * * * has extracted some really impressive situations * * *

This is a picture well worth an hour of one's time. It has certain weak spots, but it is a good entertainment.

WORLD—* * * This story of misguided love and tiresome mystery is worth seeing by virtue of the fact that it has in its cast a young man relatively new in the field who will do better. * * *

The Covered Wagon

THE COVERED WAGON, one of Paramount's FAMOUS FORTY, will be released to exhibitors on September 8th.

I don't believe there is a showman in this business who won't concede that THE COVERED WAGON is the greatest box-office attraction available to picture houses this Fall.

You know its record as a road show—59 weeks at the Criterion Theatre, New York, 34 weeks in Hollywood, 23 weeks in Chicago, 22 weeks in Boston, 30 weeks in London, 16 weeks in Paris, and similar runs in other cities. A record absolutely unprecedented in film history in respect to length of runs, size of audiences and dollar receipts.

The beauty of it is that the gold mine of box-office dollars in THE COVERED WAGON has hardly been scratched.

In playing this picture, you will simply have to revise all that experience has taught you about the show business and about your theatre. You will break your money and attendance records. Yes. But you will do more than that. You will, in addition to every one of your regular patrons, get hundreds of people who never go to movies. You will tap the outlying districts as you never have before. You will have elements doing gratis boosting for the picture that have never tied up with you before. You will be amazed, as we were and are, at what this great picture can do.

THE COVERED WAGON has become more than a picture; it is an American institution. It is the one picture now available to exhibitors that everybody in America feels that they must see. You can book nothing approaching it for the cash it will get and for the prestige it will bring your house.

When you consider that THE FAMOUS FORTY, besides THE COVERED WAGON, includes 2 Valentino pictures, 2 Cecil B. DeMille, 3 Swanson, 3 Meighan, 3 Negri and 26 other Big Ones—no wonder the showmen are flocking to book!

Six Yearly From Ritz

...I want to say here that the star who is not Harold Lloyd", he said.

Other interesting statements made by Williams follow:

That Ritz has purchased the picture rights to "Cobra". It will either be made as a Valentino vehicle or by one of the directors Ritz has engaged. Williams will leave for the Coast shortly concerning the production of the play.

That twenty influential men have become interested in the launching of the Ritz proposition and that each of the group has evidenced its sincerity by depositing funds in banks.

That forty exhibitors, none of them allied with First National have taken a financial interest in the organization.

That one individual, now interested in the picture business has definitely pledged to advance money to the extent of $1,000,000 for the use of one producing unit.

That Ritz will be controlled by a cabinet of five which will pass on matters of importance in connection with the operation of the organization.

It was announced that George Kleine has resigned as chairman of the board of directors. Later, Williams said he expected to announce his principal financial affiliation in about ten days and that Kleine would not be replaced by any one individual. The cabinet of five will function instead.

C. L. ("Bill") Yearsley, associated with Williams in Australia and of recent years, a co-worker with Williams before the latter's connection with First National ended will join Ritz the first of the month as "right hand man" to J. D. Yearsley will carry no other title, but Williams explained that Yearsley will always occupy that post, no matter who may in or leave the company. Harry J.ohn, former foreign manager of Metro will be another member of the cabinet, but the remaining three were not named.

Williams said he planned to develop Ritz into another First National. He declared that Valentino will prepare his first Ritz picture as soon as "The Sainted Devil" is completed for release. Present at the luncheon were Harry Cooper, an associate of Williams' of many years' standing, Dr. Jacobs, his attorney and Valentino's personal secretary.

Dr. A. H. Giannini of the East River National Bank with which Williams is doing business was another speaker. He spoke briefly but stressed the ability of Williams as an executive.

No mention was made of distributing arrangements.

Story Counts Most

"Give me an abandoned woman with a child—one who deserves human sympathy—and I'll give you a box office production every time. And that, with the trimmings of excellent production, fine settings, good direction and expert supervision, was the strongest feature about 'Lilies of the Field.' It was a big success, as was also 'Black Oxen.'"

"Production of motion pictures, is as simple as A. B. C. as soon as any producer learns the fundamentals. It's just as mathematical as putting up a building. It's easy. In fact, it's so easy, it's almost pathetic. And yet there are a lot of producers and directors out in California who are continually beclouding the production of pictures in an air of mystery. We've got to overcome these clouds of mystery, because there isn't any mystery about it. The trouble with many of these directors is that they get lost in their own fog."

"They need someone to steer them, someone to coach them. They go blindly ahead producing from their own viewpoint failing to take advantage of dramatic situations, not making closeups or long shots when they should be made. It takes someone of unusual experience—a trained newspaperman who has a showman's angle, for example—to guide them. In First National we have just such a man in the person of Earl J. Hudson, who is personally supervising our own productions, and much of our success in the last year can be attributed to him."

Touching on his well-defined attitude toward production in California as compared with the East, Rowland said:

"I don't believe in California. The viewpoint is distorted. Out there they think that good motion pictures can't be made anywhere else. But we are not deceived. First National is coming to New York. We're not going to get rooted to California. We're going to get rooted in New York. New York is the greatest story locale in the world and has every advantage to offer. Besides, I consider it impractical to have production and the general office of the company separated by 3,000 miles, so we are going to bring our production to the Atlantic Coast."

Federal Court Dismisses Action in Omaha—Appeal Again Planned

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Omaha—Federal Judge Woodrough has sustained an argument supporting a motion to dismiss the $750,000 suit brought by Charles Binderup of Minden, Neb., against eighteen distributors. Attorneys for Binderup state they will immediately file an appeal with the Circuit Court.

The argument that consumed four days was made after a trial that took almost four weeks. Binderup broke all records for remaining in the witness box when he testified for two weeks.

Binderup charges that the distributors had violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. He was former operator of a circuit of houses in Southeastern Nebraska and charged he was unable to get any films.

Judge Woodrough's opinion was written on sixteen pages legal foolscap. He said in part:

"There is no evidence that the defendants violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. It is evident that some members of the Board of Trade organized by the film men expressed their belief that Binderup was doing what they called 'crooked' work. Indeed, the evidence shows that more than one person came before the board and charged that such was the case. About non competitive conditions in Binderup's territory, there was no question whatever with them. More than there can be with us here on this trial. The evidence shows that Binderup had such secret and special arrangements with the distributors, not unlawful in themselves, that practically making his territory closed one.

Baltimore Deal On

Whitehurst's Century Theater Will Be Either Sold or Leased—Negotiations on for Some Time

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Baltimore—A deal is on for the disposal of the Century theater by the Whitehurst interests. In an interview published in the Sun, Thomas D. Spriero says:

"For some time now, officers of the Century theater have been negotiating with a well-known film-producing firm, which has come to us with two propositions for taking over our theater.

"The deal now is almost agreed on, although I would not feel justified in mentioning the name of the other company. One of the most important objections by our firm to the agreement is that the other company wants to include part of the program at the New.

"The film-producing company already has many other motion-picture theaters in other cities and is seeking to establish a house here so as to be its own distributing agent for the films it produces.

"The proposals made our company are the best we ever have received and I should not be at all surprised if one of them were accepted. They involve either the sale outright of the theater or the leasing of it on certain terms that would be agreeable to us.

"This deal does not, however, affect the other motion-picture houses controlled by the local company."

T. O. C. C. Boosting Harrison

Binderup Loses

"All the defendants did, by their conduct, was to bring about an end to this condition and to open this territory to competition, and by so doing were within their rights."

Woodrough further, in the opinion, declared that he was unable to figure out any basis upon which an estimation of damage could be made.

Binderup, although disappointed with the decision, stated he would seek an appeal.

Dan Van Dusen, associated with Irving Baxter, Norris Brown and attorney Van DeBerry of Minden in the case, stated:

"It is proper that my comments should be made in a higher court upon an appeal. The fight against the defendants with unlimited means at their disposal has been a drain upon the resources of my client and this only, may prevent an appeal. As a citizen I am impressed with the helplessness of a single individual in seeking relief from the evils at which the Sherman Anti-Trust Act are directed. It is hard to keep one's faith undiminished. Apparently a decision Film men from all over the United States is not as persuasive as I had supposed. I am confident the evidence convicts the defendants."

Attorneys Seabury and Keough, of New York, and Arthur Mullen, W. Rose, and Eugene Blazer of Omaha, representing the defendants made no comment on the verdict except an expression of their satisfaction that the court had upheld their arguments.

Film men from all over the United States, had been in attendance at the trial for five weeks. All of those in attendance were former members of the Omaha Film Board of Trade and former managers of offices at Omaha. The list includes Harry Graham, Pathe manager at St. Louis; C. A. Holah, of the Fox home office; "Curley" Calvert, formerly with Universal; C. A. Peavey, with F. B. O., at Cleveland and Charles Taylor, former Select and Pathe manager at Omaha.

"The Director"

His the responsibility. His the possibility. And what does he do with this vast opportunity? How does he accept this stewardship?

When Benjamin Franklin had a problem to work out he drew a line. To the right of it he placed his plus marks. And to the left his minus signs. As the various thoughts occurred and he shaped his decision. And if, in conclusion, there were more minus signs than plusses he rejected the idea. And, vice versa, decided to adopt it if the plusses were sufficient.

And so one considers what the director has done with his possibilities. And his stewardship. And while there are many minus signs the plusses are really in the majority. In many instances he has failed; failed dismally at times. And he has given Dame Opportunity a terrible crack on the jaw. In this he has also caused huge losses to those who offered him the responsibility of handling their money, and their hopes. There have been cases of laxity; of carelessness; of downright sheer stupidity that have blasted the hopes of many would-be producers.

But, withal these minus marks, the director has made great and magnificent strides in the right direction. And the possibilities of his future are bounded only by the limitations of his vision. One needs only a brief glimpsing of the first half of "The Ten Commandments" to realize what possibilities are there for those who would climb the mount. Or to see what Frank Lloyd has done with "The Sea Hawk," and the simplicity of appeal of "Abraham Lincoln" to appreciate what various avenues are open for those who would strive. One needs only to think of the marvelous treatment of satire as handled by Lubitsch in "The Marriage Circle;" of Chaplin in "A Woman of Paris" to realize that new doors are constantly being opened. Where they lead no one knows—not even director's themselves.

THE ONE BIG AID

There is one door open through which anyone may see: that which leads to the Room of Understanding—the meeting place of writer and director. And here is probably the most abused of all possibilities—the working arrangement, the appreciation of script possibilities and directorial limitations.

Might this query be put to the leaders of this business: What, outside of a few external schools, is being done to develop men and women in the intricate art of canning fiction and drama as Swift cans beef? What is being done to develop men and women to transcribing the spoken word, the written word, to visual action? Because the writer—regardless of the name—is a unit of liason between two great deficiencies:

First: the deficiency of the author to technically express himself in terms of the screen.

Secondly: deficiency in the director in his inability to interpret the author's book or play in picture form. By their very psychology directors are not desk men.

They are not the type to sit at a desk tediously working out situations. They know the big moments which must develop—the punch scenes. Undeniably they know how to build into any story certain prescribed formulas which are assured of being liked at the box office. But the coming director—many of the old ones are either too set or satiated in their own ideas to accept new ones—must learn dramatology—the technique of story telling on paper—or he will fail in this vastly important essential to directing. Unless he can build his own organization to include such a worker.

Look at the great combinations of writers and directors who have reached important places? See how Cecil DeMille and Jeanie Macpherson work together. The combined result of Rex Ingram and June Mathis gave the world "The Four Horsemen." And this is said in no desire to detract a whit of what Ingram gave this grand production. Rather otherwise. But the combination was there. Back further when Ince had Gardner Sullivan working with several directors. No one attempts to decry the great work Francis Marion did with the Rocketts and Phil Rosen in working out "Abraham Lincoln" or what she did with Frank Borzage in preparing Norma Talmadge greatest of all pictures, "Secrets."

These material combinations means something. For weeks past Emmett Flynn has been in consultation with Edward Gouling on "The Dancers." He was brought from the Coast by Fox to work it out. Goulding, today one of the highest priced writers in the business, could not go to the Coast. So Flynn came east. That is as it should be.

THE COMING LEADERS

Rarely in one season, or year, has the new blood of the profession leaped to the fore as today. And they have established themselves rather well, in several instances notably. Famous has sounded the tocsin for new blood and has placed the megaphone in the hands of five men who have hitherto never directed. Among these is Paul Bern, of whom much is expected. Bern has had excellent training. Monta Bell is one of the newcomers from whom much is anticipated. His first, "Broadway After Dark" brought joy to producers generally. He spent so little time and money doing it. Trained under Chaplin, with a background of newspaper experience, he was offered several contracts after his work with Chaplin became talked of. And after his first he was besieged with offers. He promises to go far. Hunt Stromberg stepped a long way forward when he not only directed, but also produced "The Fire Patrol" which is on the independent market. Only a few years ago Hunt was doing publicity for Tom Ince. If he can keep on stepping out as he did in his first he will be marked definitely for a place. Warner's are giving Millard Webb, formerly an assistant to Sydney Franklin a place in their list directors, as well as James Flood, who was assistant to Lubitsch. Warner's and Famous seem to lead the list of producers giving new blood a chance, although First National is also trying to start out new men to follow Dick Rowland's belief. Which is this:

"THE MOST URGENT NEED OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY TODAY IS NEW BLOOD IN THE DIRECTORIAL AND WRITING FIELDS."

IRVIN WILLAT

MR. WILLAT has been distinguished in the past by such noteworthy successes as "Behind the Door," "On the High Seas" and "The Heritage of the Desert."

In "Wanderer of the Wasteland," he has produced a great picture that is destined to make screen history. It is the first feature picture produced entirely in natural colors by the amazing Technicolor process.

Brilliant in its beauty, gripping in its strong drama, "Wanderer of the Wasteland" marks the pinnacle not only of Irvin Willat's career but possibly of motion picture progress to date.

Playing to the Fan

By Clarence Badger

Directors must make motion pictures to please someone. They must have in mind some critic whom they strive to satisfy.

The persons I try to please include the man and his wife who live next door to me, the grocer and his children, my banker and lawyer, the man who buys my shirts and collars from the store, and his sister who is a stenographer. Pictures should be made soundly and unless the subject is a fantasy in the order of "The Thief of Bagdad" they should not ask too great a stretch of the imagination. Careless production is unforgivable. Historical and technical details should be accurate.

But I do believe that 90 per cent of the 50,000,000 who attend motion picture theaters every week seek entertainment and I am always willing to make concessions in order to provide that.

What people want in the way of entertainment only they themselves can tell me. They are my critics and since they can't come to me to tell me what they want, I go to them. I make a sort of duty of attending picture theaters. I attend the showing of all kinds of pictures and often see the same one four or five times, each time in a different class of theater or in a different neighborhood.

I make a mental note of what pleases the majority and what fails to please. Whenever business calls me to a different locality I always manage to find time to attend a few shows although I may have seen the pictures a dozen times before. It is interesting, sometimes amazing and always instructive.

Pictures Now and Then

By MAURICE TOURNEUR

It was just ten years ago that I arrived in America and I recently completed my fifty-second picture to be made here. Previous to this I made pictures for several years in France. Looking back I cannot help but invite a comparison between the way pictures were made then and now.

The first thing that impresses me is the money involved in the business today. Ten years ago if we had fifteen thousand dollars with which to make a picture it was regarded as ample. Today the same picture would cost one hundred thousand dollars. This difference represents to me an artificial inflation in the price of materials and salaries that seems unnecessary. We made good pictures then and they made money.

It is difficult to select any one branch of motion pictures that has made greater strides toward perfection than any other. The keynote in motion pictures has always been realism. It was possible to make a motion picture from a stage play and put realism in it by taking scenes using the actual locations referred to in the play. It eliminated a lot of explanatory conversation and allowed people to get out into the open. Consequently the early pictures were principally exteriors.

Today, lighting by artificial lights has progressed to such an extent that many directors will not bother with exteriors, preferring to build their sets on the stage and fight them artificially.

Ten years ago we would probably use the same settings for interiors as were being used on the stage. This, however, was done for only a short time. The work in this department attracted architects, decorators and artists and it was only a short while before realistic settings were being built on the studio stages. Today it is possible to reconstruct almost anything or any place for a motion picture.

Thru the constant efforts of trained men in the mechanical end of the business there have been brought about great improvements in photography, developing, printing and projection.

Color photography has been experimented with during all this time with indifferent results. Today there are as yet only two or three successful processes. Possibly it is because the demand for color photography has not been great that no greater strides have been made. To detach some essential part of the picture such as a dream or an allegory, I think it lends emphasis. But for the entire picture to be in color is not necessary in my opinion.

After ten years I feel that we are just beginning. Everyone engaged in the business is striving for improvement. Directors are quick to grasp anything new that will improve their product. Then, as long as that is the attitude toward motion pictures, in ten years more they will have attained greater heights than they have in the past ten years.

Women—and the Films

By Irving G. Thalberg

Woman is the potential audience of any play or motion picture. It has been proven that the feminine mind responds more enthusiastically to motion pictures and takes more interest in them.

Records show that about three-fourths of matinee audiences, or even a larger percentage, are women. Women do not take their entertainment passively. They are good "word-of-mouth" advertisers, and they are usually the means of bringing their husbands and families to the theaters.

That is why I say that pictures should be made primarily for the feminine mind. A picture that will please women will please men, but the reverse cannot be counted upon.

An excellent example of this is "Why Men Leave Home" which John M. Stahl has filmed. The stage production ran for some time in New York. The play was an excellent one, but it was not a tremendous success, commercially, because it got its comedy at the expense of women. The women in the story were "goats" for all the by-play, and comedy touches. As a result, the attendance at matinees was very light, and the evening audiences were almost exclusively men.

Later, when the play was made into a picture, Stahl made the leading male character the goat for his comedy, and did so without altering the story to any appreciable degree.

The result—the picture is tremendously popular, and is drawing nearly as many men as women to the theaters.

Women are dominant among the theater-going public.

The Greatest Box Office Attractions as Selected by 5,000 Exhibitors

(Editor's Note—Several months ago "Photoplay" conducted a contest to discover the greatest box office attractions enrolling 5,000 exhibitors in the contest. The result, extremely interesting, is presented below through the courtesy of James R. Quirk, publisher of "Photoplay.")

The result of the box office ballot showed the eight leading drawing cards among stars were:

- |                   |                |
|-------------------|----------------|
| Mary Pickford     | Thomas Meighan |
| Douglas Fairbanks | Norma Talmadge |
| Gloria Swanson    | Harold Lloyd   |
| Pola Negri        | Tom Mix        |

The eight leading directors, with box office drawing power, were:

- |                     |                     |
|---------------------|---------------------|
| Cecil B. De Mille   | Marshall Neilan     |
| David Wark Griffith | William C. de Mille |
| Rex Ingram          | James Cruze         |
| Allan Dwan          | George Fitzmaurice  |

In commenting on the vote and the result Quirk said:

The verdicts presented on these pages are the result of ballot of 5,000 exhibitors, owners of all classes of motion picture houses, from the great, full-orchestrated picture palaces New York, to the ten-cent houses of the back streets of the great cities and the smallest hamlets.

Each was asked to name "the six most consistent box-office attractions" among stars and among directors, those whose names when presented to their patrons in connection with productions meant good business and good profit.

It was not, in any sense, a popularity contest, but a straightforward question to business men who can actually determine the value to themselves of the names of stars and directors.

At first glance there are many surprises. Where, for instance, is Valentino? Where is Chaplin? Why should Tom Mix come ahead of Pickford and Fairbanks? Why is C. B. De Mille chosen ahead of D. W. Griffith? Why is James Cruze, who has made four outstanding box office successes in one year, placed behind Allan Dwan, Marshall Neilan, and William C. de Mille? Why should a comparatively new star from abroad, Pola Negri, come ahead of the juvenile wonder of the screen, Jackie Coogan, who was ninth? Why should Richard Dix and Ramon Novarro and Reginald Denny, featured strongly only within the past year, precede Barthelmess? Where are the Gishes? What of Charlie Ray and Bill Hart? What of Corinne Griffith and Barbara La Marr, two stars whose names today mean "standing room only"? What's happened to Constance Talmadge?

I have tried to prepare a list of the basic elements of popularity of stars with the public and with the theatre owner, in the hope that it may offer the explanation for their vote.

- Popularity with public based on:
  - Personality and looks in men.
  - Personality and beauty in women.
  - Acting ability.
  - Consistency and dependability of the stories and productions in which they appear.
  - Frequency of pictures.
  - Character and personal life.
  - Long established standing.
  - Exploitation.
  - Intelligence and business judgment reflected in consistent productions.
- Popularity with exhibitors based on:
  - Popularity with public.
  - Ability to make money on their pictures.
  - Consistency of production that insures certainty of profit.
  - Exploitation of star and productions by producer, added insurance of profit.
  - General character of pictures assisting exhibitor to maintain the standards of his house.

It is elemental, of course, that a star is of no value to an exhibitor when the price charged for the picture is so high that he cannot make money, although the exhibitor is often forced to play a picture to maintain the position of his theatre with the public and to keep the picture away from a rival theatre. This is possibly the explanation of the relative positions of Fairbanks and Pickford and perhaps of D. W. Griffith among the directors. Then, too, their recent pictures have been shown first at regular show houses at increased prices, and naturally that does not please the regular exhibitor. C. B. De Mille's pictures are consistent money-makers for the exhibitor. Valentino, a sensational box-office attraction, is not in the list perhaps because the exhibitor has had no new pictures of him lately, and his next picture will probably be "road-showed," that is, shown in regular theatres first, and this may also explain Chaplin's position. Cruze is comparatively new as a big money earner and his pictures have not gotten their work in yet. Ray's pictures have been infrequent and lacking in drawing power, and infrequency of pictures may explain the failure of Barthelmess and the Gishes and Bill Hart to register strongly. Corinne Griffith and Barbara La Marr are comparatively new as box office attractions. Constance Talmadge's recent pictures have not been good.

These are merely conjectures.

Were a vote taken six months from now the vote might be entirely different. Generally speaking a star is as good as his last few pictures.

James Cruze and William de Mille Examples of Different Schools in Direction

HERE are all kinds of directors. Some believe in thoroughly rearsing their scenes—like Griffith andubitsch—who work untiringly until they get what they want—and then there is the type of director who does otherwise.

In glaring distinction are the methods of James Cruze and William de Mille, both of the Famous Players organization, Mr. de Mille never goes outdoors for scenes if he can avoid it.

His main objectives are realism and naturalness of action. Perhaps the fact that he has filmed so many stage plays has influenced his methods. He believes in getting into his story immediately, so avoids superfluous "establishing" shots, particularly if they involve the taking of exteriors.

In an interview not long ago he said: "There is an old trick of the stage that, by comparison, makes plain my aims as a motion picture producer. When a dramatist wants to secure special attention from the audience, he has his characters whisper, rather than scream. I am trying to avoid 'picture screams.' I like to do my photoplay work by whispering."

So, under that influence, it may be understood why his scenes are intimate in character and his sets compact and as few in number as possible. The nature of the story or drama that he largely confines himself to lends itself admirably to his chosen production method. He has his sets built in units. For instance, where some scenes are laid in a drawing room, others in a dining room, others in a kitchen, others in a hall, etc., he has a complete lay-out of a house erected on the stage. Then in sequence, when his characters move from one room to another, he shoots them just as they move, setting his cameras first in one room, then another, as the action demands. He may have two or more of these units—representing houses, or a suite of offices—and works from one to the other, all in sequence. What few exteriors are necessary are usually shot all at once.

The Cruze Method

Cruze's method is just as different as day is from night. Probably no other director in the business goes about the making of a picture in the perienced and permanent. For that reason, its members have come to anticipate his every move, so far as the mechanics of production is concerned.

He gets his entire force together before any one turns a hand on the new picture. After the crew—assistant director, production editor, cameramen, film cutter, electricians, property men, designers, set-dressers, players—is assembled, he reads the script over with them and invites comments and suggestions. Each man or woman there, having in mind his particular part or duty, is often able to offer a suggestion that at once eliminates what might easily develop later into a serious mistake.

Then when everything is understood and set, he works like lightning. Scene after scene—never in any sequence—is only briefly rehearsed, for that is all that is necessary, and then shot. When he shot same way that Cruze does. His working unit is carefully chosen, except the railroad station sequence in "Hollywood," at the Long Island studio—the necessary members of his crew had come on ahead of him and had the set all ready. At 9:30 in the morning he started on that sequence, with Meighan, Hope Hampton, Lila Lee, Agnes Ayres, Mary Astor, Will Rogers, Hope Drown, Luke Cosgrave, all with their bits; a dozen or more kids and a hundred extras, representing travelers, station functionaries, etc., and at 2 p. m. he was ready to go back to California. He left the Eastern studio staff gasping in amazement and gasping for breath, yet there wasn't the slightest hitch.

His speed eliminates the necessity for overtime. He starts at nine in the morning and knocks off at four-thirty in the afternoon and it's a real day's work. He never loses his temper or gives the slightest display of temperament. Walter Woods says of him that he never knew any one of whom it could be as truthfully said that "he does everything right by instinct." His is the real thing in uncanny, "inherent" ability. Some people would call it luck—it isn't. Even in the projection room, looking at the rushes, he takes note of the reactions of all the other spectators to all the scenes, then immediately makes his choices and never changes them.

Let Nature Thrill

By Reginald Barker

The spectacular has a definite place in motion pictures. We all are irritated by the reaction resulting from watching the hero battle his way through the raging surf, overcoming the giant waves and at last weakly lumbering aboard the sinking ship in the life line.

However, I think it is a mistake to subordinate everything else to a big all scene. The story is the thing. The spectacular scene should be part of the story instead of having the story merely an excuse for the big all.

I believe the most satisfactory thrill-scenes are those in which nature is the part of one of the opposing forces. I think there is something great and fine in the conquest of nature's obstacles, a ship's battle with a storm, or man's defeat of a forest fire or an ice floe. I get more personal satisfaction in making such episodes in in filming a fire in a theater, a train wreck or an automobile crash.

There are limitations to the dramatic possibilities of a train wreck but there is no limit to the possibilities offered by a storm at sea or a river flood. Moreover, the struggles of man against nature are never as depressing as most kinds of conflict, and I believe it the duty of a director to make pictures of a kind that will send me the man who has seen it with a feeling that he is a better man for having seen it.

You don't have to try very hard to get a gripping scene from something in nature. Personally, I can be thrilled merely by watching breakers pound the shore or watching a forest of pines before the wind. When you see something spectacular, such as a forest fire, inject into it real people and give them something to do you can't help getting a thrilling scene.

I think such pictures as "The Storm", "Hearts Aflame", "Women Who Give" and "The Eternal Struggle" illustrate some of these points. I'm looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to the filming of "The Great Divide", a large part of which will be made at the Grand Canyon and on the Apache Trail in Arizona. It is one of the most worth while plays ever presented in America and the locale is different from anything I've ever tackled.

Fantasy on the Screen

By HERBERT BRENON

No one has a better right than Herbert Brenon to discuss the subject of screen fantasies. The first two great motion picture fantasies, "Neptune's Daughter," and "The Daughter of the Gods" were produced by him. The fact that he has been selected to produce "Peter Pan" for Paramount is striking testimony of the influence his genius in this respect has had upon the minds of the producers.

WHEN a motion picture director or stage producer begins to create a fantasy, there is one thing which is essential if his effort is to succeed. He must approach his task in the mood of a child.

It makes no difference how clever the fantasy may be. If it is without the spirit of naivete which distinguishes the childish imagination, it will fail in its purpose.

If, as in the case of "Peter Pan," a pirate or an Indian enters the story, it must be the child's idea of a pirate or an Indian. The adult conception of either would be as much out of place as the child's pirate on the decks of a real ship or the child's Indian in a real forest.

The same applies to animals which may be introduced in the fantasy. Children attribute to animals the powers of thought which they possess themselves. I have known children who held long conversations with the family dog or cat and who reported faithfully to their parents everything which the animals said. Children will sometimes create familiar spirits to whom they go for advice upon a variety of subjects. What these spirits say is frequently quoted as justification for some childish caprice. Fortunate, indeed, is the parent whose own youth is still vivid and who is able to sympathize with these artless dreams.

In the unweaving of the plot, vice must be presented according to the child's idea of being bad and virtue must conform to the child's idea of being good. It is the sweetest and the simplest things which must be brought out.

If I were asked to give a reason for the failure of two or three fantasies which have been well done, I should say it was because the director failed, in the first few hundred feet of film, to place his audience in an unworldly frame of mind.

The purpose of fantasy is to draw each worldweary person out of himself and make a child of him again. The moment a director treats any scene in a worldly fashion or mixes with it some of the world's cynical philosophy, he misses his point.

The child in us never really dies. The best proof of this is the reversion to childishness which comes with old age. In many of us the boy or girl asserts itself all through life in our actions.

How often do we hear a wife say to her husband, "You are nothing but a boy." For a fleeting moment, in some chance action or word, he has betrayed the eternal youthfulness which underlies all the worldly wisdom accumulated through experience.

Fantasy on the screen gives a greater opportunity for achievement than drama, farce, news-reels or educational matter. Despite this, it is the least exploited.

The reason is not due to a lack of Hans Andersons or Stevensons or Barries. It is because the powers which control production have yet to be convinced that fantasy would be popular with the public.

The present generation, who have not seen "Peter Pan" or who have not read the prose from which it is drawn may have an idea that great genius, Sir James Barrie, was giving a far deeper meaning to his fairy tale than ever he intended.

Barrie wrote "Peter Pan" for the purpose of giving back their lost youth to those who saw it. That he succeeded is proved by the fact that audience after audience, carried away by its beautiful simplicity, responded to Peter's plea from the stage and declared their belief in the existence of fairies.

To attack "Peter Pan" from any angle except that of a delightful, wholesome fairy tale would prove fatal.

are simply extraordinary exceptions, or happy mistakes. However, there are a good many bad novels written in a year, which do not detract at all from the few good novels.

Our conception of art is a painting by an old master who starved to death because his painting was not sold until one hundred years after his death. If rolled oats were being manufactured in his day, however, that old master might have been designing ads for them. Please do not take that as an indication that I see anything artistic in rolled oats advertisements.

Temperament

By Charles R. Rogers

There is no such thing as temperament among motion picture stars. Time was when we all believed that "stars" and "temperament" were synonymous, and that it was impossible to have one without the other.

I have only seen one or two situations in which a star exhibited anything that could be called "temperament," and that was when some producers would insist on imposing upon a particular star a story or vehicle that was plainly unsuited to the star's gifts and personality. To my mind, the star's refusal to jeopardize his (or her) position by appearing in such a medium was an evidence, not of temperament, but of intelligence.

You would not ask Thomas Meighan to play Hamlet, nor expect Harry Carey to enact Beau Brummel. It would be difficult to think of Al Jolson as an ideal Romeo, and it would be ridiculous to ask Priscilla Dean to play Juliet. Wallace Beery would hardly do for the part of the young clergyman in "Romance," and Louise Fazenda would never do as "Barbara Frietchie." Yet, I have known producers to endeavor to force rules upon various stars, compared with which, any of the above selections would be artistically correct.

Discovering Stars

By Rex Ingram

Under this caption Rex tells in "Photoplay" how he found—and made—stars of Alice Terry, Barbara La Marr, Rudolph Valentino and Ramon Novarro. In part he says:

"You don't have to do any discovering—they do it for you!"

"Ten out of every hundred extras are potentially successful players; two or three are star material.

"A little encouragement will make ninety-nine out of every hundred people do things on the screen that they did not believe themselves capable of doing.

"I first noticed Rudolph Valentino on the Universal lot and was impressed by his personality—while directing him I discovered real dramatic ability and high aspirations.

"Ramon Novarro is a truly great actor in the making.

"While I was dining in a restaurant one day I walked Barbara La Marr ... Soon after she was earning a thousand a week and approaching stardom."

But seriously, if a work of art hasn't enough about it to make it marketable in some way, it really isn't worth much to anyone. John Singer Sargent is a great artist, but he sells his pictures, and for huge figures. No one claims he is debasing his art, because there are persons who buy his pictures.

Any art which may be found in motion pictures must be regarded as an entirely separate art. We cannot judge a photoplay's artistic merits as we judge the artistic merit of a play, an oil painting, a novel or a poem.

Can Art Be Commercialized

By HUGO BALLIN

CAN art be commercialized? Of course. It is being done every day, and in every branch of art. When motion picture makers do it, however, it is cheap claptrap, hokum, debasing, and other things, according to a good many of the screen's critics.

Somehow, my idea of art is not that which will receive the commendation of the few; it is something big enough, and broad enough to reach the rest of us.

There are a good many thoroughly bad motion pictures made in the course of a year. This is pointed out triumphantly by those who see nothing good in the screen, and they go on to say that the few good pictures

Captain Frank Hurley Makes Pictures Under Difficulties and in Most Out of Way Places

meramen are always liable to unusual assignments. That is of the game. But—with due logies to all the others—few have as many difficult problems in re making as Captain Frank Hurley who was cinematographer for Shackelton South Pole adventure, followed this by making "The Tribe" in New Guinea.

The New York Times he reports some of his adventures, saying: "When our ship, the Endurance, collapsed, we were adrift in the hold of the ice packs 500 miles from open sea and 400 miles from land. The hold of the derelict, beneath ten feet of pea-soupy ice, were small, hermetically sealed cans treasure worth a king's ransom. Only $100,000 had been advanced for the motion picture rights to help finance the expedition at the outset, the two cans contained the picture negative representing the results of twelve months' labor. * * *

It was a decidedly shivery situation which led into the "soupy," freezing water which filled the splintered hold of the wrecked vessel., held up from sinking into 1,000 fathoms by frail tongues forced through her side. Going blindly and numbly about in the dark, freezing waters, directed by the feel of familiar objects, it took all my will power to prevent from becoming "cold-footed" and giving up. It necessitated several days to locate the cans of negative.

Hereafter those two cans and myself became inseparable. They drifted with the party on the ice floes six months, survived a seven-day-night boat escape through the pestuous Antarctic seas, and even when it became necessary to throw over the side part of our vital food-stuffs to lighten the boats from foundering I still clung to the films.

For five months they lay buried beneath the snows of Elephant Island until the rescue which carried the way back to civilization. No motion pictures ever taken were worth such dramatic and privations circumstances as the Shackelton "Bottom of the World" films. They were entirely free from faking or acting.

Upon my return from the Shackelton expedition, the great war was at its height. I was appointed official war photographer to the Australian military forces in France and Palestine and produced many of the famous war propaganda films, including a series known as "With Allenby in Palestine."

After the war Sir Ross Smith successfully accomplished the great epoch-making aerial voyage from England to Australia in twenty-eight days. I participated in the concluding 4,000 miles of the flight and produced the famous aerial film "14,000 Miles Through Air." My greatest difficulties were experienced when producing my recent New Guinea exploration film, "The Lost Tribe." Here all the hazards of the other adventurous enterprises were combined —the perils of the air, attack from hostile natives, and the ever-constant menace of tropical disease. The photo-mechanical problems far exceeded those of the Antarctic. While it was a comparatively simple matter to thaw out a few tons of ice and raise the solutions to workable temperatures, it was an entirely different proposition to reduce the tropical temperatures, as we had no refrigerating plant. At midday the temperatures beneath our awnings in the heart of New Guinea rose to 100 degrees and contained as high as 90 per cent, humidity. The stagnant waters of the lake on which we sailed remained almost constant at 90 degrees. The steamy heat had such a deleterious effect on the film that unless it was developed a few hours after taking it stuck together or developed fungoid spots. Mosquitos were a plague and my developing lamp attracted them in countless myriads, so that developing became an ordeal and aggravating torture. In order to prevent the gelatin emulsion from running off the celluloid in a slimy mess I toughened it with formalin. After development, a preliminary washing was given by lowering the frames of developed negatives into the lake.

Crocodiles Eat Scenes

One night there was a violent tug on the line, and upon hauling it up we discovered that a thrilling incident of the day had been snapped up and disappeared in the jaws of some hungry crocodile. When washing in the lake the frames of film had to be kept in violent agitation, or else millions of tiny shrimps fastened on to the gelatine and in a few minutes the best part of the picture would be eaten away. I was much gratified with the success of my first night's developing and hung the frames up to dry off. In the morning I was woefully disappointed. Myriads of minute May flies had shed their popal cases on the damp films overnight, and to my disconcerted gaze my efforts reminded me of overstocked tanglefoot fly papers. Still it was all hard-earned experience, and henceforth the vessel was enveloped in closely woven cheesecloth.

Sick of Eclairs

By Erich von Stroheim

The standard of appreciation of the motion picture going public is greatly and falsely underrated.

The public—the great body which takes its chief amusement in the form of motion pictures—is not the simple-minded lover of trash many persons and some producers believe. It might have been some years ago—when movies were more or less of a curiosity and drew people to theatres because they were a new form of amusement that was considered nothing more than the means of killing an hour of two—otherwise mental chewing gum.

But now, and for some time past, since the rapid development of pictures has greatly raised their cultural value, the public wants other than the rubbish upon which it was fed until surfeited. Because the "mush" was well attended, it was judged "giving the public what it wants."

They—the fans—are sick of chocolate eclairs, and now want meat in the way of motion picture stories. They want life as it is being lived by human beings and not the life of puppets guided by the all too obvious strings of authors who think dramas are woven on a standardized loom. They want to see life as set forth by the classicists, or is being written by great writers, or will be conceived by the fine minds of the future and not by the manipulators of the same old wires in the same old way.

And when I say life, I mean all grades of life—noblemen or peasant—picturesque or common place. A picture may have a frothy exterior but the foundation can be real drama and introduce sane psychology. A film may deal with ordinary people and be set in everyday surroundings and yet be far out of the ordinary if the theme and treatment present a novel and worthwhile viewpoint.

I am going to give the public the strong stuff of real human conflict—no matter what the dressing of the pictures may be—picturesque or drab—in my productions. I am not wolfing it alone in this, as other directors are judiciously doing likewise.

Writer and Director

By Paul Bern

There are only two kinds of writers who have real value either artistic or commercial.

The first is the writer who completely submerges himself and writes a continuity expressive of the personality of the director for whom he is writing.

The second is the writer so gifted and with so strong a personality that the director will submerge his own personality and create a picturization of the continuity as written.

Needless to say, for great results, as far as the finished picture is concerned, the first alternative is the better. After all, it is the intangible quality, the particular flair, the trend of the director's genius—all the indefinite qualities that go to make the completed object great or small.

The director who takes a completed continuity and faithfully transcribes it to the screen, usually betrays a woeful lack of initiative, imagination and creative ability, unless it be that he himself was one of the principal factors in the writing of this continuity. On the other hand, I can recall picturization after picturization of C. Gardner Sullivan's continuities made by directors good, bad and indifferent, all of which were effective, moving, excellent motion pictures; but, in most instances, they betrayed the quality of the writer rather than of the director.

Try for the New

By Hobart Henley

Sugar-coated drama in motion pictures must go, if the screen is to progress and increase in popularity with the American public. Wishy-washy stories that attain nothing more than a mediocre degree of dramatic appeal are a greater obstacle in the path of the cinema than any other single factor.

Near dramas with old "stand-by" situations will no longer be tolerated by motion picture patrons. A display of courage on the part of the producers in presenting real dramas on the screens of the world is highly essential at this time.

The successful man will be marked by a rare ability in sensing the public's appetite for screen entertainment to an extent that he is generally able to give his public the right type of story at the right time. But he will not be a member of a herd of sheep—so called—and follow the lead of someone else who has made a certain type of picture. For instance, he will not commence a sea picture immediately upon the success of someone's else sea picture.

The fear of attaining dramatic heights that involve tragedy on the screen is another handicap that has hampered producers. Stirring drama and stirring situations are needed to jolt the cinema trend into newer and higher achievements. The sugar-coating must be removed from situations. Such stories, as yet unscreened, are found among foreign literature particularly, but there is a large amount of them in our literature as well.

PICTURE MAKING IN THE OLD WORLD AND THE NEW

A Symposium of Discussion By Ernst Lubitsch, Dimitri Buchowetzki, and Victor Seastrom

ERNEST LUBITSCH, under the caption of "Why I Like to Make Pictures in America," states his case thusly:

Ever since I came to this country I have been asked to draw comparisons between European and American methods of producing motion pictures. My answer has invariably been: film is film, whether in Hollywood or in Berlin, and today, after most two years practical experience with American methods, I can only repeat that the actual process of making pictures is very much the same on both sides of the Atlantic.

However, there are certain elements involved in the making of motion pictures which are greatly in favor of the American producer. He has certain advantages over his European competitor that put the latter under a heavy handicap. I have given this question much thought. It cannot be explained by merely claiming technical superiority of the American motion picture industry or a more universal appeal of the American screen players.

The basic element that gives the American producer his advantage over the foreign producer is the very fact that he is making his pictures in America. The United States is by far the largest market for motion pictures and at the same time the only country in the world that is a self-sustaining market. Eighty per cent of the profits of the American producer come out of his own country. He does not have to worry about foreign markets. He sits right in the center of the circle that he covers with his productions. He is thoroughly posted regarding the demand for his productions, he is conversant with the network of economic and financial conditions that are liable to influence his market, and he is well acquainted with the taste of the public to which he has to cater.

The Comparison

Compare with him the European producer. He knows from the very beginning of his production that the sales in his own country will not even reimburse him for the cost of the production. He must keep his eyes fastened on the foreign markets upon which he depends for his profits. His primary consideration is the American market, but then he must also consider Latin America, and England, and France, and Scandinavia, and the Balkans, all countries in which the taste of the public shows wide differences. In trying to please them all, he compromises, and instead of being able to make his pictures with that singleness of purpose and unity of effort which is the prerequisites of good productions, he is forced to always look abroad, to serve two masters, as it were—all of which leads to compromises, heartaches, and inferior productions.

How well I remember the days when I myself with American money made pictures on the other side for American consumption; how well I remember our constant anxiety to please not only ourselves but also our American friends, our eternal question: will America like it? our harassing uncertainty of what America really did like.

The lot of the American producer is enviable indeed compared with that of the European producer. He can create out of the fullness surrounding him. If his eyes and ears are open, he cannot help but catch the spirit of this great country, and once he is in tune with the people upon whose response his success depends, he can go ahead making pictures with that surety and determination which is so vital for the creative artist.

No artist is without an audience. Just as there is no music if there is no ear to hear it, so the producer of motion pictures can make no pictures unless he has an appreciative audience backing up his efforts. The fact that the American producer has the great American public with him, combined with the other that he has gone ahead making pictures for the entertainment of this public without considering any extraneous influences, has made the American motion picture what it is today.

Without trying to do so, the American producer has gained for his productions what foreign producers have striven and failed to do: a truly universal, worldwide appeal.

AMERICA VERSUS EUROPE

By Dimitri Buchowetzki

THE motion picture is a form of art. Therefore, comparison of the American and European film can deal only with the manufacturers' viewpoint, since art is universal.

No one will dispute, I think, the statement that American methods are superior to those in Europe. The degree of superiority can be realized only after a close study of the factors which enter into the manufacture of film for the theatres.

Europe has lagged behind America in film production but this fact is not due to a lack of initiative. Circumstances made America the ideal place for the manufacture of film and the capital was forthcoming at a time when the industry needed it.

In the following table, I have set down the twelve things upon which the film industry depends for success:

1, Working capital; 2, commercial organization; 3, artistic organization; 4, theatre organization; 5, working facilities, electrical equipment, etc.; 6, material for scenario subjects; 7, directors, stars and leading actors; 8, architects; 9, cameramen; 10, second part actors; 11, minor players; 12, publicity organization.

In the table which follows, I have marked with plus or minus, America's position in relation to each one of these vital factors:

1, plus; 2, plus; 3, plus; 4, plus; 5, plus; 6, even; 7, plus; 8, minus; 9, plus; 10, minus; 11, plus; 12, plus.

From this table it will be seen that only two out of twelve factors are marked with a minus and one with an even sign. From this it will be seen that it is possible for a director to do infinitely better work in America.

Let us consider each point in turn. In the first place, American film producers have an abundance of capital. In Europe, where their market is much smaller, the film profits are much less and for that reason capital is not forthcoming to the same degree.

The American commercial organization is superb. Practically nothing is left to chance. It is possible for the producing company to estimate both cost and profit on each film because of the business-like methods which govern production.

Artistically, the organization of American productive methods is well-nigh perfect. In the studios of Hollywood and New York are gathered a larger body of expert craftsmen than are to be found in any other centers in the world.

The working facilities of the Paramount studio where I have directed my last two pictures are perfect. The extent and variety of equipment is a constant delight to one who formerly sought to achieve with the limited materials to be found in European studios.

I have marked number six, material for scenario subjects, with an even sign.

Scenario Methods

This point requires some explanation for the reason that two distinct methods exist. In Europe, the general inclination is to produce original stories for the screen. For this reason, the old world has made greater progress in creating a distinctly different type of literature devoted entirely to the screen.

In American studios, the tendency is to take only published books and magazine stories or successful stage plays for film material. While the finished article as it appears in film form is very fine in standard, the fact that the original prose from which it is made was written for another purpose makes it harder to achieve that standard. In Europe the prose is prepared for direct application to the screen. As a result it requires less work on the director's part to make that application. Both American and European producers have excellent subject matter, but it seems to me the American producer goes the longest way around to arrive at his goal.

In the matter of directors, stars and leading players there is no question that the American is supplied more abundantly than the European producer.

American architects are better technicians than their European brothers, but I think the latter are more artistic. In the old world, the studio architect has examples of architecture which, in all probability, mankind will never surpass. The cathedrals, palaces and castles of Europe must remain supreme. Architectural styles today may develop; they cannot originate.

In American studios, the cunning of the cameraman surpasses admiration. I have seen many European pictures where the camera work exhibited a rude strength such as one admires in Doric architecture. But the fine camera work of the American is comparable, in the same terms, only to the brilliance of the Italian fancy in the renaissance period.

I should like to deal with numbers ten and eleven, second part actors and minor players, together. I have marked the first with a minus and the second with a plus sign. In America the wealth of "atmosphere" available is a delight to the director. You can find every variety and description of person wanted. So thoroughly have they been drilled that a crowd of minor players are able to do anything which the director demands and do it well.

In the matter of second part actors, America falls behind. They are not to be found. Every director needs second part actors, that is, actors capable of doing some little bit of business which helps to develop a thought or suggest an idea. In Europe you will find many of these actors. They will never become great or even noted. Their work lies simply in doing small things well when the camera happens to focus upon them for a moment. In America this grade of actor is almost entirely lacking. Either players are very good and therefore well known, or else they belong to the class of minor players from which they will never emerge.

The final factor in the making of films in which America excels is in the publicity field. Newspapers, magazines and publications of all kinds have organized to supply the public with a never-ceasing stream of motion picture matter. Each year sees a greater flow of this material.

There are two reasons. One is the real interest which the public feels in everything connected with motion pictures and motion picture personalities. The other is the fact that

Preparation's the Thing

By James Cruze

ARROWED down to its final analysis, the making of a motion picture consists of only two steps—preparation and actual physical production. And of these preparation is far more important.

Preparation of a motion picture is not confined to the director and the writer who prepares the script. It is a detail which should be—and largely is—worked out by every member of the technical staff and the players who must enact the roles.

Too many times a director seems to consider that the preparation of a picture is his own particular little secret. It should be just the opposite. Trained cameramen, property men, technical advisors are invaluable in preparation, and their advice should be asked and their suggestions heeded throughout the period of preparation.

It seems to me it would be a wonderful thing for every director to live in the country—some place an hour from the studio. In the early morning hours, when the brain is fresh and the mental horizon wide, the director has opportunity to map out his day's work in the smallest detail. The obvious result is that the day's work moves steadily and speedily because the director knows just what he wants, and the staff and the players know exactly what the director wants.

It seems to me that too much stress cannot be laid upon preparation. This is the lesson every ambitious assistant should learn first of all. And he should learn to be broad about advice and generous in his mental viewpoint.

The Director of the Future

By Hamilton Smith

THOSE few men whose business association and confidence can make such distribution affiliations that they can approach reputable business men with a legitimate proposition and make good on it—these men will be not only directors, but students of narrative.

The motion picture editor, with all due regard to him, with few exceptions, selects his material from current plays and popular novels then passes it to his staff of continuity writers and from there to the director. Few plays and novels make good pictures. Why? For the simple reason that picture writing is an entirely new form of expression with a new form of expression with a new nomenclature foreign to anything in literature.

To the layman and to the majority of picture editors a short story is a story containing few words. As a matter of fact it is a matter of technique and a short story, although it runs ten million words, is, nevertheless, still a short story. The director of the future must be able to discriminate between a short story, a play, a novelette, a novel, a four-act drama or a three-act farce comedy. In the final analysis he will choose the story written for the screen by the trained competent motion picture writer. In other words, the director of the future must not only direct the picture, but he must have a fine sense of literature, the ability of straightaway narrative and a finer sense of business ethics.

Human Interest

By John M. Stahl

FOR the past few years motion picture production has been subject to vogues. In the old days, producers and directors chose or wrote stories that they thought would make saleable pictures, regardless of what type of theme or background belonged to.

But more recently, vogues have governed the making of films. During the last three or four seasons, the motion picture has been led by the hand through cycles of costume dramas, mother plays, melodramas, huge spectacles, farce comedies and light comedy-dramas. Each had its fling and then was cast aside for the next type of production.

Through it all, however, dating clear back to the cinema's beginning and carrying on to the last favored vogue, there has been one kind of release that has won its battles for popularity regularly and prosperously—the human interest picture.

The answer is that the people like it and want it. Human interest has been the most consistent element for success in picture production and it will continue to be as long as the people are susceptible to human impulses. Unfortunately, a number of our finest film spectacles have failed under the box-office test. Many others, no better from an artistic viewpoint and no more costly in the making, have made fortunes. The difference in the receipts has been directly traceable to human interest.

With this quality reflected sincerely in his characters and situations, a director can register as strongly in the audience's favor with a simple scene between two people as a spectacle can with an awe-inspiring mob of thousands. It all comes down to a matter of sentiment, of getting

"under the skin" of the theater-goer. The two people in the human interest situation mean something to the theater patron, but the countless throng, while impressive, is after all just a crowd filling the screen unless the spectator's interest and sympathies have been won over by the action.

Training on Observation as an Aid to Film Directing

By King Vidor

A MOTION picture director must train his powers of observation to the fine point of the newspaper reporter or the detective.

A director who makes pictures with "the human touch" is a keen observer of things large and small. In the greatest picture, its atmosphere is supplied by trivial things. I remember a picture in which the character of the "heavy" was planted by showing him cheating at solitaire. It was a trivial detail, yet it showed the type of the character, and the director who thought of that touch was a keen observer.

I do not mean by this that directors should spend their time observing the style of telephones used in Missouri, or the way the brakes of a flivver are adjusted. But for instance, how many times have you seen a screen doctor with a beard. Hundreds of times, haven't you? And how many doctors do you know who wear beards. I don't know any, personally.

I think we are realizing more and more the importance of "planting" atmosphere and character in pictures. Almost always this is done by trivial things, and keen observation picks out those trifling details.

In "Broadway After Dark" Monta Bell plants the character played by Adolphe Menjou by showing a bachelor apartment with a maid as a member of the staff of servants. To me, this was a fine touch, for Menjou was playing just the type of character who would keep a maid.

An Art or a Business?

By E. H. Griffith

INDUBITABLY, though in a varying degree, motion pictures are an art in all the definitions of the term. The question is still a live issue. The trouble is that both sides stubbornly shut their minds to a comprehensive consideration of the argument. They complacently take it for granted that the other side is all wrong and proceed to "high-hat" each other something awful.

Now, the subject is worth arguing about because it has to do with the very life of the motion picture and its perpetuation—its growth, or decadence. Both sides are right and both sides are wrong, dependent on the specific point at issue. But, when we postulate that the motion picture is an art we speak generally and theoretically, rather than specifically and empirically as do most of those who speak on the subject.

We have been urged by many to take the other side, and, probably, we could have made almost as strong a case, but it happens that we do not really believe that way. So we are prepared to prove that motion pictures are an art, and will debate it with artists of any class or weight, etymologists, or any other kind of philologists, producers, exhibitors, college professors, or street-car conductors, poets, or peasants. And, if any of these want to send a second with a challenge we choose for weapons, typewriters and the English language.

Here are nine definitions of art:
1—Skill in performance acquired by experience, study or observation;
knack.

- 2—Human contrivance or ingenuity, as in adapting natural things to man's use.
- 3—A branch of learning; a science; especially one, as grammar or logic, serving chiefly as a discipline or as an instrument of knowledge; specifically, in plural, the branches of learning taught in the academical course of colleges.
- 4—Learning or the field of learning;
- 5—The general principles of any branch of learning or of any craft.
- 6—Systematic application of knowledge or skill in effecting a desired result; also, an occupation requiring such knowledge or skill; a craft; as, mechanical or industrial arts.
- 7—Application of skill and taste to production according to aesthetic principles; such as application to the production of beauty by imitation or design, as in painting and sculpture.
- 8—Skillful plan; device; also cunning; artifice.
- 9—The black art; magic.

In short, an art is any production or performance in which imagination and taste preside over the execution. Imagination and taste are necessary, and employed to a degree, in the making of every motion picture. Dependent upon that degree every motion picture is artistic or otherwise. Whether motion pictures are always a fine art is quite another question. For that matter painting and sculpture are not infallibly art, sign-painting, and the chiseling of tombstones. It is not the fact that signs, extolling the merits of Sappho Silk Hose, Guaranteed Not to Run, are painted by a guy with one eye on the job, the other on the clock and his mind on how much he will be paid, that makes it any less art. Nor, is it the commercial motive of the swart Neapolitan cutting the virginal mar-

The Key to Good Pictures

By Edward J. Montagne

GOOD pictures are a result of the happy combination of creative forces, commonly called the organization. The closer this co-operation obtains the greater the effort. Whenever these forces clash, instead of harmonizing, the outcome is just as jarring as the discord sent forth by an orchestra when one or more members are playing off key.

The most vital cogs in the picture-making machine are the writer and director. Not that the others are of minor importance, but if either of these first two miss in their task, the efforts of the rest are in vain. We can watch photography; we can tear down sets and put them up again; we can even re-edit film—but if a director has shot a poor script, or if he has made a good one, no one can save it.

The key to good pictures, therefore, is good scripts, which means a good story, and sympathetic treatment of same. I firmly believe that two hands are better than one in the preparation of a script, and that the two hands to bring together are those of the writer and director.

When you have a writer who appreciates the fact that a director is capable of having ideas as well as himself, and a director who is broad enough to view the writer as an associate rather than as a nuisance, you have a happy union of two of the most important cogs in your machine.

Working together, day by day, one keeping alive the enthusiasm of the other; each trying, striving to build the other's thoughts to greater heights, they are bound to come through with something worth while. And in addition, which is very important, the director is visualizing his story, as the preparation of the script progresses, so that at its conclusion, it is not a case of reading a lot of cold, uninteresting type, but actually having a story vividly before him, which he is going to earnestly try to put on the screen.

Whenever I am engaged to do a script, the first question I ask is, "who is going to direct it?" I want to co-operate with the man from the first, rather than fight and battle with him later. I know from experience that every worthwhile picture I ever was associated with was the result of this sort of co-operation. And I also know that the other kind were the result of the same lack of co-operation, where the director either knew it all and did what he pleased, or where he came in cold, was handed a script and shot it, without the enthusiasm that only comes when you feel that you are making art of it.

Contemplate the marvelous teamwork of Rex Ingram and June Mathis on "The Four Horsemen"; the wonderful DeMille-McPherson combination, which has lasted for years; the pictures made by the William deMille-Clara Franger combine; the classics, never to be forgotten, contributed to the screen by Marshall Neilan and Frances Marion, and C. Gardner Sullivan and the Ince directors; the excellent pictures being made today by Fred Niblo and Bess Meredith—recall these, and many more which cannot be enumerated here because of lack of space, and you have the proof of my statement.

If I was a producer, I would hire a director about the same time that I hired the writer. The final result is worth the extra money spent.

Harmony of Thought Between Director and Writer

By Eve Unsell

"As ye sow—so shall ye reap" may fittingly be applied to all humans—save scenario writers, and, as they are scarcely ever human, it is not surprising that the proverb may be misapplied in such instances, for it is seldom so with them that, "As ye write—so shall ye screen!"

Thus it has often come to pass that credit for certain screen-offerings has been claimed, or disclaimed, by either writer or director, resulting often in such dire inharmony that some very fine picture combinations have been broken up thereby.

The obvious reason for such disruptions is lack of "close harmony" in script preparation. When writer and director are miles apart, in thought as well as in act, during the writing of adaptation and continuity, it is quite possible that when they finally come together the union will take place in the form of a fatal collision that will make any co-operation impossible.

Sometimes a writer turns in such an "ambiguous" script that the puzzled director is at a loss to know just what is the original intent and purpose of theme and plot. In such cases, the writer should be the last one to blame the director if, when the picture is finished, a quite different viewpoint than the scenarist's has been arrived at by the director.

The same results would follow if an architect, in drawing his plans, made his drawings so indistinct or involved that the builder was obliged to either guess at what was to be developed, or to throw away the old plan, and construct his building according to his own ideas. In such cases, if there were credit, the harassed director deserves the whole of it—and if not—the "ambiguous architect" deserves at least to share the discredit, if no to shoulder it wholly.

As the director is the "court of last resort," and really the master of the picture's ultimate fate, he can scarcely escape blameless, even if he has had to struggle with the handicap of a "foggy" or complicated continuity. All this might be avoided, or at least greatly obviated, by a sufficient understanding through conference and consultation between writer and director during script-making.

Such synchronization of thought between these two important factors of the production is bound to result to the good of the "box-office," as is instanced by such teamwork as that of the James Cruze-Walter Woods combination—which has produced some of the best sure-fire box-office successes of the past year.

Entertainment the Chief Purpose of Pictures

By Harry Rapf

I WOULD rather produce a picture that was entertaining and nothing more, than one presenting the deepest problem, or pointing the finest moral, or having the greatest educational lesson.

People do not go to the theater to be educated, or to have morals drawn for them, or to make a study of perplexing problems of life.

Aside from any beliefs of our own that a photoplay should improve the mind, or improve the morals, there is the audience to be considered. It is my personal belief that the audience should be considered all the time, for the audience does us the service of paying for our pictures, and thus keeping our business alive.

Art in motion pictures is a great quality, for real art will increase the entertainment value of the screen. But let us agree on what motion picture art is. On the stage, many people consider the highest theater art the presentation of murky plays in an uncomfortably small and tiny auditorium.

I attended one of these performances, and discovered that "high-brow" consisted of bad stage lighting, so that the players were hardly visible to the eye, a good many murders, much meaningless conversation, and a great deal of snarling and groaning and general unpleasantness. In fact, the show was a regular nightmare.

If that is art, I prefer hokum. If art means the development of the photoplay so as to increase its entertainment value, I am for it.

Monta Bell produced "Broadway After Dark" as artistically as almost any picture I have seen. And the artistry with which it was produced increased the quality of its entertainment.

The only purpose of the screen—the only purpose it can have—is to entertain. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is making pictures, not for the satisfaction of its executives or directors, but pictures which, we honestly believe, the exhibitors can sell to their patrons and have them come back for more.

An Art or a Business?

ble into the likeness of prone whiten-lambs with the legends "at peace" and "at rest" underneath, which prevents the creation of headstones from being an art. It is simply the lack of taste and imagination in the execution.

By the same token it is not the perfectly natural desire on the part of the producer to make money out of his picture which prevents his particular production from being art, in the truest sense of the word. If any motion picture isn't art it is because the touchstones of imagination and taste were not present in the alchemy, not because the ultimate motion of the fellow who signed the cheques was to keep the shirt on his back and the well-known timber wolf, from his front door.

Necessity is the mother of most motion pictures. Some external, usually material, demand causes most of them to be created. When the creative artist is impelled, rather by an irresistible urge to produce something of beauty, just for the sheer joy of creation, then motion pictures will be less a synthetic art. When Douglas Fairbanks first went into motion pictures it was, frankly, with the idea of making more money. This could not have been the impelling motive behind his latest work, which, in our opinion, comes close to giving him the title of the most artistic producer-director of the screen today. A flaming inspiration to do a thing of great beauty, regardless of any other consideration, must have motivated "The Thief of Bagdad." If, in the back of his mind "Doug" held the thought that no truly fine, sincere work of art ever failed of appreciation, and monetary recompense commensurate with the degree of its appeal and comprehensibility to the public, surely that does not make his superb picture any less a young master of a young art. There are always canvases, paints and brushes to buy, and models to pay.

In the strict sense of the term motion pictures can never be a business, though the insincere, the venal and the stupid will continue in their efforts to regard it as such. But, in the sense that it is a great, popular art which can be made to pay well based on absolute sincerity, devotion, sure knowledge and talent, it is a business—the most artistic business in the world.

Frank Lloyd Looks To The Future

In a recent issue of Kinematograph Weekly of London, Frank Lloyd says:

What will be the next advance in screen production; who will make it; how will it be made?

Often have these questions been asked, and many different answers have been returned, but there seems to be one important answer—motion pictures must be given a soul.

Whereas in the past, spectacle, technical novelty, elaboration and mechanical effect have brought about the greatest triumph, in the future progress must be made by artistic understanding, study and careful technical work. Where we have been creating symphonies in the future. Where we have been tricksters and assemblers in the past we must be realists and artists in the tomorrow of the films, and by 'we' I mean producers, directors, actors, authors, technicians—everyone interested in the preparation of a film play for the public.

No Longer a Novelty

The novelty of motion pictures is gone. We must not make attending the theater in the future a fad or a habit; we must make our productions compel interest, demand enthusiastic respect.

In five years the art of photography has developed more than in sixty years previously. Studio lighting has reached the point that it justifies recognition as a distinct science. Studio properties have become so perfect that they deceive expert craftsmen; we have miniaturized aeroplane wrecks and ship disasters, duplicated perfectly some of the finest architectural achievements in history, and we have made artificial spider webs. At a moment's notice we have injected spectacular incidents into weak scenarios and have manufactured thrills, suspense and romance to fit the occasion. In fear that our idea might not hit the mark, we have exaggerated it, and we have missed most of the subtlety, the delicacy, the superfine fabric which is real life, truly impressive and thoroughly satisfying to behold. There have been a few pictures which will always live as masterpieces of dramatic and kinematic achievement, but they are too few. The future success in studio work depends on those who know their subject, not on those who think they know it; those who observe, study and accurately interpret; for pictures must be a part of us; we must not manufacture a story to patch our weakness; we must build strength to match good stories.

Indeed the greatest advancement that can be recorded in the future history of the screen will be noted in giving the motion picture a soul—that inspirational depth it has little known before, and cannot progress without.

Who will advance the art of the screen?

Every man and woman interested in the making of a motion picture must do his or her full share.

Each His Part

The author must write well about subjects he knows intimately. It is necessary to have a train wreck, an automobile chase, a half dozen murders, million dollar settings in every story. But stories must have sincerity, a clearly defined moral, must accurately describe life—there must be real genius visible in the network of every theme. One real good situation may be sufficient to make a story an immortal triumph if it has quality—not just quantity of dramatic incident.

"The producer must assist the creators of screen plays by allowing sufficient time to make pictures correctly. No great masterpiece of art has ever been made according to a time clock. Money must not regulate a picture's greatness. One story may cost a million dollars, and another equally as impressive only fifty thousand. The producer must select his story wisely, and his directors and actors carefully. The producer must encourage new ideas, new methods, not establish a hard and fast rule which prohibits the progress of art.

"The director must study his story, must be a keen visualizer of life, of dramatic values and of types and characteristics. He must inspire his actors in their work, not command them or drive them. He must create the atmosphere of the production by his thorough understanding of his subject. His superior knowledge of the subject, his judgment in every emergency must be established and respected. He must lead, not direct, and still he must permit each actor to express his personality, his individualism, his ideas, lest his productions become overbalanced.

Better Actors Needed

"Perhaps the greatest advancement the screen is to know must come from the actor, for the actor is the one the audience sees and expects the most of. The actor must actually live his part, however small; he must know his character. He must not be visibly acting, his every gesture must be natural, typical and accurate. He must have poise.

"Today there are too few actors in the studio, which accounts for a few so-called stars appearing in so many pictures; so many pictures, some of them, that even the best of them have become more like machines than real people. But, until the screen can obtain new talent (not just new faces) for its histrionic duties, its progress is bound to be slow. There are too many actors and actresses on the screen today who have become successful because they are 'types' rather than 'artists,' which condition is responsible for so many changes in the popularity and commercial value of some players, and the steady increase in the success of others.

"Studio stock companies may develop to a certain degree new screen talent, but actors must have some stage training to qualify them for consideration in such stock organizations.

"The best acting talent in America today is in the stock companies where one actor must play many different roles, must become intimate with many different characters, must study every day, and must make his success by his knowledge of many things, not of just one particular type:

The Place of the Stock Company

"The greatest amount of new screen talent should come from these local stock companies. People who now would encourage young talent to 'hurry to Hollywood' should encourage it to take up work in local stock companies to gain self-confidence, direct contact with the public, training, poise, and the value of concentration. Picture players are like stock company actors; they cannot play one part indefinitely. They must be able to know and feel an unlimited number of characters; why they do certain things, why they don't do certain things. The motion picture producer and director have no time to train actors. A motion picture is only made once. The actor of the future must have experience enough to supply any number of emotions and characters upon call. In the past we have been more concerned about an actor looking his part than we have in his acting his part. In the future the demand will be the reverse, and appearance will be secondary to understanding.

"The type actor will always remain, but the so-called star of tomorrow must be an experienced actor, and to be a real actor one must understand thoroughly, first of all, life, then drama, interpretation and poise.

Telling the Truth

"And last but not least, the screen play of the future must be truthful. The truth, realism, is not always beautiful. Every picture must not have a happy ending. If it takes tragedy to portray life, we must be tragic; if it takes humor to interpret life, we must be humorous, and if audiences expect the motion picture to improve as it should, they must not expect a happy fade-out at the finish of every picture.

"When audiences encourage the good pictures by virtue of their merit, the censors permit legitimate freedom, and those responsible for photoplays work in harmony for the general improvement of the screen, it will be a pleasure to make motion pictures, and the excellence that comes from that spirit will be manifest, and the cinema will be the greatest of all the arts—as it should be."

Clara Beranger Sees Screen Future In Original Story

"THE artistic future of the screen lies with the original story written directly for the screen by experienced film writers," says Clara Beranger.

"There is absolutely no doubt," says Miss Beranger, "that it is only a matter of time before the producers will stop buying plays and novels that have to be rewritten for the screen and turn to the original story written directly by those who know the screen, its technique and its demands. The high price that authors ask for their material will possibly influence this change more than any other factor, and when you stop to consider that, for a play in which, perhaps one situation can be retained—the rest to be entirely evolved by the scenario writer—the owners demand perhaps seventy-five thousand dollars, you can understand that this in time will give the producers something to think about.

"The position of the original story today is a lamentable one. Producers have a deep-rooted prejudice against them. It shows no sign of weakening. But the writers for the screen; we writers who have been adapting the works of authors and making them suitable for screen consumption, know it.

"It is just as easy for a scenario writer to write an original story as it is to take a situation from a play or a book and by the sweat of the brow, and bringing into play all the results of his experiences, make it good screen material.

"Producers buy these plays and these novels because they feel that they have a ready-made audience for their photoplay. This is an entirely mistaken idea.

"There are two factors which bring an audience into a motion picture theater. One is the name and the other is the cast. And producers know that, but they will cling to the old custom. They admit that 'Rita Coventry' over a box office won't bring the people into the theater. Audiences will be apt to think Rita Coventry the name of some member of the cast. We change the name to 'Don't Call It Love,' because it is 'a box office title.' What has become of 'Rita Coventry' and the tremendous price that was paid in order to bring this book to the screen? The name has disappeared, the situations are there perhaps, but treated so differently as to be barely recognizable. I don't say that names of books should be retained. To the contrary. I maintain that producers should develop their own screen writers, thus reducing the tremendous cost of the story at the outset and giving the scenario writer an opportunity to use his experience.

"I have seen stories of young authors who have had genuine screen training, batting around studios with no one interested enough to look at them.

"Out of the million people who read a book there are millions who see the picture, and they go to see the picture because of the name over the box office or the names of the players in the cast. The rest means nothing, though word of mouth will do the rest afterward."

SHOULD A DIRECTOR CUT HIS OWN PICTURE?

A Symposium of Directors' Opinions

A MOTION picture should be the result of a single mind and that should be the mind of the director. The finished product should represent the combined ideas of the author, scenario writer, art director, cameraman presented on the screen by the director.

In order to appreciate the truth of this it is only necessary to imagine what would happen should the work of each separate department be done individually. The result would be chaotic.

It does not mean that the director should refuse to take advantage of suggestions and advice from others regarding their individual work. These suggestions should be presented to him to take or leave as he sees fit and, if accepted, incorporated into the picture by him.

Even the cutting should be done by the director. I do not mean that he should actually make all his own cuts and patches. He should, however, select his takes and closely supervise his work until completed. Improper cutting can so easily ruin a picture. Proper cutting is greatly to it. There is no reason why the director should leave the picture for someone else to finish. No more than he would stop playing in the middle of a set of tennis or a hand of cards.

MAURICE TOURNEUR.

* * *

If a director's ability is to be judged by his work and not by his ability to spend money, he should, by all means, cut his own picture. A picture is never complete until it is cut. If a director is capable of being entrusted with a hundred or two hundred thousand dollars to produce a picture he should be capable of completing his work. A director who directs a picture without a fixed idea of what the finished product will be is spending money foolishly. He has not a fixed reason in his own mind for every bit of action and the way it is put over, the work of cutting can just as well be turned over to a cutter for the results are usually the same no matter who does the cutting.

Cutting a picture is just as much a part of the director's work as the actual directing, and if he does not know this branch of his trade, he is more than likely does not know the other branches.

Cutting a picture is as vital to its success as the story itself.

WESLEY RUGGLES.

THINK the director should see on the screen once, the thing he shot—the objective he was seeking when he made the picture. He may shoot a hundred feet of a closeup seeking four feet of expression somewhere in this length, for reaction. Only the director knows what four feet he was after. If the picture as assembled by the director is draggy, over length or dramatically unsound, the picture should be taken away from him and turned over to an expert editor.

Such an editor as Miss Marion Fairfax, who cuts and edits pictures for First National Productions, would invariably help a picture to a tremendous extent. She brings to a picture a fine dramatic sense, a sympathetic attitude for the director's work, and an intelligent and constructive optimism. The director, many times, is too close to his picture—he has a single viewpoint and is unable to alter or change his work to improve it, whereas the expert editor can take a situation which the director has builded, and build it to bring out its dramatic force much more powerfully and convincingly.

A director is often carried away with the ability of one of the artists. If he is a good director, he has temperament, and a wealth of feeling. He loves the nuance of a certain artist's work, and in making the picture he has elaborated upon it, and given the artist full play for his or her ability; not realizing that whereas this particular bit of characterization is an exquisite thing to himself, it is draggy or unimportant to the bigger thing in the picture.

HARRY HOYT.

* * *

IT IS especially important in comedies, two-reelers, or feature length, for a director to cut his own pictures. If pictures are given to a professional cutter after they are shot, there are bound to be extra scenes, not in the script, of which the cutter knows nothing whatsoever. In fact, I don't see how a picture can be finished properly if the director who shot it does not have at least the first assembly. Our own practice is always to have the director cut his picture, and the supervising director and editor always has the final trim. A director who does not know how to cut a picture should not be called a director.

AL CHRISTIE.

THERE is probably no one person more familiar with a film play after it has been photographed than the director. He knows not only the story, but its interpretation and the little human touches which should be injected to bring out the high lights and shadows of the story he has been trying to tell. For this reason the director is, undoubtedly, the most logical person to cut and assemble a photoplay.

But after watching a film production run time and time again in the colorless surroundings of the studio projecting room, it is only natural that a director, being a mere human being, should lose his point of view to a certain extent. It is therefore my opinion that the crude cutting and assembling of a production should be left in the hands of a director, but that the polishing process, so to speak, or the final editing of a film play, should be done by a fresh mind called into criticize the work from an audience's standpoint and trim up the rough edges that a man who has toiled unceasingly for weeks is bound to overlook.

MAX GRAF.

* * *

THERE is not the slightest doubt in my mind that an editor can come in on a film and with a new mind can give very valuable help and in many ways improve the picture. But to give the picture to an editor before the director has cut it the way in which he shot it and expect him to get all the little touches and timings is like giving a gig-saw puzzle to an idiot and expecting him to put it together correctly. In other words, a director is paid for making a picture as he sees it. Well, the least a producer can do is to let him deliver it as he intended to make it. Then if they can improve it. Great. Everybody's happy.

Also, pictures are not made in the cutting room. If they don't have the material they don't make a good picture and that's that. You can't make a library table out of a soap box.

JOHN W. McDERMOTT.

IT would be folly to say yes or no. So much depends on the picture. We are all familiar with innumerable cases where the cutting department has in reality made a far better picture than the director. However, this does not apply in every case. Never in fact where the director knows his theater. If the director is a big man he will welcome suggestions, and realize as he must that after all he is but human and cannot attempt the impossible. In the end it reduces itself to the point of one's capabilities.

I THINK the director should cut his own picture or at least be in constant touch with the cutter, for he shoots angles and business that is oftentimes taken out. Also, because the cutter follows script and doesn't take time to place cuts to build the business for the effect the director is after.

J. C. MARCHANT.

* * *

NO director, in my opinion, should perform the actual operation of cutting his own picture for by doing this detail work he runs the great risk of losing the proper dramatic perspective of his photoplay.

In my own pictures I "sit in" frequently during the cutting to be assured that the cutter has thoroughly grasped my viewpoint of the story. However, my cutter, Miss Teddy Hanscom, whose long experience and exceptional ability in dramatic construction makes her an invaluable aid, is to be relied upon to build the picture to the very best advantage and according to my instructions.

But there is one very important point and one which I insist upon in all my pictures—I always have the cutter watch the actual filming of every scene. This has proven to be a great help in the speedy cutting of my pictures. By being on the set, the cutter—who also handles the script-girl work and looks out for technical details—has the story vividly impressed on her mind thereby simplifying the process of cutting.

I think a director's time is too valuable to allow him to work on the physical cutting of pictures because the more detail duties he takes upon himself the less distinct will be his mental conception of the dramatic angles of his play.

PHIL ROSEN.

A MOTION picture is not made when the photographing is finished. It occupies the position, let us say, of the manuscript pages of a novel upon which the author has been working for many weeks, but which now that the actual writing has been completed, has still to be put together in logical sequence, chapters headed by titles, and changes made which have developed during the writing.

As the last page falls from the author's hands, would he leave his work strewn about and call in a professional editor or reader and say, "Here, put that together for me, and I think it would be a good idea for you to shorten up those chapters leading to the climax and polish up that love scene, and it occurs to me that the novel is too long anyway, so cut out six or seven chapters, anywhere you think they can best be spared." I think not. He is more likely to go over it lovingly, polish it up, shorten it here, elaborate a little there, inserting all the while ideas which have come to him in the first writing.

In the case of a motion picture, I think the director should be given the same privilege. Why should it be thought he loses all interest in the result of his work, the very thing for which he has been working from the beginning?

CURE MAKING IN THE OLD WORLD AND NEW

material itself is made genuinely interesting. Trained writers bring a lot of ingenuity to bear upon the picture. As a result the motion picture industry is presented to the public in a colorful way which would dramatize the drabest subject.

In Europe, while a certain amount of space is devoted to films and film strips, the material is not presented so interestingly.

America too, has developed a body of critics whose work is devoted to the screen just as stage and book devote theirs to the drama and literature. This is a branch of work which is still infantile in Europe.

It is an old axiom that once a thing goes beyond a certain size, it continues to develop because of its own momentum.

America, the motion picture industry has attained such proportions that it continues to grow at a prodigious rate. In its growth, it draws to itself the best elements of the industry from other countries.

In other words, America will always remain the center of film production.

CURE MAKING HERE AND IN EUROPE

By Victor Seastrom

The greatest difference in picture making methods of America and Europe—at least Sweden—I believe, is the number of workers on the set, assistants to the director.

In Sweden I often wrote my own stories, directed the pictures, sometimes acted in them, sometimes turned the camera crank, edited and titled the pictures. Often I helped dress the sets. I had a few helpers, but nothing like the army of experts assigned to me when I came to the Metro-Goldwyn-Pear studios.

I discovered, when I arrived in Hollywood and started to work, that I was to be assisted by an assistant director, a script clerk, a property man, a publicity man, two cameramen and a camera assistant, numerous electricians, grips, a property man's assistant and an orchestra and several hundred others.

One man, I discovered, adapted the story; another wrote the continuity; another went to the art director for sketches of the set; to a draughtsman for blue prints; to the construction manager to have the sets built; back to the art department to have them dressed; to the electrical department to have them lighted.

This was rather amazing. The problem of what to do with all these trained assistants was rather bewildering at first, as was the moving of this machinery.

One small wish seemed to set the whole plant in motion. It is entirely reasonable, of course, to have a tremendous studio, many times larger than any I had ever worked in, and such a system is necessary.

American pictures need never fear serious business competition as long as pictures here are made with such thoroughness.

The Elements of Successful Production

By THOMAS H. INCE

I have often been asked by both old friends and new how I have continued on year after year in motion pictures without becoming engulfed in one of the many combinations that have marked the development of pictures, and thereby losing my identity as an independent producer. My only answer to this query always has been:

For fourteen years in the building of motion pictures, I have viewed this work solely from the angle of the wishes and views represented by box office patronage. A few times during these years I have narrowly escaped being involved in producing or releasing combinations that would not have left me free to apply the rules and laws of motion picture making which have served me as a guide. The fact that I still am a "lone wolf" is due solely to my observance of the wishes of the box office public.

Story, cast, direction.

Those are the three elements which enter into the making of a successful picture and elements which are important, in my opinion, in the order I have named them. A big advertising campaign, over-weighted exploitation and newspaper "puffing" may sell a picture temporarily but unless it is grounded firmly on a foundation of real story value all the talk in the world will not return to the exhibitor and the producer the cost of the film plus the legitimate profit to which both are entitled.

There is no question in my mind after studying the reactions of the picture-going public to film offerings that while there is an assured response on "first nights" to "big names" of producer, stars or directors who have participated in the making of a film, the picture will be judged in the long run on story value. No matter how clever the cast or how able the director, if the picture has been woven about "fluff"; if the plot is weak or inconsistent or lacking in real dramatic values, successive audiences will continually dwindle.

The grapevine system of communication—the exchange of dinner-table, tea-table, street corner chat with its "Oh I saw So and So the other night—Great picture!" or "Rotten picture!" is the most potent factor with which the exhibitor and producer can reckon. And the public which so communicates its opinions by word of mouth cannot be fooled into pronouncing a picture good unless there is projected upon the screen a story of definite values, a story that grips or entertains because it is a reflection of life.

For the enactment of the story when it has been found, the bigger the cast the more favorable the public reaction will be. Here the independent producer who is free to look over the entire field and "borrow" talent has a decided advantage, I believe. Instead of discarding a story because it is not suitable for a certain star under contract, he can concentrate upon finding big material and then choose from the finest talent available in casting of the picture.

No formula works without constant exceptions and so I must admit that there have been a limited number of successful films recently in which a story that was "slight" has been put over by the personality of the star or a well-chosen cast. They are the exception that proves the rule.

The directors of the film world—and no one is in a better position than I to appreciate just what a good director means to the successful screening of a production—will not take it amiss I am sure that I have listed direction third in the list of prerequisites for the building of a big production. As the creator of the visual version of the story he is all important and all powerful. His imagination colors the continuity of the production. He envisions settings, the bits of "business" that stamp a picture with realism. He breathes life into the inanimate, infusing both story and actors with the fire of his genius.

Picture direction deservedly is listed with the arts of today for the successful director must prove his ingenuity, originality and dramatic comprehension at every crank of the camera. Primarily he must know life, but he must know, too, the subtleties and technicalities of projecting life upon the silver-sheet—not in narrative form but by selected dramatic moments each of which builds towards a definite climax which will bring a burst of emotional response from the audiences.

To the end that the exhibitor may live as well as the producer and the director, there should be even greater concentration upon the effort to find big and suitable stories for the screen in the days to come. I for one expect to continue on as an independent producer through building upon this formula which has carried me through fourteen successful years.

Should a Director Cut His Own Picture?

Of course, an intelligent cutter is a great aid, after the first cutting, also in the preliminary assembling of the film. But I cannot imagine any director willingly foregoing the cutting of his own picture. Personally I like to cut a picture I have made carefully, going over it time and time again, and I like to work with the title writer as I am doing it. This seems to me the logical way and the one most calculated to get desirable results.

VICTOR HEERMAN.

IT SEEMS to me that a director should always cut his own film, as in my case, where I write my own story and make a small script that some one else could not make a picture from, I must cut my own pictures. Again, who knows what it's all about but the man that directed the production.

The director of the future will have to be more than the studio trained man. He will be a man who has studied the art of making pictures for years, by knowing history, literature, art and music. Music will play a great part in the interpretation of a production. The director of the future will be a great leader and teacher, for the productions of the future will be educational as well as entertaining, and will be the universal language that will mean peace on earth forever and good will among nations.

CHARLES R. SEELING.

A DIRECTOR is as good as his staff, cast and cutter. If a director ignores the fundamentals of picture technique the result is inevitable upon the screen. A cutter cannot always save a director, but a director can turn into the cutting room material that a cutter with imagination, brains and intelligence can turn out a picture that even the director will marvel at. On the other hand if a director insists on defying the rules of good picture making, good cutting and editing his production will suffer. I having been associated with the cutting department. I always try to give the cutting department the best of it and I find that many of my mistakes are eliminated, I get the credit and the cutter gets his salary.

BOB MCGOWAN.

WERE capable directors allowed to supervise the cutting and editing of their own pictures, this to my mind would result in a minimum of that sterile, unprofitable entertainment known to caustic critics as the "mechanical movie."

Now, in justice to the rights of the director alone, he should be allowed to stand zealous guard over the thousands of feet of film he has given the best that is in him—often of his life blood—to make. Cutters and film editors there are aplenty, yes—some of them good ones.

But there are few who can match the dramatic education, that intuitive dramatic sense, that brilliance—polished by actual contact with actors, authors and contributing artists—that distinguishes the average good director. Therefore few cutters, on this basis alone, should be allowed to have full or final authority over the editing of a director's work.

The chief value of the cutter, to my mind, lies in his cold perspective and his resultant ability to temper to a keen edge the director's judgment.

However—the importance of characterization and atmosphere in a picture we all know. In fact, we find that in the majority of big successes plot has been relegated to a position inferior to the other two. But we also know that cutters and film editors are almost universally "plot-minded." After a study of the script, no matter how exhaustive, their minds automatically seize and retain

They say I am a realist—a man who functions best when producing in the films life as he sees it or knows it. Whereupon the editor promptly assumes that fantasy will be perfectly easy for me, and propounds a question that scarcely can be answered by anything other than a dream. Fortunately, I have my fancies. "What," asks the editor in substance, "will be the status of motion pictures one hundred years hence?"

I have wondered that very thing many times myself, and I am one of those persons who sometimes respond to their imaginery with answers, I can at least give an opinion. I may say this by adding that it is the opinion of one who has lived a large part of his life to the subject.

In the year 2024 the most important thing which the cinema will have helped in a large way to accomplish will be that of eliminating the face of the civilized world of armed conflict. Pictures will be the most powerful factor in bringing about this condition. With the use of a universal language of moving pictures the true meaning of the brotherhood of man will have been established throughout the earth. For example, the Englishman will have learned that the soul of the Japanese is essentially the same as his own. The Frenchman will realize that the American's ideals are his ideals. All are created equal.

It is not to be presumed that I live one hundred years from now and see pictures will have had time to educate the masses away from discord and unharmony. What I do mean to say is, by that time war, if there is such a thing, will be waged on a strictly scientific basis, with the intent of physical destruction done with entirely. My theory is that conflict, if and when it arises, will find itself governed by scientific laws and regulations to which both sides of the controversy will subscribe. Armies outfitted with boxing gloves, man to man, may, I think, be permitted to "battle" to determine the victor. I am not smiling with you now. I am quite sincere. It will be a matter of science and fair play to the letter. I am just as sincere when I predict that after the "battle" the warriors will repair to a rearranged cold-drink canteen and eat grape juice. Just as the old English debtors' prison was wiped out by education, so will armed conflict be wiped out by education.

Not So Many Close-Ups

There is little question that a century ahead of us will find a great deal more of the so-called intimate drama presented on the screen, although there will always be a field apart for the film with a vast background such as "The Birth of a Nation" and "America." You will walk into your favorite theatre and see your actors appearing in twice the size you see them now, because the screens will be twice as large, and the film itself will be as large also. With these enlargements, "close-ups" will be almost eliminated, since it will be relatively easy to picture facial expressions along with the full figure of the performer. It will always be necessary to picture the face in pictures. It is the face which reflects the soul of a man.

Our "close-ups," or "inserts," as I call them, are sometimes cumbersome and disconcerting. I invented them, but I have tried not to overuse them, as many have done. It is a mechanical trick, and is of little credit to anyone.

We shall say there are now five elaborate first-run picture theatres on one New York street, Broadway. In 2024 there will be at least forty. Cities of 1,000 will average at least six. Cities of 20,000 and thereabout will have over a hundred. By virtue of its great advantage in scope, the motion picture will be fitted to tell certain stories as no other medium can. But I must add that the glory of the spoken or written word in the intimate and poetic drama can never be excelled by any form of expression.

In the year 2024 our directors of the better order will be men graduated from schools, academies, and colleges carrying in their curriculum courses in motion-picture direction. Our actors and actresses will be artists graduated from schools and colleges either devoted exclusively to the teaching and study of motion-picture acting or carrying highly specialized courses in acting before the camera. This is inevitable.

I am well aware of the fact that the present cumbersome and haphazard method by which screen talent is selected (and by screen talent I mean to say directors, designers, actors and camera men) will not endure long. Time will find this matter adjusted upon a basis of merit and equipment.

Probably on an average of a dozen times each week persons ask me if I think color photography in the motion pictures will be perfected and made practical. Most assuredly, I do think so. Certainly all color processes and tint methods at present in use are wrong. They are not arrived at with any degree of inventiveness, and they cannot last. At present the colored pictures we see are made by the use of gelatines on the film or by the use of varicolored lenses which fly before the film. Thus we find a great lack of harmony and accuracy. I am willing to confess that I have tried them. But I should be the last to speak of my color effects seriously. We have been merely exploring and speculating.

Only through one method will color be naturally and properly given to objects and persons in the motion pictures. This is a method which will record the natural tints and colors as the picture is being photographed.

Speaking Movies Are Impossible

Of course, to the man or woman untrained in these lines, this seems remote and hardly possible. Still, consider the conquering of the air—the discovery of a means whereby the human voice may be projected through air three thousand miles! When we realize what has been done in the wireless it seems utter folly to suppose that color photography—natural, permanent color photography—may not be found for the films. One hundred years from now the color of a woman's eyes and hair, the tint of the sea, the hues of the rainbow itself will be a natural part of every motion-picture play.

On the other hand, I am quite positive that when a century has passed, all thought of our so-called speaking pictures will have been abandoned. It will never be possible to synchronize the voice with the pictures. This is true because the very nature of the films foregoes not only the necessity for but the propriety of the spoken voice. Music—fine music—will always be the voice of the silent drama. One hundred years from now will find the greatest composers of that day devoting their skill and their genius to the creation of motion-picture music.

There will be three principal figures in the production of a picture play—the author first, the director and music composer occupying an identical position in importance.

A Movie in Every Home

We do not want now and we never shall want the human voice with our films. Music, as I see it within that hundred years, will be applied to the visualization of the human being's imagination those unseen voices are always perfect and sweet, or else magnificent and thrilling, you will find them registering upon the mind of the picture patron, in terms of lovely music, precisely what the author has intended to be registered there. There is no voice in the world like the voice of music. To me those images on the screen must always be silent. Anything else would work at cross purposes with the real object of this new medium of expression. There will never be speaking pictures. Why should there be when no voice can speak so beautifully as music? There are no dissonant r's and twisted consonants and guttural slurs and nasal twangs in beautiful music. Therefore the average person would much prefer to see his pictures and let the voice which speaks to him be the voice of music—one of the most perfect of all the arts.

I seem a little emphatic on this particular point, and I mean to be.

In the year 2024 we shall have orchestras of many kinds playing for the pictures. Each motion-picture theatre will have several orchestras of diversified character. The big, robust, outdoor pictures will have more than one orchestra in attendance at all times. String quartets will play for the mood of a string quartet; sighing guitars and thumpety banjos will play for their mood in the picture play; symphonic orchestras of greater proportions than we now dream of will be employed for moods to fit the sublime and the grand.

We have scarcely an inkling of what the development of music is going to be in the film play.

It really seems to me a little bit humorous now to realize how narrow a place in our everyday life the film is playing, despite the great rise in attendance in the last few years. One hundred years hence, I believe, the airplane passenger lines will operate motion-picture shows on regular schedule between New York and Chicago and between New York and London. Trains, which will be traveling twice or three times as fast as they do now, will have film theatres on board. Almost every home of good taste will have its private projection room where miniatures, perhaps, of the greater films will be shown to the family, and, of course, families will make their albums in motion pictures instead of in tintypes and "stills." Steamships will boast of first runs, which will be brought to them in midocean by the airplanes, and I may add that almost all subjects in our schools will be taught largely with the use of picture play and the educational animated picture.

By the time these things come to pass, there will be no such thing as a flicker in your film. Your characters and objects in pictures will come upon the screen (which by then may not even be white, and certainly may not be square, or look anything like what it does now), and they will appear to the onlookers precisely as these persons and objects appear in real life. That much discussed "depth" in pictures, which no one as yet has been able to employ successfully, will long since have been discovered and adopted. The moving canvas will not appear flat, but if a character moves before a fireplace you will recognize the distance as between the character and the fireplace. Likewise, in landscapes, you will feel the proper sense of distance. Your mountain peaks will not appear to rise one on top of the other, but will appear exactly as if you stood and looked at them. Of course these are merely details that will require long and intense study and experiment, but they will come. In other words, from the standpoint of naturalness, motion pictures one hundred years from now will be so nearly like the living person or the existing object pictured that you will be unable, sitting in your orchestra seat, to determine whether they are pictures or the real thing.

Radio Has Its Own Place

By a perfection of the studio lighting system, film will be as smooth before the eye as if it were a stationary lighted picture. By that time the studios will have changed greatly, and instead of actors being forced to work before great blinding lights, which now at times register 117 degrees of heat, we shall have "cold" lights. We are experimenting in these already. Our studios will be great spreading institutions, as large any of the cities surrounding New York. I think that one hundred years from now there will be no concentrated motion-picture production such as our Hollywood of today. Films will be made in various parts of the country, most of which will be located near New York.

It nettles me at times when I am asked if I do not think that in time the popularity of the motion pictures will subside. It seems to me ridiculous. As ridiculous as to assume that the popularity of music, or painting, or acting on our spoken stage will subside.

I do not only do not think the popularity of motion pictures will decrease; I am already on record as predicting that the popularity of pictures will increase and keep on increasing. Consider my own "Birth of a Nation." It was revived two years ago, after having been off for years, and it was as great a success in revival as in the original. The popularity of motion pictures (which are a natural form of dramatic expression) will ride higher and higher as the quality of motion pictures rises higher and higher. One hundred years from today we shall have novelists devoting all their energies toward creating motion-picture novels. By this I mean that the novelists giving their exclusive time to films will create characters and situations and dramatic plots in terms of pictures. Motion-picture historians have been developed, and they will be a great help to production. Motion-picture artists of all kinds will have grown up. It will all make for a more natural, dignified, sincere picture, because we shall have all our different branches devoting their time and efforts toward the completion of a single object—a motion picture. I have no hesitancy in saying that the radio has claimed its share of amusement audiences. Unquestionably it has kept many persons away from both the films and the spoken stage. It is a great, useful discovery—a glorious medium. One hundred years from now there will be no confusion as between the radio and the motion picture. There cannot possibly be a connection nor a conflict. It is just possible there may be conflict as between radio and spoken stage, but never between radio and film. Each occupies its own exclusive place in our lives.

Seats Not Less Than $5

Now let us prepare for a small-sized shock. One hundred years from today it will cost perhaps twice as much as it costs today to see the really first-class cinema. It is perfectly proper that it should. Time, effort, energy, and preparation put into pictures at that time will have advanced greatly. I am just honest enough to say that I do not at the moment understand how more time effort, energy, and preparation could have been put into my own pictures; but, then, for the average large picture play this will hold true. The average supposedly high-class film play in 2024 will be on view at not less than $5 a seat.

In looking into the crystal I have seen many things which I have not touched upon here. Perhaps they would be too tedious to bring out and discuss. But of one thing I may place myself on record plainly and without qualification. The motion picture is a child that has been given life in our generation. As it grows older it will develop marvelously. We poor souls can scarcely visualize or dream of its possibilities. We ought to be kind with it in its youth, so that in its maturity it may look back upon its childhood without regret.

Light Joins the All-Star Cast

By CHARLES J. BRABIN

Just how many eons have fled since the Great Director said "Let there be light!" doesn't matter greatly. Light was one of the first essentials of that spectacular drama "Humanity." Light has continued to be a first essential, and always will be a first essential.

In this little industry of ours that seeks to reveal and illustrate life, light is also a first essential.

In the early years light was considered merely as illumination to permit a sharp photographic impression in the sixteenth second allotted each frame of the film. When sunlight was sufficient, it was used, even for interiors—then crude two-sided affairs rigged up on an open stage.

To tone down glaring rays, curtain-like diffusers were installed overhead and removable screens about the sides of the open stage.

Then, to mimic horizontal rays of light or setting sun, mirrors were used, covered with cheesecloth to soften the light. Then someone found that a frame of canvas, silver-coated, was light in weight and not subject to the expensive breakage of plate glass mirrors. The reflector was developed.

Artificial lights came into use when the sun sulked. At first they were simply spot-lights and flood-lights from the theaters. Although different make-up was required of players, the artificial lights were easier to control than the sun—and more effective photographically.

The all-glass stage, devised to utilize the sun, had developed from the open stage covered with curtains and screens. But it was an oven to work in during summertimes. So dark stages, using artificial lights alone, became more and more popular.

Patience

Ernst Lubitsch is a stickler—like all foreigners—for getting just what he wants in his productions. When he was making "The Marriage Circle" for Warner's he had a scene in which Marie Prevost appeared. But he could not get her to do just what he wanted. Ten, 12, 14, finally 18 times the scene was tried out, but Marie did not "get" his idea. Then she became peevish and tired. There was a discussion between director and star. Then Marie went back to work willingly.

When Lubitsch was asked what happened he smiled. "Oh," he said, "I told her the truth. I told her that Mary—Mary Pickford—rehearsed one scene with me 20 times."

As artificial lights increased in use, special forms of arc-lights began to be designed and manufactured especially for motion pictures. Kleig-lights and Winfield-Kerners were important equipment of every studio.

Their beams were softened by diffusers of silk or ground glass. But softer effects yet were needed.

The mercury vapor tube, made by Cooper Hewitt for portrait photography, was then manufactured in banks of eight tubes, like bars of a cage, and were mounted on trucks or suspended from overhead tracks in the film studios. Cooper Hewitts give a ghastly violet hue to human flesh, but are wonderfully soft and rich photographically.

In addition to various arc-lights and spot-lights, and the banks of Cooper Hewitts, huge powerful Sunlight arcs now turn night to day so effectively that those too long in their rays become sunburned.

Although these lights have all been greatly improved and are being still further developed, this is practically the studio lighting equipment of today.

While the mechanical side of lighting was being developed to elaborate effectiveness, the use of lighting as the most important artistic tool of the director was almost entirely overlooked.

Cameramen studied the lights cursorily, and made them an efficient but mechanical part of their camera apparatus.

But the values of drama and art possible in manipulation of the beaming arcs and the glowing mercury tubes were ignored except by a few directors.

What was achieved was mechanical prettiness that sometimes (usually by accident) reached the sublime, but which did little to further dramatic action.

Some of us are now trying to use lights as more than mere illumination, more than a mere beautifier of already beautiful women.

We are trying to set bright light against deep shade in such a way that their clash becomes pictorially dramatic—as dramatic as the clash of the good hero and the bad villain in the old-fashioned melodramas.

The ancient theatrical expedient of trailing of the poor but pure heroine with a spotlight aureole has been refined.

Now we are working deliberately with the idea of making the light act, doing it in subtle ways—with shadows of unusual form, with pools of lights that may ripple with gaiety or intensify a sombre situation.

Of course light cannot be manipulated for its own sake. It must have a logical source. That is our chief problem in obtaining effects we seek.

Sometime it may be the sun pouring through a massive window. It may be a fireplace flickering, a battlefield searchlight, the groping headlights of a motor car. It may be sunlight filtering through autumn trees, or setting rays trimming a silhouetted landscape with silver.

There are many ways of doing it, and we must determine the appropriate one and the most effective one in each case.

The modern cinematographer, to be an artist, must first be an art student. He must study the masters of the motion camera. There are certain great masters of lighting and photography already. They are not generally recognized, because there is yet no tradition behind them. But as a student of painting studies the canvases of the great masters, so will the student of motion photography study the screened work of the great cinematographers.

TALENT

Up in Springfield, Mass., lives Jack Kalafut. Jack wants to get into the movies. So he wrote Principal Pictures outlining his talents. Incidentally he is accomplished. He says: "I have worked at the following jobs and made good,—tool-making, shipping clerk, machinist, auto repairing, systematizing in large shop, foreman in machine shop, stock clerk, night manager of the Western Union Tel. Co. of Springfield, Mass., sign painter, chauffeur, salesman and collector. In the past five years I have devoted much time in entertaining audiences in theatres and dance halls. I can play a piano, violin and harmonica by ear, also sing well. I can wire a house and do some other electrical work. I can paint in and out side of a house or automobile, am good at plumbing, and tinsmith work and carpenter work. Can hang wall paper and decorate. Have written stories for newspapers, and have invented a device whereby snow can be removed from streets without hauling."

THE EMBLEMS OF A BIG ENTERPRISE AND A SINCERE PURPOSE

OME men are careless with the use of their signatures. To others it is a life purpose to associate their signatures with all that is sincere and efficient.

Thus with a trade-mark. The trade-marks of modern business are supposedly attached to all merchandise because of a pride in the goods produced. But in many instances poor merchandise is trade-marked as well as good merchandise.

The seal on the left is an emblem well known in this industry. It is the banner under which the Motion Picture Directors have joined forces to perpetuate the ideals of their particular work.

The trade-mark underneath is the new banner that associates itself with the M. P. D. A. The "Blue Ribbon" trade-mark is dedicated with the idea that it shall be appended only to statements in which there is truth and reliability.

The combination of these two trade-marks represents a consolidation that means more to the independent motion picture man than any present sign of the times.

Standing back of these two emblems is something more than big names associated with the enterprise . . . something more than big capital which is guaranteeing its stability. That something is a combination of brain energy and creative genius concentrated into one purpose . . . directed into one channel!

No film yet made can boast of the opportunities for perfection that will be given to "Blue Ribbon" pictures. No producing unit could boast such advantages of consultation and seasoned advice. No producing unit has had such distinct advantage of closeness and direct contact with the needs of the studio.

You may well believe that the business dealings carried on under these two emblems will be a matter of great pride to those at the helm. Because of what stands behind these two trade-marks they must and will be emblems of a big enterprise and a sincere purpose!

THE TREND IN FILMS FOR NEXT YEAR

By Louis B. Mayer

SO many articles have been written, and statements have been made on the "trend of pictures for the coming year" that it is difficult to say anything on the subject that is not hackneyed or bromidic.

It is not for the sake of effect, however, that I say there will be no decided trend for any one thing in pictures in the coming season. A "trend" indicates a number of pictures along the same line, and this is just what the industry must avoid.

Never before were producers so earnestly seeking things new and original as now. This presages a great year for the business. The public, in my estimation, wants diversity in its pictures, and will pay its quarters into the box office to get it.

The public is "shopping" for pictures now, not attending them hit or miss. This means that the industry must present a wide variety of productions. It is with this in mind that the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions has laid out its program of production for the year. There was no saying, "This year we will make this type of picture," but, instead, a careful balancing with stories of every type on the production schedule.

We cannot look for any one particular type of pictures. Although it will not necessarily be a year of spectacles and costume pictures, it just as certainly will not be a year of small productions.

PICTURE-MAKING FORMULA

By William deMille

PERHAPS one of the most interesting angles of motion picture production is the fact that there are so many angles.

Each new picture is a fresh adventure and it is impossible to lay down hard and fast rules of production. The producer-director who sets a technical formula and tries to live up to it later is likely to find that the progress of picture-making is taking a tangent far different from the one he has selected.

I create a new formula for each picture because every photoplay is an entity. Each has its own psychology and demands individual treatment. With each new production I repudiate much of the technique I may have used three or six months previously.

A year ago, for instance, I might have fought against the reduction of sub-titles. Yet, when I produced "Don't Call It Love," Clara Berger, the scenarist for William deMille productions, and I not only eliminated half the usual quota but used no "time or place" titles. The latter were not needed.

In "Icebound" we introduced sub-titles without verbs. They best reflected the severe psychology of the story and would not have been appropriate in another picture.

In "The Bedroom Window" and in the adaptation of "Spring Cleaning" other changes in technique were decided upon.

Every picture presents its own problems of interpretation; offers new ideas in titling; demands different tempo in action and individual coloring in settings.

There is one formula to which I will always hold, however. It is expressed in a motto which hangs upon the wall of my study at the Lasky studio. It reads—

"The Picture of the Future will be the Picture which Says Something Worth Saying in a Beautiful Way."

MAKING THEM FUNNY

By James W. Horne

AFTER ten years someone, somewhere—I think it was Thomas H. Ince—told me I was funny. I didn't believe him as I had been told by producer after producer my work was westerns and melodrama. (This was after I had lived down eleven serials.) (Laugh that one off.) I was scared to death because I had outgrown any thought of comedy from the old Kalem days when George Marion, then the president of Kalem, wanted me to take over Ham and Bud and assured me I was a comedy director.

I made "The Hottentot" and it went over big and now they tell me I'm funny. That's the best compliment I have ever received as I fully realize what it means to try and be funny.

Comedy is the hardest, cruelest end of the motion picture business and the most disappointing from a director's standpoint. In drama we have more or less given rules and dramatic values that we know will go over and always serve; in comedy a gag, or comedy point, will never go over to the public twice in the same way. Gags are limited like notes of the scale and it is only the way they are handled that get them over. Give them the twist.

My idea of a good comedy is first a story. This is essential (many will differ with me, I know), then gags to hang on it to make it funnier, and if possible a thrill or two. There are certainly all kinds of comedy, slap-stick, farce, society comedy, situation comedy, etc., etc. They all must be handled in a different vein. I know! I made a melodramatic farce. We all believed it the best we had ever worked in and lo and behold when I saw it cut and finished on the screen the cutter had tried to make it a melodrama pure and simple. It was simple but far from pure and we were all terrible together.

To depict something funny all the characters should feel funny, be in good humor. Rehearsals are death to comedy of any kind. I try never to rehearse and if I find the gag has to be rehearsed over and over, I immediately throw it away and substitute something else. Stilted comedy isn't worth a nickle.

We all have ambitions and my ambition is to continue to make comedies along the lines of "The Hottentot," "Yankee Consul" and "Capt. Fearless." Three entirely different kinds of comedy subjects. I am sure the greater percentage of the picture-going public longs to laugh and is waiting and anxious to be entertained. The greater percentage of the pictures today are serious, yet the biggest money makers in the business are comedians.

If I can make them funny, good and funny, I will feel I have done my share to make the motion picture the entertainment of the world. Yes, the industry is still in its infancy.

Setting the Tempo With Rhythmic Music

By Victor Schertzinger

ACCORDING to a rough count, I'm asked at least thirty-five times a week why I don't give up composing music and confine my efforts to directing motion pictures or give up directing for composing.

I usually take time to explain that to me the two are so closely allied that there is almost no difference at all. You can't make a motion picture unless you have the entire story pictured in your mind before you direct the first scene and you can't compose a piece of music unless you first have a complete picture in your mind.

Instead of telling the story on film you write it in notes on a musical scale.

It is a source of great satisfaction to me to see the long strides music is taking in the actual making of motion pictures. You can go into any studio and find scarcely a company working without the use of music of some kind, usually the combination of violin, cello and a foot-power organ.

Music helps players portray various emotions, brings tears to their eyes or smiles to their lips, but that is not its most important use. Its greatest benefit is the help it gives in providing the right tempo to the action of each scene and rhythm to the picture as a whole. I have seen great stage directors beating time with a pencil or cigar during the rehearsal of a scene to correct the tempo. It is another one of those things that you feel but cannot explain. If, when the play is staged, the tempo is not right you know that something is wrong without knowing why.

If the right music is used during the filming of a scene the director has no difficulty in telling whether the action has the right rhythm. A dancer would have far more difficulty in acquiring the grace that accompanies perfect rhythm if he did not have the aid of music.

You don't have to have an understanding of music to appreciate this fact. I know fine directors who make use of "sideline" music and are aided greatly by it, although they don't know just why. A scene will be played and the tempo will not be in keeping with the music. There is a jarring note in the action that registers immediately upon the director. He will film the scene again and ask the players to take more time with their work. Although he doesn't realize it, the music was the instrument that corrected the error.

SIGNIFICANCE OF TITLES

By Robert Z. Leonard

A ROSE by any other name may smell as sweet, but it would not be so popular if it were called spinach.

If I were a film salesman, I would rather have a good title for the picture I was selling than a cast full of celebrities.

It means nothing to the story, to be sure. "A Woman of Paris" would have been the same picture if Chaplin had called it "What Happened to Edna." But I, for one, wouldn't have gone to see it if he'd used the latter title.

Selecting good selling titles for pictures may be hokum, but it is a practice indulged in by most of our modern writers.

Anyone would read "Prancing Nigger," "The Blind Bow Boy," "Main Street," "Told by an Idiot," "Seeing Things at Night" or books with similar titles. These are merely picked at random, but they are excellent examples. They sound interesting.

"Circe," the title of the story Ibanez wrote for Miss Murray, is a very good title, in my estimation. It is Ibanez's title.

Miss Murray and I spend a great deal of time in selecting titles of our productions. Sometimes they are suggested by the authors of the stories or members of our company. A property man proposed one of our titles.

"Fascination," "The French Doll," "Mlle. Midnight," "Fashion Row," "Jazzmania" are a few of our recent titles. I'm not taking credit for them, but I think they are examples of excellent selling titles.

Producer's Ideas on the Requirements of a Director

Director Should Create

By M. C. LEVEE

President, United Studios

NINETY-FIVE per cent of the motion picture directors today, whether they have it or not, need producing supervision.

By producing supervision I mean, the creation of plot and producing values in the translation of the story to the screen which the director himself should perfect.

The chief requirements for a good director in my opinion, is real creative ability to increase the merit of a story in telling it on the screen. Ideal motion picture stories are far and far between. The scarcity of book material that can be literally translated to the screen is becoming greater every year. Much of the modern literature we cannot tell the screen as it is written, because of the censors. Directors are being thrown upon their resources more and more every day.

Yet, the average director depends entirely too much upon others. He has a tendency to become mechanical. A director should not merely direct, he should create. He should lead where others leave off.

I could engage an assistant director, give him a wonderful story script form—all worked out for him—and he would undoubtedly make a great picture.

The director, however, who can take an average story with fair possibilities, and work that story into a great motion picture, is to my mind, a real director.

Another important requirement is the ability to make art commercial or in the vernacular of the trade, produce pictures with an eye on the box-office. We may rave about it in motion pictures but past experiences illustrate many sad lessons. Art is fine as long as it is in tune with the box-office. Give us artistic pictures by all means—but combine with art a generous sprinkling of box-office flavoring. In other words, the director must be a showman. He must sense the public's likes and dislikes and adapt himself to his skill accordingly.

There are indeed few directors who today combine the qualifications we have mentioned. Because of this fact, in nearly every instance, producing supervision over the director's supervision is essential. In view of this fact, I contend that a director's value is measured by the amount of supervision necessary. A director who expects to have his problems worked out for him should not receive a salary equal to that of another director who creates his own solutions. Yet this is the situation we find in the producing field today.

Must Be Keen Student of Human Nature

JULIUS BERNHEIM.

General Manager, Universal City

THE essential requirements of a good director are many and varied.

First he must be a keen student of human nature, for without this quality his directorial efforts will be greatly hampered. He must know color values; he must know lighting; he must know how to build tense situations; what is constructive by way of suspense; he must be in constant touch with the outer world regarding the ever-changing whims of the entertainment public at large; he must be an executive, an organizer, for in no production unit is harmony complete unless all the contributing branches are in accord with one another.

A good director studies his play and his players and be open to suggestion at all times. He must know and appreciate production cost. There are occasions when a director works at a disadvantage, but a good motion picture director can, as a rule, find a way to overcome what might be seemingly insurmountable obstacles.

Conditions are greatly changed in the industry with regard to the feeling between the director, executives and the players. While there have been rumors of rather slight antagonism with a production unit in the past, this has now ceased to exist and working conditions are quite harmonious.

The successful director is the one who shares his confidences with the players and technical staff attached to his unit and it is a common occurrence now-a-days for a director, star and cameraman to be continually exchanging suggestions which will lead to a better grade of product.

The good motion picture director must have unusually keen insight on script changes; he must be a man of many moods, a clear thinker, a fast worker, competent, keen and human.

Breadth of Knowledge

By JESSE L. LASKY

Vice Pres. Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

You ask me what constitutes the requirements for a good motion picture director.

It is rather difficult to answer, as a good director must have such a wide range of knowledge, technical ability, imagination and executive capacity that a brief definition summarizing his essential requirements is almost impossible. He must be artist and business man, technician and diplomat, creator and interpreter—all contradictory, but all necessary.

If I may, however, I shall discuss two of the things essential in the make-up of a good director. Lacking these elements he can never attain greatness, regardless of his abilities otherwise.

In the first place, a good director must be able to interpret the thought and spirit of the author whose story he is putting on the screen. And when I say "interpret" I do not mean that the director should merely translate words into pictures. It is rare, indeed, that a novel or play is so written that it can be transcribed literally and exactly into pictures. The reason—and we all have been reiterating it so long that it has become a commonplace—is that motion pictures are an entirely different form of expression, and as such demand liberties and are bound by restrictions that do not obtain on the stage or between the covers of a book.

For the director to interpret the thought and spirit of the author requires sympathy, understanding and imagination. It also requires thought and patience and knowledge of his craft. The time has passed in this profession when a director, either through ignorance or lack of skill and patience, can take a play or novel and substitute for its dramatic story something from his own mind that is easier to photograph. The time also has passed when a director can lazily turn into pictures the dialogue and situations of the stage.

No, the director must keep the spirit of the original story and put that spirit into an entirely different entity—a motion picture play.

And this leads naturally into the other quality. Any director who is to make a name for himself must have in him the seeds of creation. He must be an artist who can imagine and put into pictures his own dramatic interpretations of life. He must be able to make his own dramas and make them so they can be photographed. This requires imagination, a knowledge of dramatic values, a wide knowledge of life.

So, you see, the great director must be interpreter and creator—and it is rare indeed that one man has in him such contradictory qualities.

Need Not Be Expert in Story Construction

By EARL HUDSON

First National

A MOTION picture director should be just what his title implies—a director of the performances of the players who make up the cast of his picture, visualizing through the expressions and pantomimic abilities of the cast the thoughts, mental processes, emotions, reactions and determinations necessary to tell the story set forth in his script.

A director should have a general understanding of story values, but he does not need to be an expert in story construction. That is a specialty which should more particularly be the responsibility of the scenario writer. The script should be the director's blueprint, clearly indicating the expressions and registrations wanted in each scene by the scenario writer to tell his story.

The director's greatest claim to opportunity should be his thorough knowledge and understanding of what constitutes real acting and his ability to get superlative acting performances from his cast in accordance with the requirements of his script.

When he has done this successfully, he has discharged one of the greatest responsibilities attending the production of a picture.

Not a One Man's Job

By R. A. ROWLAND

First National

AS to what should constitute the requirements of a good director, I would say, first: he should know dramatic art. He should appreciate extremely characterization and tempo. These two are the main essentials that any director should have. He should also naturally know cutting, and titling, and help in the construction of continuities.

Of course, this might be asking too much, but if the average director had the first three requirements, with the aid of the producer working with the director, showing a judgment of showmanship in the selection of material with box-office value, and the aid of a capable continuity writer, and then last but not least, the appreciation of economy—this, in my opinion, would make a perfect director.

All these things are not impossible, although we cannot expect any director to know all the essentials that go into picture construction and making, the whys and wherefors of box-office value, etc., and it is the wise director who will not do everything himself but who will allow himself to be helped by a capable staff, as it is not a one man's job.

It is also the wise director who will listen, because it is not humanly possible for one man to have all the necessary qualifications enumerated above.

Follow Producer's Intentions

By SOL LESSER

Pres., Principal Pictures Corp.

"Mark now how a plain tale shall put you down."

Shakespeare in Henry IV.

In the production of motion pictures the director is the one who stands between failure and achievement. He either miscarries the producer's project or he is the one responsible for accomplishing its intention.

Sometimes the originator of a screen production is actually the director as in the case of Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, or Harold Lloyd. These artists I except. I also except those directors who are the responsible heads of their own individual organizations.

From my standpoint as a producer I address myself to the director whom I engage to transfer to the screen a book, play or original story that I am to produce. I want to produce this picture because I believe it contains a message and has the plot and the amusement qualities that I feel the public desires.

If my director misses this message or the plot or the entertainment qualities as I see them, then he does not accomplish my intention.

The motion picture director should have as his qualifications, first; a cultured understanding of humanity coupled with a sympathetic interest for all phases of human existence. By this I mean that he should have no prejudices for or against different social stratas but must have a well-organized brain, so that whatever type of character he has to direct, that character be representative of its class. In order to appeal to all classes of the public the characters must be representative of their class. Otherwise, the public will not accept such characters as living persons in real life.

The motion picture director's other requirements are stamina, patience, courage, originality, and he must be an organizer. He must effect the compromises between the actors, and the compromises between the technicians.

The temperaments of motion picture producers qualify them for different types of dramas or comedies. Thus we see certain directors succeeding in society plays—others in Western stories—still others in comedies—but always the same qualities endure—stamina, patience, courage, originality—and organization ability is most dominant.

The relationship between a producer and a director is often very chaotic. Most directors feel that producers are magnates and are only looking for the profits, without regard to art. I know sixteen producers here in Los Angeles who qualify as idealists—practical idealists, it is true—but all living under the influence of idealism. These producers all require another qualification of a director—and that is team work.

The successful director must have the ability and the loyalty to transfer to the screen the project as the producer wants his public to see it. The director who accepts the relationship of the producers a contributing factor and does not miscarry the producers conception is muchly sought. The producer must make his contribution by expressing his ideas and see that they are carried to completion on the screen with the aid of his director, or he becomes a misnomer, and turns into a capitalist.

Spiritual Quality

By MACK SENNETT

EVEN if I had the power of a magician I don't know that I could absolutely mould a motion picture director to order.

The stuff that makes a good director is not like the stuff that makes a good clerk or a good boxer. It cannot so easily be catalogued. It is an indefinable spiritual quality. I suppose you could call it an intense sympathy—a sympathetic, creative imagination.

Before he can tell the actors what to do, the director must have a definite, clear vision of the finished picture in his own mind. The poor directors, not having this vision, grope around, trying to arrange the ors thus and so, without know-what they are trying to do.

t as a great painter merely tries imitate the picture that his imagition sees, so a director tries to d the actors toward the vision
t is on his mind.

Of course, vision is not enough itself. A good director must also a good executive, a good diplo-t; he must have a sound appretion and understanding of dramatic construction and he must have nothing of the good teacher also his soul. Most of all, in our rticular line, he must have an ounding sense of humor; which er all, is mostly a subtle instinct contrasts.

A child's school lessons might be de most attractive to him by getting him interested and then by Slow motion photography could ually teach one the intricacies of sport in the world. It would ke a deep impression and a last-ger future, a more definite place

ed to go on down through the

The Screen's Ultimate Goal

The Best and Longest Seller of the Future Will Combine Poignant Dramatic Action with Pictorial Beauty and Symbolism

By FERDINAND EARL

WHEN J. Stuart Blackton purchased Thomas Edison's original "moving picture" camera and those doughty pioneers saw the first few feet of positive film projected, little did they realize that they were the mid-wives, so to speak, bringing into the world a new prodigy of art.

Even today, the average producer, acting as the wet nurse of this new infant of the Fine Arts, considers the photoplay merely as a drama told in animated photographs. He is not aware that the brat is destined to become the greatest and most astounding of the art creations of mankind. He is blind to the almost limitless possibilities of the pictorial phase of the screen.
The first primeval men to make sounds on a river reed little dreamed of Jazz orchestras and Symphony concerts!

Self-appointed prophets tell us in shrill tones that artistic and costume plays are commercial failures.
But I should like to know who has yet produced a genuine art drama?

Such a film must necessarily be the creation of genius and not only a commercial enterprise undertaken by clever fabricators of melodramas, using a few of the car-marks of the artist, to give a highbrow aspect to their concoction.

A successful art drama, skilfully blending the infinitely varied beauty of the masters of Art with the power and suspense of red-blooded plot and action, would have a universal box-office value for several generations, just as Victor Hugo's
"Les Miserables" or Gounod's
"Faust" have a permanent box-office or book-sellers' value, decade after decade. Such a film would win millions of new followers to the screen, forever silencing many scoffers and placing motion pictures on an equality with the printing press, placing its finest film productions on an equality with the masterpieces of literature. Nowadays we are making "Police Gazette" pictures, and wonder why our efforts at classic art are not taken seriously by cultured people.

The past generation of picture producers was confronted with the Herculean task of instilling in millions of movie fans a rudimentary idea of silent drama. Rapid, almost phenominal progress was made from year to year. But now we are equipped to do great things. For the screen opens up possibilities forever denied the theatre, forever denied opera, and forever denied literature and all the other arts. Motion picture people are generally too busy to realize the scope of the screen.

The penny-dreadful screen melodrama shall always be with us.
But gradually the big distributors will specialize with a carefully selected product, a particular brand of output, and develop their own peculiar following, similar to the subscribers to a magazine. The magazines find it profitable to adhere to a clearly defined policy in selecting their material for publication. And the youngster who wants to read exciting stories does not purchase the "Atlantic Monthly."
And the man with a scientific trend of thought does not subscribe to "Snappy Stories." If the youngster had to choose blindly, he would hardly ever spend money on books, because he would hardly ever get what he wanted. And the Scientific man would likewise seldom find what he sought and would spend very little money on books.
By having magazines and books of clearly defined types, the whole range of the public pays tribute to Bookdom!

When a great picture is made,
everybody in the industry benefits by it. Every bad picture hurts the whole industry. Saturday afternoon and Sunday are becoming the children's days, when serials and thrillers may be shown with great success.

REFLECTIONS

By JOHN McDERMOTT

I live to learn. I learn to live. Since the purpose of life is to learn the law of life, I must be all things some time, whether they be good or evil in the sight of my neighbor.
Only by knowing the evil will I know the good, and even so the wrong and right of things.

Can a neighbor tell me the taste of a fruit unless I have tasted something like? Or can he in his foolish wish to help or be friendly, eat my food to save me the trouble of digestion? Would I not starve to death under such friendliness? Even so it is with life and its lessons. Life is motion. I move from ignorance to knowledge.

The motion of life brings experience, remembrance of experience is knowledge, rightly applied knowledge is wisdom.
This is the tale of life. If the art of moving pictures portray only the good, how can I learn from this, since the quality of good is in appearance not always the antithesis of evil.
Since life is made of contrasts, it is quite necessary to picture both to arrive at a plausible conclusion.

Characterization

By RENAUD HOFFMAN

Better characterizations, finer characterizations will put over the oldest plot in the world when placed on the screen, the same as they continually do in story form.

Our greatest novels have succeeded because of finely drawn characterizations.

The same old plots is the answer to the question of where is our future material for motion picture stories coming from.

"Looking back over our greatest picture successes, we find that those with realism in their several characterizations have been the ones to succeed, just the same as we discover that this has been the reason for the success of our greatest pieces of literature. The audience or reader off-hand feels that it is the story, while in reality there have been no new stories, we all know; it has been merely individual characters so finely treated as to touch the emotions that the result has been success."

Lavish mountings are unnecessary for effectiveness, is the opinion of one whose first production, "Not One to Spare," with the simplest of farm backgrounds has delighted the most severe of our critics and has been rated as an exceptional photoplay by the National Board of Review.

In general Hoffman believes that the greatest effectiveness is secured with simplicity of story, with no detraction from the natural course of emotions by the introduction of unusual scenic displays which appeal to the audience merely in an optical and mechanical manner and which are mental purely rather than emotional.
Securing unconscious heart reactions or emotions is what really holds, is what is really wanted by an audience as well as a reader, is what forces the audience to force their friends to see what they have enjoyed. The plot may be old, the settings the ordinary of everyday people, but when the characters and their characterizations get "under the skin," then we are drawn, we need no titles and scenery is of second importance.

Hoffman believes that when the industry has become really stable that production costs will be much less than at present and that the masterpieces of the screen which will carry on through time and serve as examples to our followers will have been those of ordinary settings in which the characters have been so extremely human and such a normal part of ourselves that our emotions have indelibly imprinted the reactions into our memories.

The best actor in the world is no good, says Hoffman, when the director is unable to drop him unconscio-sly into his role. Characterization results, when thrown on the screen, are a direct result of the director's ability to pull from the actor unexaggerated, natural mannerisms.

Lavish settings, complicated plots and many titles are superfluous to Hoffman and our future material will be the same old plots with finer characterizations.

Should a Director Cut His Own Picture?

the story skeleton—because this is a cutting line—to the exclusion of everything else. Subconsciously, if for no other reason, they hew through thousands of feet of "takes" to that line. Often wantonly; frequently carelessly. "Plot—or bust!" is their shibboleth.

On the other hand, the director, born from the aura of incident and atmosphere he has created about his characters, knows that unless audiences are vitally interested in characters they are not interested in what these characters may do—which is not. He knows that an ounce of common sense is worth a pound of news-weekly action. He, therefore, by being allowed to supervise the final and most vital part of the production process, will naturally inject those character-blind, or cutter-scorned "bits" which often are all the difference between "hit" and "flop"; between "mechanical movie" and "mechanical success."

VICTOR HUGO HALPERIN

IN ANSWER to your question, "should the director cut his own picture?—

ABSOLUTELY! Inasmuch as the Director is held responsible for a finished production, and a picture not finished until cut. Why should he not be held responsible for a product which is not allowed to finish?

ED J. Le SAINT

W. GRIFFITH cut "The Birth of a Nation"—"Broken Blossoms"—"America," etc. Mr. De Mille cuts his own pictures—"The Miracle Man" was cut by its director. These are a few facts. I earnestly believe in fairness to the director that he should do the last cutting on his picture.

JOHN GORMAN

YOU can quote me as saying that the most successful directors are successful cutters and, in making a picture, a director carries in mind his sequence of movement, which after he is cutting. Little touches, poignant shots, meaning effects—all are carried naturally by the director to be fitted in at just a certain point, and the director should be given the opportunity to put into the cutting of a picture the same individuality and quality for which he had been originally engaged.

True, two or more minds are greater than one, and, after the picture has been assembled as the director sees it, very often it can be touched up by suggestions from competent people who are familiar with picture values and at the same time do not lose sight of the public's appreciation of "entertainment."

Too many pictures have been ruined before they ever reach the public by the arbitrary methods of people in command at the studios, because such people will not waive their own, personal opinion for the opinions of the nickels and dimes at the box office, which after all make it possible for us to produce pictures.

AL SANTELL

BECAUSE of the fact that no directors or persons see a story alike, it is my opinion that a director with the aid of his scenarist, should cut his own pictures. When Dorothy Farnum and I were preparing the continuity for "Babbitt," we saw different angles in the story. Miss Farnum saw things in "Babbitt" that would make a good story and I saw others. We worked together sticking to the story as closely as screen technique would permit, and worked it out according to our ideas. Most of our cutting was done at this stage of the game. If a continuity is prepared accurately, the final cutting is a great deal simpler than when thousands of feet of extra film are made. This latter case sometimes entails the elimination of whole sequences, which, of course, does not cut down the cost of a picture.

When my day's work is done, I look at the "rushes" made the day before and try to pick out the scenes that will remain in the picture. The others are thrown into the discard and this eliminates carrying this extra footage until the picture is complete. It also saves a great deal of time. From time to time, while making a picture, bits of business that have not occurred to you when preparing the continuity, show themselves and these are added. For this reason the picture can not be cut entirely as we go along.

A director's most valuable asset is a sense of drama that tells him just where to cut a scene and just where to build up one.

It is my contention that no one but the director should do the actual cutting of his picture. He could never explain to another person his angles or the way he sees certain characters. And, for this reason, many valuable things in the story would be lost, if the director left this part of the work to someone else.

HARRY BEAUMONT

IT SEEMS, to me, that there is no argument in the matter.

If a director does not CUT his own picture, who is close enough to the work to intelligently do it?

When a production is made, there are certain angles and viewpoints that a director could not possibly explain to another, such is their subtlety. Perhaps someone who had worked with the director for years and knew his viewpoint, might possibly be able to attempt this undertaking. I know of certain producing companies, who, when a production is finished, immediately take it out of the director's hands and let someone else, wholly unfamiliar with the director or the workings of the story, do the cutting. The result is inevitable. Scenes that the director took days to make to get over a certain piece of business are thrown into the discard and all because this person doesn't know why it's there.

The cutting of a picture is just as important as, if not more than, any other branch of the production. A director, to accurately cut a picture, must have a sense of drama. It is the same as a playwright building a play. All things must be taken into consideration, climax, suspense, etc.

Now I am just starting production on "Cornered" for Warner Brothers. Each day I will see the previous day's rushes and then eliminate those scenes that are no good. In that way, when the production is finished I will not have so many feet of footage to wade through.

WILLIAM BEAUDINE

HOW silly. BUT he should have someone edit it for him; that is to say, sometimes we can not see our faults like others can, and we who are broad minded enough to allow someone else the privilege of having good judgment, sometimes discover the error of our ways. Oh, yes, a director should cut his picture, then turn it over to the fellow who will edit it, and try and forget about it?

MELVILLE BROWN

THE director should by all means cut the picture and should be allowed to show it before an audience at least at a preview before a producer can give a true judgment of his work.

Three-fourths of the pictures produced are ruined in the cutting room and the number of minds mixing in at this critical point is the greatest cause for most of the poor pictures.

JEROME STORM.

Importance of Story Selection

By Frank Borzage

THE careful methods now employed by producers in selecting stories has been an outstanding development of motion picture production during the past few years and the salvation of the star system.

Under the old method of procedure stories were selected to fit the stars, with the result that it was impossible in many instances for the player to be convincing in his or her part.

An actor is greatest when he can make the audience forget his own personality and think of him only as the character he is enacting on the screen.

There will be motion picture stars as long as the motion picture industry exists, but the day when just any story could be filmed because there was a star who could draw people into the theater has entirely passed.

No better illustration of the care taken in selecting stories could be made than in the case of "Secrets," in which Norma Talmadge was starred and in the selection of Ramon Novarro's first starring story.

Joseph Schenck, producer of the Talmadge pictures, spent at least four months working with Miss Marion and myself to find a suitable story for Miss Talmadge. During this time more than two hundred stories were considered.

Equal care has been exercised in picking Ramon Novarro's first starring story. More than three hundred stories were submitted by the reading department as being possibilities for this production.

Slow Motion a Great Educational Power

By FRED NIBLO

SLOW motion photography presents to me the most interesting as well as the most scientific cinema discovery since the very beginning of picture making. The scope it covers is wide beyond conception; its educational value is unlimited and I firmly believe it will prove in a short time to be the greatest and most effective method of teaching. The possibilities of the various ways in which it may be further developed, are overwhelming.

Each year the screen comes to mean more in an educational way. It is a natural guide, for it has been proven conclusively that the eye carries a more definite impression than the ear. We may hear a thing and forget it. But rarely do we see an object and not have it make a deep stamp upon our subconscious as well as our conscious minds.

As an illustration of the great scope of slow motion photography take for example, a hospital clinic. During the performance of an operation the students in the back of the auditorium, those sitting in the balconies and galleries are able to hear the lecture accompanying the operation. By slow motion pictures even a more vivid impression of what is taking place may be given, than the naked eye could possibly discern, for slow motion photography shows the act at such a rate of speed that not even the fraction of a move is missed.

Think of what it would mean to a group of medical students to be able to go into a projection room and there see an operation performed in the most minute detail, to be able to view that operation again and again, until they became letter perfect in their special line of surgical work. The surety of that camera picture would mean more to them than all the lectures they might listen to during a lifetime.

New Cutting Method

A new method of cutting pictures which is anticipated will mean a tremendous saving of time and labor in assembling the finished product at motion picture studios, has been invented by Alfred Allen Santell, it is announced at the F. B. O. lot in Hollywood. The invention is a process for marking the film automatically in "Takes" as it is run through the projection machine, so that the director, viewing the "rushes," may, by pressing a button, check any part which he wishes to leave out, or any place on the film where he wishes to put in new material.

Santell, who has just finished "Fools in the Dark," has been advised to have the process patented, and is doing so. Just how the machine works has not been divulged, for obvious reasons.

DISTINCTIVE PICTURES

Scissor Fears

By MARSHALL NEILAN

Not weak stories and lack of artistry on the part of the makers, but censorship and a certain portion of the exhibitors are to blame for the much discussed dearth of exceptional pictures. The public wants exceptionally fine pictures, of course. It has learned to discriminate; it literally "shops for its screen entertainment." But it does not always get good pictures and when it does not blame the director, the scenario writer and the producer.

More often than not, neither of these three are to blame. All of them have to make the kind of pictures the public is entitled to see when it pays its money at the box office. But the public does not always see the picture the director made, or the story the scenarist wrote. Instead it sees what the censor or in some cases the exhibitor thinks it ought to see.

There is a well known axiom of motion picture producing that reads: "A picture can be made or marred in the cutting." In other words the producer realizes that the task of assembling the finished picture is one of the most vital steps in the entire lengthy and expensive process of picture making.

For this reason the director, working in collaboration with a trained cutter, devotes a great deal of time and concentrated energy to the task of cutting, editing, and titling the finished picture. The same care is exerted in the cutting room as in the previous steps of writing the scenario and photographing the picture.

When the finished photoplay leaves the studio it is as nearly perfect as artistry, hard work and skilled technical treatment can make it. Yet any censor or exhibitor can—and often does—change it by the simple process of wielding the scissors.

The censor deletes what he or she thinks the public should not see. That the deletions leave serious gaps in the continuity of the story or weaken dramatic situations makes little difference to the censor; his mission is to delete and delete he will. Otherwise he fails to earn his wage as a censor.

Then there is the exhibitor with a fixed schedule of daily showings. Along comes a picture that is a little too long to fit into his routine. Either he or his assistants get busy with the scissors and the picture is reduced to the length which meets with his program and his approval.

Inevitably the picture suffers and eventually the public is the loser. It sees a picture lacking in logic, drama and humanity. The characters of the story do things without reason or the story jumps to such alarming extent that it fails to hold the attention. This practice not only hurts the picture in the territory, but it is most discouraging to the producer and director.

How It Can Be Told

By Florence L. Strauss, First National Pictures, Inc.

As to directors—the whole-hearted admiration they inspire makes one simply want to say they are "just grand," and let it go at that, but being connected with the story end of this business, and being in a way like the archaeologist who digs and digs and always comes up with his own pocket handkerchief, we see the directors' work from the story angle, and that is not always an entirely satisfactory viewpoint.

While all stories need treatment and this treatment is often a great improvement on the original, in many cases it kills rather than cures, and after the story has gone through the so-called treatment bath it is often unrecognizable. In other words, the director, with the aid of the continuity writer, contrives the very thing that most of the big producers say they will not buy—an original, with perhaps the character names and one or two of the original situations retained. Motivation and characterization—even atmosphere—are often thrown into the waste basket and the result is a sort of studio bath which might just as well have been conducted without the initial outlay of a large sum of money for the finished product of a well known author.

How to Bore Them

A picture based on this type of treatment usually has a formula plot in which the movie puppets engage in a series of unrelated incidents which are often good bits of business, but are meaningless and unconvincing as drama. Result: the audience walks out bored, and railing against the monotonous sameness of the movies, and the Scenario Department continues its frantic search for new angles to old plots.

As a matter of fact there is no dearth of good picture material. While there's life there's hope—and also an endless supply of stories, but there is a lamentable lack of ability to create the semblance of life on the screen. It is the province of art, whether it be the art of the moving picture, or any other art form, to create the illusion of life and to wave the magic wand which transforms our every day dull routine into one crowded hour of glorious life in the theatre or in the picture house. That is why we go to plays and pictures—to live more intensely and to see more deeply into the hearts of our fellow human beings via the characters portrayed on the stage and on the screen. As one of our most popular young writers once said, "nothing human is alien to me", or, to pull another nifty, the proper study of mankind is man.

To sum up, "translation" for the screen should not necessarily imply annihilation; it should mean telling the same story in terms of a different medium. We hold no brief for an exact and literal translation. Our plea is for just enough of the original story to make it recognizable when seen on the screen and for the treatment to retain those qualities of drama suspense and heart appeal which made the story a desirable purchase in the first place. Perhaps a concrete example will more clearly explain what we mean:

The Example

If Shakespeare were to write Hamlet today, the first and second serial rights, the book rights, dramatic rights and picture rights would be contracted for before the manuscript leaves his desk. Let us say the story appears first in the Saturday Evening Post. The scenario editor reads it in galleys and is thrilled at the Universal appeal of the theme and the great characterization of the lead—this young man who is really every man who, at some time in his life, is faced with the necessity for immediate action and finds "the native hue of resolution sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought." This, thinks the editor, is a great story. He draws it to the attention of his company and they buy it because it has a great theme and wonderful characterization. The fact that it is by a well known writer and appears in the Saturday Evening Post adds to its attractiveness.

The story is then handed to the company's pet director, who finds that one of the female stars under contract requires a story and decides to re-write it for Ophelia. So when this masterpiece finally reaches the screen it runs something like this:

THE FLAPPER OF ELSINORE

A Henry Blah Blah Production

Based on the Saturday Evening Post serial "Hamlet", By William Shakespeare.

The picture opens at Elsinore, Hamlet's luxurious Long Island estate. His mother and step-father are greatly worried over Hamlet's blase and moody manner and, in the hope of getting him suitably married, they invite a distant relative from the country—little Ophelia—down to visit them. Ophelia of course makes a dead set at Hamlet, but without success. Polonius, also a house guest at Elsinore, and full of wise cracks, gives her the tip that she is a little too demure and modest, and suggests that she pull some flapper stuff. She thereupon dons a hip flask, starts smoking cigarettes and stages a big party where amateur theatricals and a great outdoor pool or bathing contest are the features. Dressed as a flower girl, she wanders around saying:

"There's rosemary, that's for remembrance; pray you, love, remember 'that we have no bananas today.'"

Hamlet (Conway Tearle type) sulks more than ever. All Ophelia gets for her pains is Hamlet's suggestion that she had better go to a nunnery. As a last desperate means of attracting his attention Ophelia, seeing Hamlet walking up and down his veranda, which he humorously calls the battlements, jumps from her second story window into the water below, pretending she is going to drown herself. Hamlet, aroused by the girl's peril, grabs his handy hydroplane and dashes after her. After a long race against the current (prolonged suspense here) he manages to rescue her just as she is going over the rapids. Claspng the now unconscious Ophelia in his arms, Hamlet tries to drive his plane back to Elsinore, but they are carried out to sea and after days of indescribable torture find themselves wrecked on a desert island. There in the great open spaces where men are men and women wear wisps of straw Ophelia at last gets her Hamlet, and the fortunate arrival of Laertes, Rosencrantz and Guildenstern clears everything up to a happy ending.

The above is a so-called treatment. Whether it is better than the original or not, modesty forbids us to state.

DETAIL

By ELINOR GLYN

THE thing that struck me most forcibly as being utterly wrong when I attended pictures before becoming connected directly with them was the lack of centering on detail. The general effect might be the one aimed at, but the minute things were oftentimes not in keeping at all.

The first thing I resolved to do when I became associated with cinema making was to curb or rather concentrate on the detail of my productions. Two of my stories were brought to the screen without my "sitting in" and were hopelessly wrong. The players were merely players—not understanding in the slightest the characters they were supposed to be bringing to the screen. Carefully following the thing to the fault I found that all the players felt as though they were working in a motion picture set, not as a part of the story they were enacting.

So the first necessity seemed to be to make the atmosphere real. As an example each rug placed upon the floor in "His Hour" has a history; each jewel worn by the heroine, Miss Pringle suggests the lady she is playing. The dashing costumes of Jack Gilbert who plays a prince really belonged to a prince. The story is one centered in Russia. Even the extras in this production shall accurately present the Russian feeling. One of Russia's great Imperial Generals plays the Grand Duke who visits Egypt and appears later in the story. I possess photographs of the real people whom the story was written about and all the actors and actresses are made up to look exactly like them. These people had a background of grace and joy and splendour and money was no consideration to any of them. There was no social climbing for they had arrived at the top by birth and breeding for generations and so there was a great simplicity and naturalness about them without ceremony. So the players must not and do not appear as "nouveau riche."

The players must "feel" the part. They are not merely puppets wearing the clothes and jewels of the role they are creating. There are miniatures upon the walls of the drawing room of a Princess—identical with those I saw in a Princess' drawing room when I visited her in St. Petersburg ten years ago.

When detail in pictures becomes universal; when players come to feel they are a part of the atmosphere not merely actors and actresses in the surroundings for a day, but when they lose themselves in every move—in every gesture are the character they are portraying, then the screen will come to represent the greatest art of all times.

The Public Knows Sincerity

By Monta Bell

THE public, meaning all who attend theaters, and that includes practically everyone between the ages of four and one hundred, recognizes sincerity. For that reason anyone connected with motion picture making or any other amusement or business that is catering to the public should be sincere with him or her self.

My association with Charles Chaplin while he was directing "A Woman of Paris" and before and after its completion is the most highly prized and memorable of any of my short life.

One of the most valuable things I learned from Mr. Chaplin was to avoid movie tradition. He has done this more successfully than any other director. One of the greatest handicaps of the screen is that too many producers, directors and actors refuse to get away from cinema convention. Too many stories are filmed the way they have been done since the first motion picture was made.

One of the outstanding beliefs set up for motion picture makers is the theory that the intelligence of the average person is equal only to that of a child of twelve years of age. This may or may not be true. If it is true the mind of a child of twelve is equally as alert as that of a man or woman of sixty years and is more open to recognize sincerity than that of the so-called intellectual person. The child may not be able to tell why—but it will feel and "get" your message, provided you are on the level with yourself in the telling. And, too, a director cannot go far wrong if he retains simplicity. Aren't all great things simple?

The "highbrows" seldom discover sincerity, ability or genius until the rest of the world knows it. This is clearly demonstrated in the case of Charles Chaplin. Children first acclaimed and recognized him as a great genius. They could not tell why but they appreciated him and in turn persuaded their parents to see him. Years later intellectual magazines proclaimed Chaplin as one of the greatest artists of all times. The intellectuals are improving—they usually wait until a man is dead.

The basis of Chaplin's success is sincerity. He is guided by his own convictions—is honest with himself.

"The Snob," by Helen R. Martin, will be my first directorial effort for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. I did not choose this story for its box-office appeal, because it was filled with hokum or because it had sex appeal. I read the story and it appealed to me. I was sincere with myself and intend to be so during its production. I still believe the public recognizes sincerity.

Placing

By Cecil B. DeMille

The square peg in the round hole has been one of the persistent problems of this art-industry.

Janie Macpherson is a conspicuous example of the changing of a peg. Janie Macpherson was a successful and popular actress under Mr. D. W. Griffith. She came to me for a job as an actress. I saw in her a possible actress—and something more. I saw in the vivid manner she presented her case to me, a real imagination. I insulted her so when I suggested that she change her $175 a week as an actress for $25 a week as an apprentice writer for me—that she took the job just to show me!

I further insulted her. I told her that her early efforts would do credit to a plumber. I made her so sore she literally worked her soul out to make me eat my words. When she first argued with me on dramatic subjects I gained but little. Then slowly but surely the spark of dramatic intelligence within her stirred—and gradually she came to fight on equal terms with me until today she is one of the most successful and dependable writers in motion pictures.

We just changed the hole to fit her.

Gloria Swanson was doing rather well in comedy. One day I saw one of her comedies. She sold herself to me as the serious dramatic actress. She is with just one little bit in what is otherwise a hilarious slapstick comedy. It was less than ten feet, a bit—a fleeting bit of pathos—but she showed this peg to be a perfect fit. We gave Miss Swanson her chance—and she made good.

It has not been my pleasure to have Ernest Torrence as a member of any of my casts—but he is an excellent example of the square peg who himself discovers that he can also fit a round hole—and is then against the odds of selling that thought to those who employ him.

Mr. Torrence was an excellent comedian. Tall and angular, an excellent actor, he was usually in constant demand. But sometimes the right comedy part was not always available—and Torrence felt that he could better himself by devoting his talents to a more extensive field.

When he announced that he was so prepared to do "villains" the ciseacres laughed at him. For months Torrence tried to sell himself in this new guise—and finally James Cruze believed him. Then came the great part in "The Covered Wagon" which overnight made Torrence one of the most famous "heavies" of all time.

The late Wallace Reid, for instance, wanted to be a director—but we saw him as far more valuable as an actor.

There are many little guides one can follow in trying to fit pegs to proper holes. The care of the clothes, the poise and carriage of the body, the glancing of the eyes, the modulation of the voice, the size of the hands and feet, the extent of poise—all of these carry messages to the practiced observers.

Star Making

What Carl Laemmle Has Done—Note the Important Directors and Public Favorites He Has Developed

The list of stars and directors which Carl Laemmle actually started in the business, those whom he discovered in the ranks of other companies and raised to stardom, and those who have reached under his guiding hand the zenith of their career, would make a near blue book.

For instance, it may occasion surprise that Ben Turpin did his first cross-eyed acting in the old Universal Studio at 11th Avenue and 43rd St. This old Imp Company was composed of players now extremely well-known whose names were first pushed above the horizon by Universal,—players like Mary Pickford, Jack Pickford, Thomas H. Ince, King Baggot and George Loane Tucker. Of these, Ben Turpin and George Loane Tucker actually got their first start with Universal. Others who are very prominent today who made their first start and got their first boost along the ladder of fame at Universal, include Lon Chaney, who played on the Universal lot for six years; Jack Holt, who became a prominent leading man in three years; George Hackathorne, who played his first part in "Sue of the South" in support of Edith Roberts; Betty Compson, who began her career in Universal bathing girl comedies; Mary MacLaren, who was discovered by Lois Weber and played for five years as a star on the Universal lot; Carmel Myers, Mildred Harris, Priscilla Dean, Lois Wilson, Zasu Pitts, Gladys Walton, Edith Roberts, Kenneth Harlan, Cleo Madison, Ella Hall, Louise Fazenda, Cullen Landis, Hobart Henley, Lois Weber, Rupert Julian, Allen Holubar, Franklyn Farnum, Edith Roberts, Eddie Polo, Annette Kellerman, Miss du Pont, Gertrude O'mstead, Neal Hart and Violet Meser-eau.

Here are the names of a number of players who got their actual start elsewhere but who were developed, advertised and made drawing cards by Laemmle productions and advertising:

Rudolph Valentino played his first picture on some other lot, but he was developed from an extra into a very competent leading man and to the steps of stardom by Laemmle. Wallace Reid played an extra part in a Vitagraph picture before he joined Otis Turner in making Indian pictures on Dyckman St. His rise in Universal was very rapid. J. Warren Kerrigan and Dorothy Phillips worked together in the old Essanay Company for a year; Universal took Kerrigan first and made him a star of the first water; Dorothy Phillips came to the eastern Imp Company as an ingenue and developed rapidly. She also got her husband, Allen Holubar, into the company as an extra. Laemmle gave Holubar his first opportunity to direct and Holubar showed right off that he had the spark of genius.

Another actor who received his first opportunity to direct from Laemmle was Erich von Stroheim. His first picture, "Blind Husbands," set a new mark in the moving picture industry and its release today as it was first produced is proof of the merit and ahead-of-the-times character of that production. Rex Ingram is also indebted to Carl Laemmle for his first directorial work, which was done in the old Imp studio and continued at Universal City for four years after that.

Another star who reached the fullness of his power with Universal was Harry Carey. He had been one of the old Biograph villains before that. Frank Lloyd was first an actor on the Universal City lot but Laemmle gave him his first opportunity as a director. Monroe Salisbury didn't do his first work at Universal, but he rose to the ranks of stardom in a four-year engagement at Universal City.

Mary Fuller and Florence Lawrence, two of the most prominent stars of their day, reached that position through the advertising that Laemmle gave them. Patsy Ruth Miller received the greatest opportunity of her career in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame"; Vivian Prescott, who now declares she will return to the screen, is an oldtime Universal player, and Niles Welch was first brought into prominence through Universal engagements in the east and in the west.

Harry Meyers, although he had played a few years for Lubin, became a star and a director for Universal. His pictures with Rosemary Theby advanced them both materially in the moving picture scale.

Robert Z. Leonard may have played his first role with some other company, but he first attracted attention as co-star with Ella Hall and director with Universal. Later his direction of Mac Murray for Universal brought her a popularity which she had never attained before.

So far as is known, James J. Corbett did his first moving picture work on the Universal City lot; as did Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven. Elmo Lincoln attracted Laemmle's attention and the contract which he offered him made him a big drawing card. Ben Wilson played with Mary Fuller in the old Edison Company, but when he came with Universal, he became a big drawing card and later a director of world-wide renown.

Marie Prevost made a reputation for herself as a bathing beauty but Laemmle made her a star.

Colleen Moore made her first five-reel production for Universal. None of the above are now with Universal. But Laemmle has a group of stars working at Universal City, all of whom were developed right on the Universal lot. They include Virginia Valli, Mary Philbin, who was Laemmle's selection in a beauty contest in Chicago which was won by another girl. She has a brilliant future ahead of her. Hoot Gibson played for four years in the ranks of Universal's horse marines until Harry Carey became a Jewel star. Jack Hoxie, another western star, played his first five-reeler for Universal in the days when Louise Lovely was just approaching stardom. He was then call Hart Hoxie.

William Sullivan, starred in the "Fourth Leather Pushers" and the "Fast Steppers" series, is also a discovery of Laemmle. Reginald Denny, while he didn't begin on the Universal lot, first attracted Laemmle's attention as a candidate for the "Leather Pushers" series. His rise to fame has been more rapid than that of any star that Laemmle ever developed. Eileen Sedgwick is another star that Mr. Laemmle has developed.

A star who was discovered by Julius Stern but all of whose pictures have been released to date under the Laemmle banner, is Baby Peggy. First regarded as a screen novelty, she soon became a star and one absolutely unique in the history of moving pictures.

Another in whom Laemmle takes great pride in discovery is Laura La Plante.

Originals Needed

John Lynch Says Available Material Will Be Exhausted in Ten Years

Original stories are needed for the screen, says John Lynch. And Lynch knows a lot about scenarios. He believes that the time will come when popular books and Broadway stage successes will be insufficient for the demands, and that special product must be available for the fresh talent.

"Development of a new group of writers of original stories will amount to a renaissance of the industry," said Lynch, "because the film producers started out with original material as the basis of their work. In saying that we must return to material written specially for us I have three ideas in mind: First, the industry will in the next ten years pretty well exhaust the available material among the classics; second, with such material exhausted the number of books and plays suitable to conversion into pictures will be insufficient for the expanding production activities, and, third, we must arrange to develop suitable vehicles for an entirely new and highly individual group of youngsters who are coming to the front in pictures.

"When I say picture producers must eventually return to original manuscripts I do not mean that we must consider stories submitted to us by high school students, housewives, dissatisfied clerks or salesmen with an ambition to write. But I do mean that the industry must undertake the cultivation of trained writers—the type of young man or woman now earning his or her living by contributing stories to the hundreds of fiction magazines in the country. Such young people could be employed and put through a thorough technical training in a studio. The things he or she would learn would be a distinct sense of what can be photographed, a knowledge of what can be translated into silent expression by normally good players, and what situations best permit of pantomime, remembering that not every famous screen star is a pantomimist, like George Arliss or Norma Talmadge, for example.

Value of Shots

"The young screen writer should learn the value of 'shots.' They should study what is now seemingly the exclusive knowledge of directors and cameramen; that is, the potentialities of lighting effects. An active fiction mind in writing a plot might well be able, with a substantial knowledge of lighting, to devise uses for this lighting in direct relation to the plot in a manner which would lift it from the plane of an ordinary thing to something of superb merit.

"Your present day magazine and novel writers, lacking almost entirely in knowledge of the technical possibilities of screen adaptation, are not as likely to hit upon as thrilling a picture plot as those who have the advantage of having worked in the inner circle.

"Another great asset for a screen writer is a sense of production costs. If a man is working for a company which is willing to spend $250,000 for a picture, he can do many more things with an idea than if he is obliged to turn out the story for a $50,000 or a $60,000 picture.

"To get the foundation for such values a man must be in and of a motion picture group. He could not be expected otherwise to be in a position to gauge cost prices.

"Writers trained in screen technique will, furthermore, be enabled to employ greater imagination in weaving plots directly for the screen than would be the case if they wrote originally for the spoken stage, because trick cameras and trick lighting give immeasurably broader scope in presenting a story.

"Of course all young writers who might be taken into the studios would not develop beyond a certain point; they would drop out, just as writers in the fiction, newspaper and dramatic fields flare up and then die—but there will be a few who will rise to meet all opportunities, and from these there will develop men who in time will create an entirely new form of fiction—a fiction of and for the screen.

Novels Not So Old.

"The novel as a form of writing has been in existence only since 1760 or thereabout; the short story is of comparatively recent origin; there is every reason to believe that films will bring to life something equally individual.

"The old crowd of newspaper men and authors who went into the motion picture business ten or fifteen years ago to produce original scripts, men like Monte Katterjohn, J. G. Hawks and Gardiner Sullivan, must have legitimate successors, just as new stars must come to replace the old favorites, who inevitably must drop out.

"More originality has been displayed in technical matters in motion pictures in the last ten years than has been the case with story material. It is a situation which must be adequately met if pictures are to go on developing."

Oh, How the Infant Child has Grown!

By J. STUART BLACKTON

FOR the very simple reason that I was the supremely fortunate individual to have been assigned to go over to East Orange, N. J., on March 12, 1896, to interview Thomas A. Edison, regarding his newly invented moving picture projector while I was a combination sketch artist and special story writer on the New York Evening World, it seems to have followed during all these long and active intervening years that I have been considered as a connecting link between the motion picture industry when it really was "in its infancy" and today, when I may be justified in saying, its grown-up age.

My partner, A. E. Smith, and I purchased a projector in the early summer of 1896; the intention being to provide a motion picture act to show in the vaudeville theaters. This we did. For several months of 1896 we confined ourselves to such form of entertainment; our act generally running about 12 minutes and requiring usually 10 pictures. These pictures all told averaged between 30 and 35 feet in length and naturally required slightly more than half a minute for each complete picture.

The time between the actual run period of the 10 pictures and the 12 minutes or so utilized by the act was brought about by the frequent re-changing of films. In the very early days each picture was a unit in itself; being threaded and run through the projector, then removed to make room for the following picture.

"The Good Old Days"

The subject material seemingly was quite as much of a problem then as it is nowadays, with the minor exception that authors did not blithely demand a huge fortune for a story, nor was it necessary to pay a king's ransom to use a location. Those certainly were "the good old days"—for you could go down and borrow the ocean for a production and Father Neptune would thank you for the interest you had taken in his domain. You could ask almost anybody for the use of their property and they were glad to have you go as far as you would like. The only persons who really objected to motion pictures were the actors. You couldn't hire them, it seemed, for love or money. They would have nothing to do with appearing in a film.

Not a great deal of thought was given to actors in those days, and stories meant nothing at all. The big idea was to get an animated photograph of something that moved. The public was completely satisfied to see anything which actually had something like life-like motion on the screen.

Early Thrills

Considering the attitude of the public at that time, it can be real what a thrill was produced by showing the New York Fire Department responding to an alarm. It created a furore. It caused more talk than "The Ten Commandments." Griffith with his greatest success never got a bigger thrill out of audience than obtained by "Black Diamond Express" being shown crossing the stage at 60 miles an hour.

Several months later this film crowded out of popularity by the production entitled "The Twentieth Century Limited Travelling at Miles an Hour," during which the audience witnessed the locomotive taking water while on the move. Another tremendous feature was public baths of Milan, Italy. This showed fancy diving from a 20-foot spring board and was so popular that it was repeatedly run several times for the same audience. A close competitor for its popularity was "Charge of the French Curussiers."

These two later-named pictures were shown at the Harry Lewis Theater in Pittsburgh in some unexplainable manner the Milan bath picture got to the projector wrong end first. It must have been an inexperienced operator—for once projection had started it seemed that was unable to stop the picture. It was run backward through to the bitter end and never before or since has a motion picture been met with

The Laugh Factory

By HAROLD LLOYD

Being funny is a serious business. This remark has been made before and is likely to be made again. Since no one has ever denied it, we may safely assume that it is a fact. It is also a fact that a man must not take himself too seriously, even under the provocation of making a funny picture. That sometimes results in calamity.

For years a distinction has been made between the so-called serious drama and the comedy. This is an unfair classification. There is nothing more serious in life than the production of a comedy that attains its purpose of making people laugh. I have not the slightest doubt that more effort goes into the making of a high-grade comedy than is incorporated in the production of some of our biggest dramatic screen offerings.

Right from the start the comedy producer must of necessity accept a lot of grief that does not fall to the dramatic producer. A dramatic feature is produced from a carefully prepared script, which, in the hands of a competent director, is a detailed map of the entire picture. In our case, we never work from a script. We provide ourselves with the basic outline of a story, but the actual comedy is incorporated as we progress—as situations develop and lend themselves to 'gags,' by which I mean the incidental pieces of business that make the situations funny.

Various estimates have been made by scholars as to the number of basic plots possible in the drama, and the numbers range from seven to thirty-five. However that may be, it is said by those who are supposed to know that all drama, both stage and screen, must be based on one of those plots or a variation thereof. From this it may easily be seen that the producer of drama has something to fall back on. The producer of high-grade comedy has no such safety net; he can't fall back on anything. The public demands that a comedian be funny, and they do not consider him funny unless he is original. They are quick to detect any attempt on his part to work his old stuff over again, and they retaliate by refusing to laugh at his worn-out bag of tricks. When audiences refuse to laugh at a comedian he finds himself in the position of the bathing beach life saver who can't swim.

Growth of Farce.

Comedy grows no more from the things that might happen than from the things that actually do happen. The things at which we laugh the loudest are things with which we are familiar. In reading the Greek and Latin classics in our school days we frequently came upon passages which the instructor informed us represented the keen wit and humor of the author. It was well to label them, for we would never have recognized them as laugh-provoking observations. The reason for that was the fact that they dealt with people, times and conditions long since dead and gone and with which we of the present day had no possible contact.

On the other hand the spectacle of a fat man slipping on an icy sidewalk never fails to get a laugh. The same is true of a man attempting to drive a nail and smashing his finger in the process, or a man with his arms full of bundles attempting to keep his hat from blowing off. These things are funny because they have happened to all of us and probably will happen again. They are trying experiences for the individuals involved and we sympathize with them, but we laugh, nevertheless, because they are human touches.

We have found that invariably it is the little human touches which gain the biggest laughs. We never have screened a more effective laugh making sequence than the one in which the boy ate the camphor balls in "Grandma's Boy."

Ordinarily this situation might be classified as "hokum." But the sympathy of the audience was with the boy. And when he ate the camphor balls by mistake, and yet couldn't disclose the fact to his sweetheart, it reached home and received an even bigger laugh than we anticipated.

One of the main secrets of comedy-making is getting your audience with you and having them sympathize with you. They take more interest in you. They laugh at your petty little difficulties, and the laugh is always magnified because of the sympathy they hold for your character.

The man who tries to be funny is lost. To lose one's naturalness is always to lose the sympathy of your audience.

Plots Not Difficult

The development of a comedy, as we work, is most often along the lines of sincerity. In the instance of "Why Worry" we aimed for straight farce. We made no effort at sincerity.

The least of our difficulties always is "plot" as applied to the general outline of a story. It is in the development and treatment that we face our greatest task. We invariably find, however, that one situation leads to another—one "gag" builds up its successor. We seek always to build up every situation to the "topping off" point. A laugh sequence always is best when it builds up. The top off "gag" of any situation always must have a greater farce than any other in the sequence. Sometimes the mistake is made of letting a situation fall flat through inability to furnish a top off laugh. This we always try to avoid.

Originality of "gags" is the constant bugaboo of our staff. Many ideas are suggested, but sometimes few are chosen.

There are many factors to be considered in the selection of a "gag". It must be clean; it must fit the situation, and it must have a new twist. It sometimes is impossible to furnish an entirely new gag, but when an old one is brought into play, it must be dressed in a new garb. That is quite essential.

The Next Advance

By George Fitzmaurice

The next marked advance in the motion picture art will constitute the more general use of color photography in its various treatments.

For years the use of color in photoplay productions has been very much the exception. There have been short subjects in color which however, have been looked upon as novelties. In photoplays, an occasional touch of color has been employed to enhance the beauty of a scene. This however, has generally had an unfavorable effect upon the black and white scenes which were made less effective by contrast.

The effect was the same as the use of soft focus views here and there in a photoplay, which practice has now been practically discontinued for the reason that the contrast between the soft focus effects and the sharp views tended to make the production an assortment of different photographs rather than a smooth method of telling a story.

In other words, the illusion was interrupted. The mixed use of treatments made one conscious of photographic tricks instead of keeping one's mind on the story. Photography should be used to enhance a story or a situation and not to overwhelm it, as it were. At least as far as the photoplay is concerned.

In "Cytherea" I have attempted to capitalize on the very objection which color photography has had in telling the story in a photoplay. The contrast between the colored scenes and the black and white scenes is just exactly what I needed to add strength to the plot. The lovers in the story dream of Cuba as a land of colorful beauty. Their dream is shown in all its attractive colors. When they arrive in Cuba they find it hot, filthy, drab, just the opposite to the dreams. To register this contrast most effectively we actually show their dream with all its colorful beauties. The dream in color is therefore rendered with much greater force than if both the dream and the actuality were shown in black and white.

It is my belief that color will play a most important part in thus registering contrasts in future photoplays. This will prove only one of many advantages in the use of color. We have, to use a bromide in film vernacular, merely scratched the surface of color photography. One producer has just finished a production which will be colored in its entirety. This will prove another interesting experiment. Others are devoting more time to the thought of color in productions than ever before. It is plainly evident that we must look to the use of color photography for our next great step in the progress of motion pictures and it is also apparent that the coming year will see the first signs of greater development of this factor in the film art than ever before.

It has often occurred to me when confronted with the conditions ng the present day producer that ve were not entirely surrounded ensors, politicians, and other can-ous growth, that we might still able to please the public to the e extent that a picture run backnowledge that the audience of topects much more, and they are ttled to correctness of detail and best we can possibly give them—that has no bearing whatever on fact that the public primarily and ays can be expected to go to the

Wants to "Cuss"—But—

Like every other producer, I some-es want to cuss at existing con-ons and then I sit down for a ute and recall that it seems only week since I went over and ed with dear old Edison and deed to enter the motion picture usiness. It actually hasn't been eg; not yet 30 years, and it is well realize all that has been accomphed in that short period.

It won't be long now until the sorship, political "big sticks" and ier aggravations have reached their pper level. It won't be long un-the public themselves will have omething to say concerning their otion picture bill-of-fare. It won't long until a new era confronts and then all of us should rememr that the audiences of every own generation have sought and quired clean entertainment.

It was easy to entertain an au-ence when a motion picture of The Ocean Waves at Coney Island" omplished the desired purpose and will be just as easy nowadays as it as then to give them an equally atisfying picture, for be it rememered our knowledge of the motion cture industry has made far more ogress than the motion picture enertainment demands of an audience.

They want to be pleased. It's up to us. We accomplished our purpose in the old days when we had nothing at all on which to base our action and we can do it now when we have ousands of loyal and intelligent men and women to deliver results. There is just as big a future for motion pictures today as there was when Albert Smith and I bought our first projector.

Producing Abroad

By J. Gordon Edwards

Having made two pictures abroad I may take the attitude of one who knows fairly well what the conditions are for producing there and the difference as compared to the United States.

During my last trip to Italy I found several of the American companies making pictures, notably that of the Inspiration Pictures, who are making "Romola" with Lillian Gish, and the preparations being made for the filming of "Ben Hur."

Atmospheric conditions in Italy are all that can be desired from a photographic standpoint. The scenery is magnificent and lends itself to beautiful effects and picturesque background. From an artistic standpoint the director of a picture has at his command men and women who are artists in their respective callings.

Another item that lends itself to producing certain films on the Continent is the low cost of production as compared with large spectacles made in the United States. That of course appeals to the financial end of the production. Types there are in abundance and in handling huge mobs the cost is cut almost to a third what it would cost in this country.

I feel that when a picture is made abroad with an American cast it enhances the value of the film for motion picture audience will see faces of their known players in a background that is entirely new and highly interesting.

Speaking of making pictures in Italy I can say from actual experience that I have always found the Italian the most charming of people to work with, that they exalt art, and even the humblest extra does his utmost to give a dramatic touch to any scene he may be in. Italy appreciates interest the Americans have shown and are showing in selecting this country as a field for picture opportunities.

How They Caught the Last Buffalo Rush For Tom Ince

A Bad Hour for the Cameraman

Paul Perry, of the American Society of Cinematographers, interestingly describes the "shooting" of the last buffalo stampede on this continent in "The American Cinematographer." Perry had six men working under him, with Reeves Ince directing, making "The Last Frontier" (First National) in Calgary, Canada. In part Perry says: "Anyone who has not seen a stampede of 5,000 buffalo can scarcely appreciate the thrill of shooting such a scene. We had a mile and a half of 15 foot wire fence stretched on either side of the cameras. The opening between the two sides of the fence was about a mile across at the end but as the fence ended near the cameras it tapered down to an outlet of about 75 yards. This triangular arrangement compelled the buffalo to 'hunch up' as they rushed toward the cameras and, when they reached the apex of the triangle, they were crowded into a greening pack so that they were forced to go directly over the top of the camera pits.

The Beginning

As the stampede was set into action, the horizon became a long line of moving mass. Gradually the line narrowed and grew higher as the buffalo came nearer and were forced closer together by the triangular fence. Then the heavy mass grew distinguishable—one could make out the horns and the heads of the beasts as they stumbled forward. At the same time a dim roar became audible. It increased to a wild wail as the herd charged toward us. At last the leaders of the herd were close to us. We expected them to dash, unabated, across the tops of our pits.

Leaders Fear Lenses

But we were surprised. They halted momentarily as they, despite the surge behind them, perceived the mysterious camera lens and became conscious of the steady circular movement of the turning of the camera crank. Then, directed by a sudden decision within their thick skulls, they turned to the side and utterly avoided the fearful looking camera lenses. The animals which immediately followed the leaders likewise changed their course but as the rush became heavier the force behind prevented the bulk of the herd from side-stepping. By the time the middle of the pack had been reached, the buffalo, closely crowded, did not even see the lenses. They pressed forward, unconscious of the fact that machines were turning on them and making a record of their charging heads and crunching hoofs.

Zero Hour

For us in the pits there was an anxious moment when the hoofs of the first buffalo struck above our heads. Would the oil drum which covered the pit hold up? Or would it give way under the ponderous monsters? Would some of the beasts crash into the cavity, pen us beneath them and themselves be crushed and torn asunder under sharp hoofs as the rest of the herd stumbled onward?

But once the zero hour was passed we lost all thought of our fate and, becoming accustomed to the thunder overhead, concentrated on putting into celluloid what we saw through the 12-inch slits in our pits—just enough to allow the cameras and ourselves to look out. Sometimes we caught a clatter of hoofs which dashed within a hair of the pit opening. At other times it was a pair of enraged red eyes, or snorting nostrils. At still other moments the dust fleetly threw up a natural veil between us and the mob while particles of earth were flung into our eyes. At last the tail-enders straggled by. The rush was over and we were able to crawl out of the pits and relieve ourselves of the dust which so generously covered us.

The Great Cattle Rush in "Sundown"

By Earl J. Hudson

(Production Manager on the West Coast for First National Pictures and author of "Sundown," the story depicting the passing of the old West, written to be used against the background of a quarter of a million cattle being driven from this country to the still open ranges of Mexico.)

Figures themselves no longer stagger the imagination—millions of men and billions of dollars carry a message to our brains, but there is no thrill to them. If we actually saw a million men or a billion dollars (or at times even ten dollars) there would be a thrill in it.

When I learned that the cattle kings of our Great Southwest were being forced by the encroaching barbed-wire fingers of civilization to drive their mighty herds across the Rio Grande into Mexico where the cattle ranges are still open, I knew that an epic thing was in progress—a change that meant the passing forever of the picturesque old West, with its herds of cattle grazing on a thousand hills, the cowboy in his chaps and spurs with a bandana handkerchief tied loosely about his neck.

I knew that the spectacle would be unparalleled, a magnificent opportunity for the motion picture camera to record a phase of our national life which has reached its last stages; that such an opportunity would never occur again. And I wrote the story of "Sundown" to be photographed against this mighty herd of cattle being driven southward.

But the thrill, the spectacle, the dusty romance, the heat, the toil, the adventure of the whole thing I did not realize until I joined Larry Trimble and Harry O. Hoyt on the ground and saw the picture in the making. It was then that the thrill that lies in numbers, when the numbers are made objective in concrete bodies, burst upon me in all its grandeur. A quarter of a million cattle! Seen from the scout plane which was utilized for obtaining "shots" from all angles, the mass of cattle was something inspiring.

And then there was the stampede. We began to be afraid that we might not get just what we wanted, but a lost calf started it; the calf was hidden from its mother. The cow started out to find it and her bellowing and maddened fear soon communicated itself to an entire section of the herd.

We've read and heard about action in motion pictures ever since they were invented, and there have been films that have carried action, it would seem, to the ultimate limit in search of a thrill, but I have never seen, or even dreamed of, such action as was aroused by that fear-maddened cow.

The entire herd seemed to go suddenly mad and from being a mile-long, slowly advancing, steam-covered lava bed, it spurted ahead in a roaring, rushing, blinding mass of fury, like lava tumbling down the precipitous sides of a mountain. Everything went down before it. The dust rose hundreds of feet in the air and spread out in a trailing, low-lying cloud, like a smoke screen. Nothing could be seen but the dust, but we could hear and feel the onrushing of the herd. The very earth trembled under the impact and the trampling of feet rose into a mighty roar, somewhat comparable to the rush of wind down a heavily-timbered canyon, or the roar of a loosed flood of water.

We feared that the shack that had been erected in front of the stampeding herd in which the hero and the girl were to seek refuge from the cattle rush would be wiped completely off the face of the earth and Roy Stewart, Bessie Love and the cameraman stationed in it trampled to death. The making of the picture might have been turned to such tragedy had it not been for Stewart's marksmanship. He shot down a dozen of the plunging, maddened cattle within but a few feet of the shack in order to part the herd so that it would surge harmlessly by on either side.

Directors vs Authors

By JOHN S. LOPEZ

The director of the future will be a much less important figure than he now is—or thinks he is.

Yet, paradoxically, the director of the future will render a much more important service than he now does.

He will be less important from the viewpoint of public prominence, while he will be more important in the way of producing results.

And to attain this he will become more like the director of stage plays.

With a possible half dozen exceptions the public is hardly aware that such things as stage directors exist. True, their names are on the programs, but so are the names of the men who furnished the costumes. One does not see their names blazoned on the boards and in the newspaper publicity.

The director of the play is a liaison officer between the author of the play and the public. He has the dramatic technique necessary to put the story of the author over. The closer he is in sympathy with the author, the closer the personal contact between them, the greater the probability of success.

True, he may have to modify the author's ideas, but that is because the author is working in a medium of expression new to him and of which he knows nothing. But he knows the ideas he wants to convey better than anyone else in the world—and the stage director realizes this.

So they work it out together—the stage director weaving the author's thoughts into the fabric of the play on the loom whose weft and warp are technique and tradition.

It is because this is seldom the way in motion pictures that there are so many disappointments with stories that were expected to be big successes.

In the future the motion picture director and the author will work side by side, the one supplying the story and its theme threads, the other supplying the craftsmanship to give them picture interpretation—embellishing here, condensing there, but always in the harmonic scheme conceived by the author.

Although very often the director is blamed, and properly, for so twisting stories as to make them almost unrecognizable, the author himself—in many cases where he has been brought in on the picture—has proved far from blameless.

He is too often arbitrary and inflexible; and, although he is usually ignorant of screen technique, insists on interpretations that are absolutely impracticable.

And while they fight it out—neither yielding altogether but simply giving a trifle here and there, the picture ends a picture of compromises, and the producer and the public suffer.

The producer of the future, who is a very important factor in the matter, will take care to assure himself that there is a happy working arrangement between the director and the author, or whoever it is that represents the author's side of the problem.

"The Spitfire"

Producer: Murray W. Garsson

Distributor: Associated Exhibitors

As a Whole... FINE LINE-UP OF NAMES IN THE CAST WILL BRING THEM IN AND PROBABLY SATISFY THEM BUT PICTURE COULD BE MADE MORE INTERESTING BY SPEEDING UP MANY SEQUENCES.

Cast... A great collection of names. Betty Blythe has good opportunity to display her pretty form as the society girl who joins the chorus of a "girlie" show. Pauline Garon very cute as a member of the chorus. Elliott Dexter is adequate as the lover who is "misunderstood". Others include Robert Warwick, Burr McIntosh and Lowell Sherman whose characterization of the theatrical producer is at times a bit too stagey.

Type of Story... Society drama. An adaptation of the novel, "Plaster Saints", by Frederick Arnold Kummer. It turns out to be a re-hashed edition of the story of the wealthy society girl who is reared too strictly by her supposedly very righteous family. They cast off her sweetheart because of a scandalous but untrue story connecting him with a chorus girl. The society girl leaves her family and goes on the stage while the lover discovers that the righteous grandfather is guilty of criminal business operations. Complications involving the shooting of the girl's uncle by a cast off sweetheart, and the attack upon the newly-made star by her manager introduces some tension but the elimination of some of the footage would be advantageous in holding the interest. There are a few clever touches, particularly the one where Sherman looks for his watch after the chorus girls pass him on their way off the stage. It gets a laugh. There could have been more of the same kind.

Box Office Angle... The cast should please them and the names get them in. That's about all you have to talk about except the chorus girl stuff which is always good. The picture has also been given a very attractive production.

Exploitation... Stick to your cast, of course. Run a trailer showing the opening with Dexter waking up to find himself covered with an ermine wrap. Also a bit showing Betty Blythe in the pearl costume she wears on the stage or rehearsing with the girls. You can talk about the fact that it's a picturization of the novel, "Plaster Saints", and tie-ups with bookstores, etc. could be effected.

Direction... William Christy Cabanne; all right usually.

Author... Frederick Arnold Kummer
 Scenario... Raymond S. Harris
 Cameramen... Walter Arthur and Jack Brown.

Photography... Satisfactory
 Locale... New York City
 Footage... 6,109 feet.

"Tiger Love"

Paramount

As a Whole... HIGHLY COLORFUL ROMANCE WITH PICTURESQUE SPANISH ATMOSPHERE MAKES THIS PICTORIALY ATTRACTIVE; PLOT ISN'T A WINNER FOR ORIGINALITY.

Cast... Antonio Moreno and Estelle Taylor make a good looking pair of lovers. Others who acqui themselves creditably are G. Raymond Nye, Manuel Camere, Edga Norton, David Torrence, Snitz Edwards, Monti Collins.

Type of Story... Dramatic romance "Tiger Love" is an adaptation of the Spanish opera, "The Wildcat," a colorful romance with picturesque Spanish atmosphere for a background. It is chiefly this lavish, spectacular display that makes the picture attractive. There are any number of pretty settings and all that goes to make up a perfect Spanish atmosphere. Naturally the many spirited love scenes with Antonio Moreno, a dashing bandit lover, and Estelle Taylor, a dark-eyed senorita, are not without their own special interest. It's fine diet for romance lovers. The theme on the whole, however, is not especially new and you know from the start that the heroine will never be forced to marry the man she doesn't love.

When Marcheta's father faces ruin it is natural that to save him his daughter shall marry Don Ramon, the son of his creditor. It is also natural that she is in love with another, in this case the notorious bandit, the Wildcat, who kidnaps her on her wedding day and after proving that the bridegroom is unworthy, has the padre proceed with the ceremony. But just in time comes that cheery message that the Wildcat, and not Don Ramon, is the creditor's real son, having been reared by the gypsies. The wedding bells ring anyway.

Box Office Angle... Will please your women folks, especially the younger people, who are keen on romance pictures. The title should give them a good idea of what to expect.

Exploitation... "A Love Story of Spain. A story with punch, pathos and powerful appeal." So reads Paramount's press sheet. That ought to attract attention. Run a trailer showing Antonio Moreno and Estelle Taylor in one of their love scenes. Use plenty of pictures of Moreno and Estelle Taylor. Anything in the way of decorations indicative of Spanish atmosphere will be attractive. Good musical program will also help make the film interesting.

Direction... George Melford; good, overdoes the close-up.

Author... Manuel Penella
 Scenario... Howard Hawks
 Adapted by... Julie Herne from "El Gato Montes."

Cameraman... Charles G. Clarke
 Photography... Good
 Locale... Spain
 Length... 5,403 feet

Metro-Goldwyn

As a Whole... INTERESTING SITUATIONS NICELY WORKED OUT. THEY MAY NOT AGREE WITH RUPERT HUGHES' THEORIES, AS EXPRESSED IN HIS STORY, BUT THEY'LL BE ENTERTAINED.

Cast... Next to Lewis Stone, Huntley Gordon, who has one of the leading roles in this, is the most capable portrayer of the middle-aged, tired business man. Gordon is well suited and handles the part splendidly. Cleo Madison is his devoted wife. Eleanor Boardman is a pleasing, gay daughter. Aileen Pringle is giving Nita Naldi a close run for honors in her particular line. She's splendid in this. Norman Kerry, William Haines, Louise Fazenda, Lucien Littlefield and Raymond Hatton others who have small parts.

Type of Story... Comedy-drama. Right now there's a rush on the "dangerous age" plot with the good looking, middle-aged man seeking the society of women younger and better looking than his own, old fashioned spouse. This time there's an additional new slant,—that of the woman in business and her influence pro and con upon the men who must deal with her. Rupert Hughes seems to have a faculty for making even trite business appear thoroughly interesting and easy to digest. You're not likely to feel inclined to argue with his theories even though you may not agree with him, especially in regard to the idea of bosses and stenographers in after-hours petting parties. But the situations are interesting and the plot entertaining. A quantity of effective touches and humorous twists get this over in fine style. The titles are good and contain many laughs. The one about all men feeling it their duty to challenge every woman they meet to a wrestling match, is a corker.

Box Office Angle... Good entertainment. Should please your folks. Holds interest splendidly and contains varied degree of audience appeal. Fine cast and good production to boost it.

Exploitation... Play up angles of the story such as the woman in business and her contact with men of the business world. You might start another "should a wife work" controversy. Talk about the cabaret scenes. Use the names of those in the cast such as Huntley Gordon, Aileen Pringle, Eleanor Boardman and Norman Kerry. Run a trailer showing some of the comedy bits in which Eleanor Boardman displays her preference for Old Jackie. Stills of Gordon and Miss Pringle will also get their attention. Play up the title with catchlines suggested in the press sheet.

Direction... Rupert Hughes; excellent.

"A Self-Made Failure"

Producer: J. K. McDonald

Distributor: First National

As a Whole... SURE-FIRE COMEDY WITH GREAT SCORE OF REAL LAUGHS; FINE COMBINATION OF SITUATIONS THAT INCLUDE SOME GOOD HEART INTEREST TOUCHES.

Cast... Ben Alexander and Lloyd Hamilton delightful comedy pair, and Cameo, a clever little dog, an interesting third party in this "tramp outfit". Patsy Ruth Miller and Matt Moore make up the romantic end of it and Mary Carr is the usual sympathetic touch as the widowed boarding house mistress.

Type of Story... Comedy. "A Self-Made Failure", written and produced by J. K. McDonald, who also produced "Penrod and Sam" and "Boy of Mine", is a really delightful, wholly amusing comedy number that can't fail to win laurels as a box office attraction. It is sure-fire comedy and the laughs are there. Besides having the laughs and good humorous incident, "A Self-Made Failure" has a right interesting story. It contains some genuinely effective heart interest touches, a bit of meller, and smattering of romance, besides its uppermost element of comedy. Hero Hamilton and his pals, Ben and the dog, arrive in a hick town, via the bumpers. Hamilton is taken for a masseur professor and when the health resort proprietor finds he has the wrong man, he decides to have Hamilton continue the impersonation. This affords numerous amusing complications and introduces some bathing girl business. Then comes a breezy episode in which hero and Ben decide to help Grandma Carr, who keeps a boarding house nearby, regain the sulphur springs stolen from her by the hotel proprietor. There are laughs galore in this. A synopsis hardly does the story justice. It is wholly pleasing.

Box Office Angle... This one is in. Really delightful, corking good comedy entertainment.

Exploitation... Be sure to get this one and then go to work on it. Your folks will thank you for your trouble. If they want a good laugh, this is it. You have a fine combination of entertaining elements, sure-fire comedy predominating. Talk about McDonald's two previous pictures "Penrod and Sam" and "Boy of Mine" and recall Ben Alexander's delightful characterization in the latter. Play up Lloyd Hamilton's name and show a trailer including pictures of the tramp trio,—Ben Hamilton and Cameo, the dog. Use Mary Carr's name also. You can promise a laugh a minute safely enough. Do your best to bring them in. It should satisfy.

Direction... William Beaudine; excellent.

Author... J. K. McDonald

 Cameramen... Ray June-B. McGill

"Eve's Lover"

By MRS. W. K. CLIFFORD

The publishers of this unusual story offered it to the public as something strikingly worth while—the work of an author who publishes a lot more infrequently than the average one, and only when she has something really important to say. "Eve's Lover" is scintillating mental entertainment of the highest order—and its subject matter is particularly understandable in these later days of domestic discontent.

The story is laid in England, picturing the interesting society life of London and the equally interesting contrasting conditions in the English country districts with their quaint customs and picturesque English cottages.

It takes three people to form "The Eternal Triangle." Up to the present moment there is no record that there were more than two in the Garden of Eden. It is conceivable, however, in these days of fundamentalism and modernism that sometime some one may claim that the Mother of the Race had a lover and that it was not an apple that caused the original domestic disagreement. The "Eve" of the Mrs. Clifford story which is being elaborately produced by Warner Bros., is the representative of a great class of modern women—and she had a "lover." Also, she is the faithful representative of a modern class, whose examination under Mrs. Clifford's cleverly constructed microscope cannot fail to both entertain and benefit those who see the photoplay.

There are three characters in the story which are quite out of the ordinary. For these characters Warner Bros. have chosen artists of unusual distinction whose performances in their respective parts are certain to make motion picture history.

"The Guilty One"

Paramount

Whole... COMBINATION OF ROMANTIC TRIANGLE AND MYSTERY THAT FURNISHES BETTER FAIR ENTERTAINMENT; HOLDS INTEREST AND KEEPS DEVOTION FOR THE END.

...Agnes Ayres one of those business widows who eventually takes the company of another man only to help secure a big contract for her husband. Good in part. Edward Burns a nice acting leading man who really doesn't look as though he enjoyed being a busy husband. Crauford at the usual "other man". Stanley Taylor and Cyril Ring good in important parts.

Type of Story... Drama. Two quite conventional ideas brought together in one plot with a development that goes along at a good pace and holds the interest throughout. It doesn't make a poor entertainment for all. In fact there's quite an absorbing theme in "The Guilty One", an adaptation of the stage play, especially in its murder mystery sequence. Much of the credit goes to director Henabery for the manner in which he keeps you guessing as to the guilty one. Although not nearly as baffling nor complicated as "The Bedroom Window", "The Guilty One" has a corker of good suspense and it isn't likely many will pick the murderer among those who might be suspected, for the actual denouement. Henabery does some rather illogical side-tracking such, for instance, as the occasion in which the man, early in the picture, meets a woman who gives him a look that might indicate that she has sufficient edge against him to have done something. Her act, and the fact she remarks that the recipient of her sid glare is in the company of "the other woman", would tend to indicate that she would appear later but she doesn't. There's good suspense here and a grandstand finale play for Agnes Ayres when her skillful reasoning wins her husband's acquittal.

Box Office Angle... Good cast; good mystery sequence that keeps them guessing as to the guilty one; good production—all points that can be used up to advantage.

Exploitation... Where you know your patrons like mystery stories you might play this up from this angle especially. Post the title liberally and prominently with a large question mark for a background. In the lines: "Who killed Davies? Is it an outraged husband, an intriguing brother, a blackmailer? Is 'The Guilty One' at the blank later and test your skill at solving the mystery." Let them know it's first rate mystery business and show a trailer showing the characters involved and those suspected.

Direction... Joseph Henabery; good actors: Michael Morton-Peter Traill

Cameraman ..... Faxon Dewey

"Down by the Rio Grande"

Phil Goldstone—State Rights

As a Whole... COLORFUL ATMOSPHERE AND PLEASING ROMANTIC TOUCHES BUT PLOT SUFFERS FROM LACK OF ORIGINALITY AND ADVENTURE. INTERESTING IN A MILD WAY BUT NEVER THRILLING.

Cast... Suitable. Dorothy Revier and William Fairbanks good as lovers. Olive Trevor pleasing as a senorita and others Milton Ross, Andrew Waldron, Jack Richardson, the latter a mild enough villain.

Type of Story... Dramatic romance. With opportunities for so much colorful atmosphere and the presence of haciendas, trysting spots, etc. it would seem that "Down by the Rio Grande" might have been a lot more picturesque than it is but at that, it is chiefly the atmosphere and romantic angle that will give it an appeal, even though the director hasn't made as much of these qualities as he should. The plot is a most conventional one and a conspicuous lack of action makes it dwindle along in a not especially interest-sustaining fashion. William Fairbanks is forced to be a most lackadaisical hero who mopes about sadly because the girl he loves spurns his attentions and all the while poor hero refuses to push his claim to the estate held by her father because he doesn't want to make her unhappy. When the story has about run its course he finally does wake up a bit, kidnaps her, then to square the thing and save her good name, dives of into the rapids. Heroes never die and in some unexplained manner he lives to claim her as his bride. This is the feature's only exciting moment and they failed to take full advantage of it. They merely show you hero diving off. There are no scenes of a struggle, no thrilling rescue and happy reunion. A cut-and-dried, unromantic flash follows, giving a happy ending but providing an abrupt and uninteresting conclusion.

Box Office Angle... Not as good as the usual Phil Goldstone output. His productions have been consistently good entertainment. There's not enough story to this and what there is of it hasn't been used to the best advantage.

Exploitation... Title sounds romantic and may readily attract attention. If you have been showing the recent Goldstone pictures featuring Dorothy Revier and William Fairbanks and your folks seemed satisfied, they'll likely be fairly well pleased with this one. Not much in it to appeal to men folks but your women patrons may find the romantic element strong enough to satisfy them. Stills of the featured players and a trailer will do to advertise it.

Direction ..... Alvin J. Neitz; fair
Author ..... Julio Sabello

Herbert Rawlinson in
"Dark Stairways"

Universal

As a Whole... MYSTERY DRAMA THAT MISSES; NOTHING VERY THRILLING IN RAWLINSON'S LATEST CHIEFLY BECAUSE PLOT LACKS SUSPENSE. DENOUEMENT HOLDS NO SURPRISE.

Star... Satisfactory. Works hard enough to get this one over but even though the story isn't the worst one he has had, it doesn't give him much chance to get ahead.

Cast... Walter Perry offers a bit of comedy relief as a crook. Ruth Dwyer, the heroine. Others Hayden Stevenson, Robert E. Homan, Bonnie Hill, Kathleen O'Connor, Emmett King.

Type of Story... Mystery. Of all the props, the necklace is the most overworked. It does the usual disappearing act again in "Dark Stairways," Herbert Rawlinson's latest vehicle. The theme is supposed to be a mystery drama but it's pretty shy on both elements. There's a murder early in the story but it is handled in such a way that there is no doubt, whatever, as to how the thing was planned and executed. The only one who isn't in on the "know" is Herbert Rawlinson, and evidently he didn't have a good lawyer or they wouldn't have convicted him on circumstantial evidence. There's many loopholes in the plot development that make it a failure not only as a mystery but as general entertainment. This might have made a better picture with a more skillful treatment. A diamond necklace disappears and a large sum of money is stolen. Hero is accused and sent to prison. Later he escapes and sets out to find the guilty one and so clear his own name. There's some action afforded through his ensuing adventures but they never rise to thrilling heights.

Box Office Angle... Fair offering but you cannot make promises for intriguing mystery because it isn't there. If they don't mind knowing the solution to the plot before it's half started it may satisfy but there's nothing to keep them guessing.

Exploitation... "Dark Stairways" is a spooky enough sounding title to readily suggest a story of deep dyed mystery. If you don't think they'll kick at being disillusioned, you may show them Rawlinson's latest offering. The old necklace gag may give the plot away entirely so it might be best to just stick to the title and the use of the star's name. Walter Perry's occasional comic touch helps a little to cheer things up. Where the star pleases use his name to draw.

Direction ..... Robert Hill; missed the point.

Author ..... Marion Orth
Scenario ..... L. J. Rigby
Cameraman ..... Wm. Thornley
Photography ..... All right

"For Sale"

First National

As a Whole... FANCY PRODUCTION AND GOOD CAST HELPS TO GET OVER AGE OLD YARN ABOUT THE RICH GIRL WHOSE FATHER GOES BROKE AND WANTS HER TO MARRY A RICH MAN TO SAVE HIM.

Cast... A lot of good names here that will very likely sell the picture. Most of them are not suitable as to type, few indeed looking like Fifth Avenue society folks, or acting as such. Mary Carr, Claire Windsor and Adolph Menjou are well suited and capable too. Miss Windsor not always well photographed or probably it's poor make-up. Wears some gorgeous clothes. Robert Ellis, Tully Marshall, John Patrick others in the cast.

Type of Story... Society drama. Ever since the first villain threatened to foreclose the mortgage unless the old man's daughter would marry him the idea has stuck. Stripped of all its elegance, splendor and fine cast, "For Sale" is that same old mortgage and the girl plot, only instead of a mortgage the girl's father owes the villain a debt which the latter will quickly forget providing, of course, the pretty daughter will wed him. Naturally she's in love with a poor fellow which makes it all the more complicated. But author Earl Hudson and director George Archainbaud have seen to it that all these gross familiarities are nicely camouflaged so that maybe the theme won't seem too ancient after all. There's some peppy dancing, ballroom scenes, variety of atmosphere that shifts from New York to Paris, an auto wreck for a thrill, a bit of drama and a pretty fast development that really doesn't make the picture seem like seven reels. But there's the inevitable clinch ending for a finish that squelches all hope of something different. If only the girl would marry the villain, for once, but then the public must be pleased.

Box Office Angle... Enough angles of popular audience appeal to get this over without difficulty. Plenty of high lights in production and cast that make it easily saleable.

Exploitation... Get them in by talking up the production and the cast. Show them a trailer of some of the dance scenes. Use plenty of stills of Claire Windsor and tell your women folks about the splendid array of gowns that she wears. Use the names of Claire Windsor, Mary Carr, Adolphe Menjou and Tully Marshall prominently. Play up the title with catchlines and run copy in the form of classified ads. Arrange tie-ups with stores announcing sales and display your ad along with their offerings.

Direction ..... George Archainbaud; first rate on production.

"Don't Park There"—Will Rogers
Pathe

Hits the Traffic Situation

Type of production... 2 reel comedy
In spite of the fact that the action in this Will Rogers comedy is not particularly rapid and there is just the basic idea which is repeated throughout—that, Will's repeated and terminated efforts to park his car which is always followed by a summons being handed to him—it will in all probability be found good entertainment, especially where the Will Rogers type of humor finds favor. In "Jubilo, a farmer, he goes to town to buy a certain brand of liniment. Unable to park his truck, he buys a cover, which gets scratched, worn, mangled-up and finally at the very end is entirely apart due to the wear and tear that Will subjects it to in his efforts to find a parking place. He finally finds one in Seattle at last, but learns finally that the liniment has been off the market for years.

"Snapshots of the Universe"—Hodge Podge—Educ'l

Nice Novelty

Type of production... 1 reel comedy
Varied and interesting shots of spots of many lands are interspersed with clever cartoon drawings make up this issue of Lyman H. Howe's Hodge Podge. A Siberian wash day is followed by scenes of the gobs aboard a warship doing their wash, thus providing good contrast. Hair cutting is also contrasted by scenes of barbers at work in Borneo and Mexico. Snappy drilling by the cadets of the Culver Military Academy closes the reel.

"The Farewell"—Bruce—Educational Fine Scenic

Type of production... 1 reel scenic
As is usually the case with the Bruce Wilderness Tales, this one affords some very beautiful shots of the "great open spaces," both in composition and photography. The theme is that of a man who has spent many years in the country and suddenly receives orders to come back to the city and a position in an office. He therefore bids farewell to the solitude and beauty of the country in many varied phases such as the moonlight on mountain lakes, the setting sun and the ensuing twilight in the mountains, a rippling brook, and many other charming scenes. An excellent scenic reel.

"A Royal Pair"—Century—Universal Hokum That May Amuse

Type of production... 2 reel comedy
Fantastic hokum, a royal princess who is kidnapped by a band of Turkish brigands, and held in a cave made of paper-mache rocks until she is captured by two brave detectives dressed like African explorers and a colored valet who is frightened to death by a man in a monkey's suit provide this comedy with a decidedly "different" atmosphere. Its quite amusing and although rather silly may please the average audience. There is plenty of the clutching-hand, trap-door stuff for those who enjoy it.

"The Lion and the Souze"— Sennet-Pathe

Should be a Winner
Type of production... 2 reel comedy
The idea incorporated in this Sennett comedy is a bit different and deals with a would-be society woman who has motion picture aspirations. She consequently hires a director and stages a picture—one of those back-to-nature affairs with Pan and his dancing nymphs. The film is run off on a screen in the lady's drawing room and is very funny—the operator running it so slowly that the would-be star is seen in most awkward positions. They try to liven up the picture from this point by the familiar lion chase, having the lion run all over the house after the guests, star, cameraman, etc. As a whole should be a winner.

"Jubilo, Jr."—Hal Roach—Pathe A Knock-Out

Type of production... 2 reel comedy
Here's one that is a peach. Will Rogers and the Our Gang bunch in one comedy. Will is seen dressed as a tramp, wearing a white carnation. Two other tramps ask him why he wears it and he tells them the story of what happened when he was a kid on one of his mother's birthdays. Little Mickey Daniels is seen as little Will and all the rest of the gang are in the story which is pathetic and funny and altogether enjoyable. A surprise finish is also given when a director calls Rogers to come and finish a scene, and the audience who has thought him a tramp finds he is really Will Rogers, the actor. This will please any audience.

"Why Be Jealous?"—Universal
Lots of Rough-House

Type of production... 1 reel comedy
Alice Howell and Bert Roach are starred in this Universal comedy, which is only moderately amusing. Rather too much footage is devoted to Miss Howell raising a rumpus with her husband. She does it at the beginning of the reel because he holds a dollar out of his pay envelope and again at the finish because he pretends to be wounded. Bert Roach is capable of doing better things than this, as evidenced in his tramp comedies.

FINANCE

By DANNY

Why is it that Wall Street rarely—if ever—reflects the actual condition of the picture business? Have you—who hold stocks of film concerns—ever thought of it? Film stocks move up or down—chiefly through the manipulations of cliques and pools—and the business of the concern involved doesn't seem to make a lot of difference.

There is a move on foot at present. In Famous. The story is going the rounds that Famous is to be put over 85. Or 90. It started about 63 or 65. It's pretty well along the road now. Some people have already made a lot. Out of the move.

But does this reflect in any way—this advance—that Famous is a safer investment than when it was considerably lower? Hardly. Famous—looking at it from the outside—is either a mighty good investment or there isn't any in this business. But an investment is one thing. Speculation is another.

So with Loew. Awhile ago the "bears" hammered Loew and it dropped below 11. One man—you know him well, all of you, said if Loew's stock wasn't worth a lot more than that there was nothing safe as an investment in any entertainment stock. He bought all he could get all the way to 15. When the dividends were resumed this man cleaned up. He still has a lot. But does anyone argue that there was any reason for Loew's selling at 11? Was the basic worth of the security any less than it was six months later?

Here's a funny angle: the men controlling these large corporations often get hit by the manipulations of the cliques or pools. Yet these men operate the businesses. They know what is really going on. All the pool operators know is what they are doing to the stock. They don't know—and don't care—what is actually happening to the business. Or in the business. All they know is that they want the stock to move up or down. And they do it. Or try to.

So when people ask you what you know about so and

Seeks Receiver

Action Brought Against T. O. D. C. (Delaware) on Judgment Secured by W. A. True

An application for the appointment of a receiver for the Theater Owners Distributing Corp., a Delaware corporation, has been filed in the Supreme Court by Arthur A. Wakoff on a judgment obtained by William True for $1,431 for money lent which was returned unsatisfied on May 28.

True stated that the corporation is "insolvent and has a number of creditors other than the plaintiff." One of them is Sydney S. Cohen who is said to have a claim for $4,000, while there is another for $3,000 on which a suit has been brought. True asserted that the company has certain property including the equipment of its office, but that the M. P. T. O. has moved in and taken possession and that there is danger of loss and waste of the property unless the court acts.

Warner's Rounding Out This Season's Schedule—Adding Stage Space At Studio

Abe Warner leaves today for a ten day trip during which he will visit Chicago, Minneapolis and Des Moines. In Chicago he will take up the details of the premiere of "Beau Brummel" which goes into Orchestra Hall for an indefinite run following "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall."

The final four productions on this season's schedule are in final stages of completion. "Lovers Lane," is now well in production with James Flood directing and Phil Rosen started last week on "The Tenth Woman."

Look to America

Germany Producing With Eye on This Market and England—Finances Not Plentiful

BY ERNEST W. FREDMAN
Of The Film Renter and M. P. News

London—The first thing that greets a visitor to the film industry in Berlin is the announcement made by every manufacturer and renter that there is no money in Germany. At first I thought this was merely propaganda but one becomes convinced of the palpable truth after visiting studios and renting offices.

Whilst I was in Berlin no fewer than four German banks went smash owing to the Reichsbank calling in all loans and credits and refusing to issue any further credit. As we all know, the German banks have always assisted the furtherance of industry in their own country and when suddenly they refuse to loan any more money it may well be imagined the disastrous effect that it has on the many industries operating in Germany.

The German film producers have been wont to rely upon the banks for the financing of their productions and have been exceedingly hard hit in consequence of this latest decision, but despite this staggering blow film production in Germany today is still going on, and many of the producers are indeed in consequence booking American screen artists for their photo plays.

Curiously enough despite all the talk of lack of money one is immediately impressed by the optimism that is being displayed by the German manufacturers and it is not a little astonishing to find so much production in a country which undoubtedly is hard hit by being unable to obtain money. When I tell you that the rate of interest in Berlin is 12 per cent per month this will give an idea of how difficult it is to obtain money from the banks. Another noticeable feature is the extraordinary business that Cinema theaters are doing.

Theater Business Excellent

Every theater which I visited in Berlin was doing big business, whilst running out to Dresden I found exactly the same state of affairs in that

In The Courts

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Toronto—The will of Ambrose J. Small, missing theater owner, has been admitted for probate in the Surrogate Court, when it was found that the estate amounted to $1,087,831. This total does not include the amount which is in dispute, practically $1,000,000, as a result of the suit by shareholders of the Trans-Canada Theaters, Ltd., for a rescission of the sale by Small to Trans-Canada of his chain of theaters in Toronto, London, Ottawa, Peterboro, Hamilton and other cities.

This agreement of sale was carried out just prior to his disappearance in December, 1919. The action to set aside the transfer of the Small properties and the return of the money to Trans-Canada shareholders has not yet been heard by the Toronto courts.

Further proceedings in the injunction asked by Famous Players to restrain Weiss Brothers from using the words "featuring Moses and The Ten Commandments" in connection with "After Six Days" were argued before Supreme Court Justice Philip J. McCook, who appointed Robert L. Luce as referee in the matter. The latter will hear further testimony from both sides and then determine the question.

After a trial lasting for two weeks, a verdict for $40,485 was returned before Supreme Court Justice Hattling in a suit of the Nicholas Power Co., Inc., against the United Theater Equipment Corp., for equipment sold.

A suit for $875 has been filed in the Supreme Court by the Merit Film Corporation against the Olive Amusement Co. of Freeport, L. I. The cause is not stated.

Sinners in Heaven

(the book that won the British prize competition, by Clive Arden)

Bebe Daniels, Richard Dix, Alan Crosland, and the rest of the SINNERS IN HEAVEN company have just returned from the West Indies, where they completed photographing the tropical episodes for this FAMOUS FORTY production. I have seen the results and they live up in every respect to the enthusiastic expectations Paramount has for the picture.

I consider SINNERS IN HEAVEN one of the most valuable box-office properties to be released this Fall. As a book, it won the prize in England as the best novel of the year and is the literary rage there. It has for several months been a best-seller in this country.

As a picture, SINNERS IN HEAVEN has every quality that gets the money. The story is about a high-spirited girl who, rather than go through with the money-marriage her folks are forcing her into, stows away aboard an airplane about to make a long ocean flight. The pilot doesn't know the girl is there until the 'plane gets under way. He is a woman-hater. The 'plane hits a typhoon and is wrecked. Man and girl are washed up, half dead, onto a desert island. But they come to life. The clash between the two that finally softens into love, their thrilling adventures together, what happens when the girl goes home to the other man—here is a real production that is as different from the usual lost-on-a-desert-island film as any FAMOUS FORTY production is different from the ordinary run of films.

I said the other day that Bebe Daniels and Richard Dix would have to go some to excel the performances they give in UNGUARDED WOMEN. Well, having seen advance shots of SINNERS IN HEAVEN, I think they've done it. Alan Crosland is taking full advantage of the many box-office angles to the story—the romance, the storm, the wild tropical beauty of the island, the fight for life against nature and savages, the battle between the rich man and the aviator for the girl, and others.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN is the FAMOUS FORTY release for September 15th, the week following THE COVERED WAGON.

Look to America

city. Theater proprietors have no cause for complaint and are willing to pay big prices for their films.

It is curious to see the big sums that pictures can book to in Germany. For instance, Jackie Coogan's picture, "My Boy" which was sold for $5000 booked to $130,000 and Harold Lloyd in "Safety Last" to an even larger amount.

The German producer, when he sets out to make a picture is well aware that he can get the cost of his production back in his own country, but he is more keen about selling to the markets of the world, of Central Europe and it is astonishing to see the sums of money that Czecho Slovakia, the whole of the Balkans, Holland, Sweden, Scandinavia, France, Austria and other European countries are paying for their pictures.

America and England the Prizes

This still leaves him England and America and it is upon these two great markets that he is at the moment working. Recognizing that to get his pictures into both these markets he must have stars that are known, German producers are booking up a large number of British and American stars, determined to leave no stone unturned in their endeavor to make their pictures as valuable as possible in both England and America.

Whilst I was there, Nigel Barrie was playing in pictures, Stewart Rome had also been booked up on a large contract; Mae Marsh was making a big picture and daily wires were being sent to the United States inquiring for well known screen artists to play leads in their productions.

Production Schedule Heavy

Despite the money shortage, production seemed to be going quite strong, the Ufa company had ten producers at work and their studios at Babelsberg and Templehof were alive with activity. In addition, companies were on location far afield making pictures and this great producing concern is forging ahead concentrating on making photoplays that will have a world appeal. The Stern Film Co. were making a big picture with Mae Marsh under the direction of Karl Grune, the talented producer who gave us "The Street". This is an ambitious production and one from which big things are expected.

The Phoebus Film Co. were making pictures featuring Albertini whilst one or two independent units were making films. There is not the amount of production in Germany that there was a year ago and Berlin is certainly dearer today than either London or New York. Stars are getting big salaries. Mae Marsh was receiving $4,000 a week plus expenses from the Stern Film and German producers seem quite satisfied to pay anything from $2,500 to $3,000 for American artists.

When money gets easier which may take some considerable time, I can well imagine Germany being a happy hunting ground for American artists for there is no doubt that German producers recognize that to get their pictures into America they must use artists that are well known in that country.

Bankruptcy Action Designed to Save Assets—Directors to Wind Up Affairs

It is now a matter of time only before the Theater Owners Dist. Corp. formed in Chicago on Dec. 12, 1922 will pass into history.

From the officers of the corporation, there came a notice yesterday to the effect that Harry Davis of Pittsburgh, R. F. Woodhull of Dover, N. J., Sydney S. Cohen, of New York—all of them directors of the company—had joined in filing a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. Their statement explained the purpose of this move was to conserve "the assets of the company and particularly to collect moneys due and owing to that company from the Anderson Pictures Corp. for its participation in the receipts of the picture, 'After the Ball', which is being distributed through the Film Booking Offices of America."

"It is their purpose", further reads the statement, "to collect all of these

When the Army took over the service in November, 1919, many difficulties were experienced and arrangements were made for the civilian agency supplying pictures to the welfare society, to continue.

Admissions were later charged by the Army, but this proved unsuccessful. The final solution found was the

The value of such shows rest in the fact that children matinees invariably secure the support of the better films committees and whatever women's organizations exist in the community. outstanding moneys and to reimburse the stockholders of the company from such receipts and then wind up the business affairs of the organization. "This action of terminating the affairs of the organization was determined upon by all concerned in April last, when it became apparent that it was the better course to pursue owing to the confusion arising from the formation of a corporation with a similar name by people formerly associated with the company."

Clarence I. Hamilton, suing on two claims of Harry Davis, former vice-president of the Theater Owners Distributing Corp., for loans, has filed judgment for $3,000 against the corporation in the City Court. The defense was that the money was to be repaid only out of the profits.

What W. A. True, president of the T. O. D. C. of New York which was formed following a disagreement with the prime movers in the parent company, will do with his application for a receiver is not known. He was out of town yesterday. True, however, in his application which was filed by Arthur A. Wakoff, based his action on a claim of $1,431 and alleged that Cohen was a creditor to the extent of $4,000 while another, presumably Harry Davis, was said to have $3,000 involved.

History of T. O. D. C.

When the T. O. D. C. was formed, it promised to begin functioning in September, 1923. It was the culmination of long discussions at the Minneapolis convention at which exhibitor-distribution was definitely decided upon. Following the organization of the company at Chicago, there ensued long months during which no word came from the T. O. D. C. headquarters.

Later, one picture, "After the Ball" was acquired by Anderson Pictures, but approved by the T. O. D. C. The exhibitor organization also endorsed a uniform contract, allegedly different from the Hays contract, to be used in booking "After the Ball". Throughout its history, the company acquired only one picture. Some months ago, W. A. True, the first president stepped out and formed a company with a similar name under New York laws. He charged laxity in the management of the parent organization. Sydney S. Cohen was then elected president.

Internal squabbles developed. Charges and counter-charges were made by opposing factions. Davis filed action for an accounting of money. Then True filed his suit. Now comes the final step in the winding-up process with the declaration that its own directors are ready to close the company's affairs.

Must Show Life

Says Samuel Goldwyn, With Regard to Kind of Pictures Most People Like—Robt. Leonard on Titles

Samuel Goldwyn voices his disapproval of the milk and water kind of stories in the following statement, although he does not favor salacious stories, or even the stupid picture with the salacious title. He says, in part:

"We cannot make pictures strictly for children or those with enlarged moralistic complexes. If baby ideas should dominate this industry, it would necessitate a philanthropist with a spineless attitude toward the drama and censors overflowing with gold. Vapid pictures, even if produced, would become a bore even to their imaginative sponsors. The greatest art is that which entertains the greatest numbers and class must submerge their tastes to mass.

"You can't expect to knock everything interesting out of a good story simply because some persons hold up their hands in horror at the mere suggestion of real life. D. W. Griffith's greatest success was 'Way Down East' and in it there was a child born out of wedlock.

"It is the reality of its people, plus a sober, simple, earnest grasp of certain issues in life that makes the story step out of the ordinary into the distinctive quality."

Robert Z. Leonard declares that a good picture with an intriguing title will draw at least 30 per cent more people than the same picture would if it had an uninteresting title.

"When an original story for the screen is filmed," says Leonard, "there is no ready-made audience waiting anxiously to see it as there is in the case of a famous novel. The audience must be recruited and to do this, the picture must have an intriguing title. Many good pictures have gone unappreciated simply because of a drab, colorless title."

establishment of the present U. S. Army M. P. Service, to operate all theaters on a business basis. Since then, the service has been functioning successfully, with a complete organization, under supervision of the Adjutant General, and operated by a director, R. B. Murray, who is assisted by a director of bookings, theater equipment engineer and an auditor.

The director of bookings, Thomas Martell, is stationed in New York and arranges with distributors for bookings and price. The New York branch serves 29 army theaters in the first and second corps area, with 79 programs each week. The Washington branch, with M. W. Smith as manager, supplies 29 theaters in the third and fourth area, with 100 programs each week. Kansas City, F. Bund, Jr., manager, serves 19 theaters in the fifth, sixth and seventh areas, with 59 programs per week. W. E. Christ, in charge of Dallas, serves 14 theaters in eight corps area with 48 programs a week. The Seattle branch, Richard O. Schmidt, manager, serves but 11 theaters and only 30 programs each week. The Canal Zone office, managed by James Bayard, serves 11 theaters with 71 programs.

This shows that the service supplies 105 army theaters with 382 programs every week, or 1528 programs a month. Bookings are made from four to six weeks in advance of play dates. This is a strict ruling of the department, and all programs must be the best available and furnish the widest variety of entertainment.

The theater equipment engineer, Roger, M. Hill, a member of the Society of M. P. Engineers, supervises the installation, maintenance and operation of all equipment. Up-to-date equipment is used by the organization in its theaters.

Newspaper Opinions

"America"—United Artists
Garrick, Milwaukee

JOURNAL—We don't say that America is better than "The Birth of a Nation." But we do say that if ever a picture was produced as good as "The Birth of a Nation," "America" is that picture.

LEADER—"America is exactly what a Griffith picture should be—principals who can act and costumes and scenery and extras all exactly right.

NEWS—Historically correct, perfectly directed, splendidly acted with a fascinating love story "America" is held to be the most thrilling, inspiring picture ever brought to the screen.

"The Arizona Express"—Fox
Apollo, Indianapolis

STAR—* * * naively billed as "an honest melodrama." It is all that. It offers no small measure of excitement and those people who still have a warm spot in their hearts for old-fashioned mellers will find it ideal entertainment.

"The Average Woman"—S. R.
Strand, Cincinnati

COMMERCIAL TRIBUNE—* * * is far from being an average moving picture. The plot is different, to say the least, while the situations are extremely novel.

POST—* * * is delicious cinema salad for hot weather victims.

"Babbitt"—Warners
State, Cleveland

NEWS—The picture will never make screen history but it is a human bit of celluloid and * * * the great majority will find it good entertainment.

PLAIN DEALER—For those who haven't read the book, "Babbitt" may prove entertaining; for those who have read it, the film will be pretty dull going.

PRESS—Perhaps movie goers * * * will find a similar interest in identifying some of their acquaintances as Babbitts. That this is possible is less to the credit of the scenario writer and director than to the actor, Willard Louis. None of the other roles are convincing. The movie demonstrates once again that no picture can be much better than the director who makes it.

"The Breaking Point"—F. P.-L.
Karlton, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—* * * one of those movies that run an hour and a half at such a lively pace that it seems like a few minutes. Not an ounce of punch in Mary Roberts Rhinehart's novel of the same title has been lost in putting the story on the screen.

INQUIRER—It is replete with interesting action, extending from the Great White Way to the great open of the West, * * *

NORTH AMERICAN—* * * the action tears along at such a lively gate, leaping lightly o'er the years and from east to west and back again, that the spectator almost develops a sympathetic amnesia in trying to keep up with it all.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—* * * an entertaining film.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—* * * in building the scenario the film writers have not destroyed the original theme in any way. * * * Mr. Fawcett's work is quite the best of any member in the cast.

Picadilly, Rochester

JOURNAL—Mary Roberts Rhinehart's novel, * * * has been made into an interesting film drama * * *

"Code of the Sea"—F. P.-L.
Orpheum, Detroit

NEWS—The picture contains the usual thrills, romance and pretty scenes to be expected of a film of this type. * * *

Fox, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—Rod La Rocque's portrayal of a cowardly seaman who redeems himself * * * "The Code of the Sea," * * * a much depicted type of story, into the class of an entertaining and thrilling photoplay. * * *

INQUIRER—* * * is absorbing more for its splendid photography than for its plot. The story is not above the ordinary. The excellent acting of Rod La Rocque, however, injects fresh interest into the old theme. * * *

SUMMER TROUBLES—AND SOME ARE NOT

From "Kinematograph Weekly", London

NORTH AMERICAN—The angry ocean plays the stellar role in "Code of the Sea." * * *

La Rocque is so "yellow" at first as to seem a fast color lemon. That part is more convincing than his later heroism.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—The photography is a particularly good bit of marine life, with thrills, mountainous seas, shipwreck and rescue by means of the breeches buoy.

Missouri, St. Louis

POST DISPATCH—The picture is full of action, but has enough of an unreal romance to satisfy those who want a love story that ends happily.

STAR—Let mariners explain why the launch could live in a sea that wrecked the yacht * * *

But, anyway and nevertheless, it is a darn good picture.

TIMES—The story is chockful of real human action in storms at sea. Nearly all the scenes in the production were filmed outdoors.

"The Dawn of a Tomorrow"—F. P.-L.
Eastman, Rochester

JOURNAL—Somehow or other, the motion picture version of the play is none too convincing.

HERALD—A strange picture this, one formed about a very vapid, very time worn and frayed theme, but, remarkably well done.

TIMES-UNION—If you like "glad" plays and think that Pollyanna was "perfectly sweet" you have a great treat in store for you. * * *

"The Enchanted Cottage"—1st Nat'l
Strand, Omaha

DAILY NEWS—* * * you get a lesson. Hard roles are those two of Dick (Barthlemess) and May, (McAvoy), and excellently done.

WORLD-HERALD—The production is inspiring, enchanting and sincere. It should receive the support of every motion picture fan who appreciates good pictures.

"Flowing Gold"—1st Nat'l
Stanley, Philadelphia

BULLETIN—* * * If the picture is not one of exceptional merit, it answers to the demand for a first-rate story, with mingled heart interest and thrills.

INQUIRER—Optimism led us to believe that the day for such pictures * * * was over—but not so. The thriller, with its thrills weakened by repetition, is still with us.

NORTH AMERICAN—The story is of familiar pattern. And familiar patterns can be counted upon, generally, to please most of the people most of the time.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—The scenes showing the blazing oil and the rushing torrent are the best.

Milton Sills and Anna Q. Nilsson strive to please in roles which are not very convincing.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—The story is well produced.

"A Girl of the Limberlost"—F. P.-L.
Fay's Rochester

HERALD—This is a dramatic story with a central situation that has at least one unusual feature of far-reaching effect—the hatred of mother for her own inoffensive child. * * * The picture is admirably acted, * * *

Tivoli, Washington

EVE STAR—The story * * * proves human and absorbing. There are some fine forest scenes. Emily Fitzroy, as the embittered mother * * * gives a fine characterization, and Gertrude Olmsted, * * * shows decided dramatic ability.

TIMES—The continuity is jumpy, and the plot hops from one angle to another, for the first two reels, * * * But the story is interesting, and the actors and actorines do their very best. * * *

TRIBUNE—Plenty of laughs, thrills; heart interest are said to be had at the N. Aster. * * *

"The Goldfish"—1st Nat'l
FREE PRESS * * * another of the frolic comedy-romances in which Constance is specialized, containing just enough of a plot to hold it together but never at any moment taxing the intellect because of its intricacy.
NEWS—It is a tricky theme, * * * a might easily verge on the indelicate but despite the fact the marriage institution regarded not so seriously, the comedy never offensive.

Capitol, Detroit
TIMES—Constance Talmadge is the center of the show throughout * * *—and her own personality * * * illumines every moment of the excellent comedy.

"Happiness"—Metro-Goldwyn
Walnut, Cincinnati
COMMERCIAL TRIBUNE—Person who have been disappointed in their quest for happiness may receive more than a hint from this picture as to what constitutes genuine contentment.

POST—Miss Taylor's work in "Peg My Heart" was better * * * Cuteness can't be carried too far. Miss Taylor's efforts to a cute, unsophisticated and unneeded gimmick makes her seem to us also a little feeble minded.

Palace, Philadelphia
INQUIRER—* * * Much padding is evident in order to make it a full length entertainment. Its study is of the Cinderella kind and the star does numerous Pollyanna stunts to keep up the interest.

NORTH AMERICAN—Miss Taylor gets a bouncing and exuberant performance. *
BULLETIN—* * * Miss Taylor's delightful natural acting and her individual little touches of comic by-play keep the onlooker in constant laughing mood.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Morning)—Nicety in direction, combined with the superb acting of Laurette Taylor, makes "Happiness" a very entertaining picture.

PUBLIC LEDGER (Evening)—There is plenty of comedy touches interspersed with the pathetic incidents to furnish real entertainment.

"The Heart Bandit"—Metro-Gold.
Lyric, Cincinnati

COMMERCIAL TRIBUNE—An excellent cast, headed by Viola Dana and Milton Sills, are featured.

POST—somewhat of a crook-picture, type which always proves interesting to honest folk. * * * has enough action to make it a fair entertainment.

"The Huntress"—1st Nat'l
New Grand, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE—Miss Moore is cast in a role which is a wide departure from her recent portrayals.

"Let Not Man Put Asunder"—Vita Gift's, Cincinnati

POST—It is a long drawn out picture much too long to enjoy, even tho one does like the superb acting or posing of Lot Tellegen.

"The Lone Wolf"—Asso. Exhibitors
Washington, Detroit

FREE PRESS—Here's action, thrills, romance, adventure galore, that leaps from our lips of New York to the bad denizens of naughty Paris.

NEWS—It is frankly a thriller, making no pretense to do anything in particular, save to give the audience much vicarious adventure and excitement. In this endeavor it is notably successful.

TIMES—There is furious action throughout. The camera work is of the finest. Romance and adventure are controlling themes.

"The Marriage Circle"—Warners
Ohio, Indianapolis

STAR—*** has turned out to be one of the season's finest light domestic comedies, with five Hollywood players giving performances in the best European fashion.

"Men"—F. P.-L.
State, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE—*** Is distinctly continental in story, atmosphere, direction, theme and treatment, although filmed in this country and portrayed by a cast who, with the exception of the star, are popular American players.

"Montmartre"—F. P.-L.
Palace, Washington

HERALD—*** unites, once again, the superb dramatic force of Ernest Lubitsch and the brilliant emotional power of Pola Negri.

STAR—It is true that the photoplay has spots in which a drag comes in evidence, but these are more counter-balanced by the sincerity displayed by Pola and the naive touch of authenticity given by Lubitsch not only in the action, but also in the fine assembly of scenic embellishments.

TIMES—*** supposedly depicts the Montmartre of sixty years ago—*** Pola Negri, in the role of the girl, offers a good account, though somewhat stereotyped as all her enactions seem to be.

"My Man"—Vitagraph
Empress, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—Excellent direction by David Smith and a cast of clever players make this picture with its conventional "give me your daughter or I'll ruin you" plot quite interesting.

"Pal O' Mine"—C. B. C.
Fay's Philadelphia

INQUIRER—Irene Rich plays the young wife with a charm and convincingness that is enjoyable and Al Roscoe is the young ambitious husband to the life. Willard Louis, Josef Swickard, Pauline Garon and Jean DeBriac, are also well cast. The audience was appreciative.

"The Perfect Flapper"—1st Nat'l
Wisconsin, Milwaukee

JOURNAL—*** Colleen is a sincere and a clever actress, with a brilliant splash of personality that puts her stuff across. *** Frank Mayo, rather contrary to his usual custom, appears quite likeable, and convincingly human as the hero. Sydney Chaplin does excellent work.

NEWS—*** Is about the finest picture of its kind ever produced. It is a fast moving, cleverly acted picture, a knockout for laughs, especially the Romeo scene which will fairly "bow" you over.

"Peter the Great"—F. P.-L.
Columbia, Washington

STAR—Russia's royal immortal has had his many incarnations via book and stage, but never has he seemed so human; so free of blackening traditions and undue praise, as in his screen personality.

TIMES—*** as one more answer to those who condemn the moving pictures comes the production of "Peter the Great" *** The result is a masterpiece.

"Restless Wives"—S. R.
Delmonte, St. Louis

POST-DISPATCH—There is a whirlwind finish in which the husband takes enough time off from business to give the villain his just dues and win back his wife.

STAR—Doris Kenyon, Naomi Childers and Burr McIntosh keep the piece from becoming altogether dull, although it is long-drawn out.

TIMES—*** The cast used in the production makes it rank among the unusual. James Rennie smiles through the film, and that good old favorite, Burr McIntosh, also has a role in the picture and again makes a good showing.

"Singer Jim McKee"—F. P.-L.
Crandall's, Washington

STAR—With a plot involving a typical westerner of the old school who suddenly finds himself the guardian of his dead bandit pal's daughter. Actor-Director Hart had no trouble in making a picture replete with thrills.

"Slave of Desire"—Metro-Goldwyn
Rialto, Omaha

NEWS—It's a Balzac story, highly allegorical. Some get it, some miss it. "Posh," remarked the man in the next seat.

WORLD-HERALD—*** All praise goes to George D. Baker for his fine direction. The story has been made to flow along smoothly from beginning to end, which is a wonderful bit of work considering the difficulty of transferring Balzac to the screen.

"This Freedom"—Fox
Imperial, Montreal

GAZETTE—*** Is worth seeing, and at times one is inclined to think it is almost more interesting than the book. Excellent acting by all members of the well-chosen cast is a factor in making the story seem realistic.

"Those Who Dance"—1st Nat'l
Chicago, Chicago

HERALD & EXAMINER—A tight story that never stops; an excellent cast of good players; a correct confidence in the fact that the rougher the film the more convincing to an audience. Those who participated in the making of this cinema knew the essentials of good melodrama.

Madison, Detroit

FREE PRESS—There is nothing preachy about "Those Who Dance," but it cannot fail to impress upon those who see it the dangers which lurk in the vile stuff now being sold as pure Scotch, and the tragedies which are almost sure to follow one who attempts to outwit the law.

NEWS—"Those Who Dance," is a timely picture, as truthful as melodrama dare be, and it is acted with distinction by Miss Sweet and the others.

TIMES—A well-constructed melodrama not straying too far from the range of plausibility and given a flesh and blood presentation by a group of character actors of exceptional talent.

Rialto, Omaha

DAILY NEWS—*** Is worth a hundred sermons by our best preachers and fifty raids *** an anti-booze medicine. It shows up both the hooch and the hooch-makers. It isn't propaganda, however. It's a thrillodrama with no "gag" stuff.

WORLD-HERALD—Because it is well of the beaten path, carries a powerful lesson, but not a preaching and is worked out dramatically with continuous suspense punctuating the fast-moving action, those who are for and those against prohibition are going to find it very interesting.

"Three O'Clock In The Morning"—
Burr-S. R.—Central, Wash.

TIMES—Both the star and her supporting cast carry a rather long treatment of a trite theme to a pleasing ending.

STAR—*** a delightful story of an even more delightful flapper.

"Three Weeks"—Metro-Goldwyn
Palace, Montreal

GAZETTE—Ethical considerations side-stepped, the picture is not without merit. Those who like romance will see plenty of it.

"Through The Dark"—Metro-Gold.
Keith's, Cincinnati

COMMERCIAL TRIBUNE—A story of crooks and police and stool pigeons and robberies and killings with a dash of the "pure mother influence." *** At either end of the picture come along subtitles presenting wholesome but somewhat dull sermons.

POST—There is little left to tell about thieves. Stool pigeons, the crossing of wits with the police and love. "Thru the Dark" has it all and no more.

"Thy Name Is Woman"
McVickers, Chicago

HERALD & EXAMINER—*** A film worth seeing. It has its faults *** but those faults are submerged in the general excellence of the production. Skilfully cast and, on the whole, carefully directed, it presents a subtle appeal to those who find interest in these subjects: sex, psychology and love.

JOURNAL—By all odds, it is the most sophisticated of all the creeping chromos shown this year. It manifests more advance, more "feel" for the screen, more rigorous, restrained drama than anything since "A Woman of Paris."

"True As Steel"—Metro-Goldwyn Park and Mall, Cleveland

NEWS—The picture seemed draggy, but if you liked Aileen in "Three Weeks" you'll probably like her in this picture. The ladies will enjoy Gordon's performance.

PLAIN DEALER—Hughes' brain people are too human and not quite dramatic enough to support the four corners of the canopy, for the story is a slender one. But you don't often find so much humanness in a story—and whatever is lost in the dramatic way is more than made up by these very nearly "genuine" people.

PRESS—As movies go, it is most unusual. Because the movie pictures a single episode. *** The cast is a highly capable one.

Kings, St. Louis

POST DISPATCH—Miss Pringle does fine work here. *** The settings and photography are fine.

STAR—It is an agreeable picture and very much the type of production that most movie audiences enjoy.

TIMES—Aileen Pringle verifies our belief that she is destined for an important place in the firmament of screen stars in "True as Steel."

"Wandering Husbands"—Hodkinson Mission, Los Angeles

(Week ending June 14)

EXAMINER—Despite its obvious quality, however, this new C. Gardner Sullivan picture has two notable points.

EXPRESS—Although the plot is not new, yet it is intensely human in aspect and matters that touch every-day existence are, after all, subjects of more than passing interest.

HERALD—For "Wandering Husbands" is a bully entertainment, despite the fact that there is but one scene which is an out and out new idea.

RECORD—The picture will be a revelation in wild night life to those who have never been inside a roadhouse cabaret or seen any other pictures of this type.

TIMES—Really brilliant acting is done by everybody in the cast. Lila Lee rises to the heights of a fine emotionalism, vividly forceful and arresting as well as colorful.

Sun, Omaha

WORLD-HERALD—William Beaudine, the director, has introduced many dramatic situations which are very true to life and has added some comedy moments in the most unexpected places.

"The White Moth"—1st Nat'l.
Baltimore

SUN—*** A tolerably entertaining story that loses somewhat by the prolix manner in which it is handled. *** Barbara La Marr somewhat compensates for whatever shortcomings you are apt to discover.

"Wild Oranges"—Gold.-Cosmop.
Moon, Omaha

DAILY NEWS—*** A Hergesheimer thrillodrama, made weak by lack of comic relief.

WORLD-HERALD—It has dramatic intensity, gripping suspense and heart appeal but is devoid of mushy sentiment, flapper antics and other frivolous things.

"A Woman of Paris"—United Artists
Grand Central, St. Louis

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT—For technique alone the picture is by far the best ever made for the screen. Its "touches" of directorial originality give it unique and effective presentation.

STAR—*** It is a commonplace little tragedy recounted with the deft detachment of a true artist. Throughout there is much sharply sardonic wit, but little humor, in "A Woman of Paris."

TIMES—*** The entire film is unusual. It is particularly well filmed, and the direction is such as could only be done by a master.

"The Woman on the Jury"—1st Nat'l
Metropolitan, Washington

HERALD—The element of suspense is strong, culminating in a climax of exceptional forcefulness in which the lone feminine jurymen wins over the eleven males to a just decision.

STAR—*** has been well directed. The jury scene is especially convincing. *** Frank Mayo is manly and likeable. Lew Cody is, *** the suave but base deceiver. Sylvia Breamer, however, does not rise to her opportunities in the leading role.

TIMES—Despite a certain tendency toward laggard action in its first one or two reels, "The Woman on the Jury," *** may certainly be said to be one of the most dramatic program pictures *** in some months.

"Women Who Give"—Metro-Gold.
Colonial, Indianapolis

STAR—Reginald Barker, the director, has taken the basis of his film from Sarah Green's quite well read story of New England fisherfolk, "Cape Cod Folks." He has provided it with a good cast and several seafaring sequences designed to make it a second "Down to the Sea in Ships."

"The Yankee Consul"—Asso. Exhib.
Strand, Milwaukee

JOURNAL—*** While it's not particularly substantial entertainment, does dash along at a fast and furious rate, sometimes typically slapstick, and if you like Douglas MacLean you'll probably enjoy the picture. Not quite as funny as The Hottentot, though, it seems to us.

NEWS—Douglas MacLean is the hero and remembering his other high powered pictures, *** you will know what a treat is in store for you.

Production plans prepared for Metro-Goldwyn by Louis B. Mayer provide for twenty-five completed productions by Sept. 1. Eight Metro-Goldwyns are now completed while six from Cosmopolitan are either ready or slated for production.

The present production schedule calls for thirty-one pictures, but, of course, all of these cannot be ready by the opening of the fall season. Ramon Novarro will star in "The Scandal" which Frank Borzage will direct; Monta Bell, in addition to "The Snob", has been assigned "The Span of Life"; "So This Is Marriage" and "Nothing to Wear", will be directed by Hobert Henley. The company recently purchased "Cheaper to Marry" which Robert G. Vignola will make.

A future Victor Schertzinger film will be "Man and Maid"; King Vidor is down for "Wife of the Centaur" and "Women and Wives". "Man and the Moment", will be a future Elinor Lyn Prod.

Hearing In St. Louis

Paramount Counsel Seeks to Disprove Famous Had Monopoly on Territory

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

St. Louis—The first witness to testify before Judge Alvord in the Federal Trade Commission proceedings against Famous Players was C. D. Hill, president of the local Film Board of Trade and the local manager for the Producers Dist. Corp.

He testified he had no trouble selling his company's product in the local territory and had encountered no unfair competition on the part of the defendants. His only complaint, he said was the combinations of independent exhibitors in a few cities and the cut-price tactics of some exchanges during summer months. Hill was called as a witness by Famous Players.

Fred L. Cornwell, owner of the Delmonte Theater and former president of the Famous Players Missouri Corp., was the only other witness at the opening session. He told of general first run conditions in St. Louis, the ownership of theaters and matters of like nature. He is the only exhibitor that will be heard here. Several more exchange men will testify later.

The locale of the story is Puget Sound and the yarn itself deals with an attempt to despoil Indians of their lands.

Exhibitor Ass'n Patterned After Federal Government, Is Steffes' Plan

Indicates Allied State Organization Will Meet With M. P. T. O. A., But Insists Upon Naming the Terms—Won't Attend Buffalo Convention

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Minneapolis—Rejecting William Brandt's invitation to attend the Buffalo convention of the New York State M. P. T. O. where a plan of unison might be worked out by opposing exhibitor factions, W. A. Steffes, president of the Allied States Organization, has outlined a new scheme of organization.

His statement appears in the current issue of "Greater Amusements," under the caption, "Peace Terms Outlined," and gives in some detail what Steffes considers vital in order to negotiate terms with the present M. P. T. O. A. These are:

Disbandment of Allied and the M. P. T. O. A.

Naming of a committee on which both organizations as well as unaffiliated states have equal representation, with members given full power to act.

The Details

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Minneapolis—The details of W. A. Steffes' plan for a joint exhibitor organization, as outlined in "Greater Amusements," follow:

A committee of three, or greater proportionate number, would be named, with all of the three factions, the national body, the Allied group and unaffiliated states given equal representation. Members of this committee would have power to disband their respective organizations.

This committee would meet at some central point, to agree upon a new national association. A nomination ballot then would be prepared and sent to every theater owner of the United States, asking him to vote for a representative in his state. The territory highest in each state then would be declared nominated, and another vote be taken to elect a representative in each state.

O'Toole Silent

An advance copy of the Steffes plan was forwarded to Michael J. O'Toole, president of the M. P. T. O. A., yesterday for comment. Mr. O'Toole declared he could make no statement until we had studied it and intimated that he may communicate with Steffes direct.

Formation of a new association embracing all factions, governed by a president and board of directors, members of which are to be elected by popular ballot in the states they represent.

Raising of $250,000 to carry on organization work.

Steffes declared that he cannot speak directly for Allied, but inasmuch as he heads that organization, embracing many important states, it seems safe to assume that his plan will carry weight.

In declining Brandt's invitation, Steffes pointed out that his action was not to be construed as being opposed to conciliation. Declaring that a new start must be made, he states in "Greater Amusements":

"We recognize the need for a unified national organization, but it must be an organization built along the right lines, with railroading and 'the spoils system' completely divorced from its administration."

Steffes' plan is comparable with the construction of the Federal Government. It calls for equal representation from each state, so that "the spoils system," as he refers to it, can be effectively eliminated. The details of the plan of organization will be found in an adjoining column.

convention of the Jersey unit officially started yesterday and although no actual business occurred, the sentiment for Woodhull was apparent.

Yesterday was registration day and that was all that was done. Last night, there was a dance at the Casino at which were present Barbara La Marr, Larry Semon, George Beban, Sigrid Holmquist, Gaston Glass, Hugh Thompson, Dagmar Godowsky, Ben Lyons, Flora Le Breton and Walter McGrail.

Many of the important circuit owners brought down their house managers. The Fabians will have ten here, the Hildinger enterprises about fifteen and Hecht circuit, about six. A smattering of exhibitors from Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut and New York is expected. A special committee of the national exhibitor body will also attend.

At the banquet tonight at the New Monterey, Louella O. Parsons, of the New York American will be toastmaster. It is here that most of the speeches will be made, included an expected one from M. J. O'Toole. The Jersey unit now represents 470 houses and an individual exhibitor membership of 160.

Arrangements are in charge of Harry P. Nelson, who, when he is not handling convention matters is a police judge in Elizabeth. Nelson has handled the five Jersey meetings to date. He must do them well, because no one ever thinks of transferring the honor.

(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

Warren Cook is playing a character role in "The Story Without a Name", Irvin Willat's current picture for Famous. Agnes Ayres and Tony Moreno head the cast.

The Details

The 48 representatives then would meet and call a convention of theater owners in the fall. Under the plan, the 48 representatives, if desirous of reducing their number for expediency, would name a sub-committee which would constitute a board of directors.

This board would have power to elect a president, as well as all others, would have jurisdiction over all employes, and would be vested, in fact, with all the powers of administration, with a two-thirds vote of a convention necessary to override any of the board's decisions. The representatives, or board members, would be elected each year by the same process as that originally employed.

The system of administration, patterned after the nation's form of government, would eliminate "the spoils system," for each representative or board member would be elected by his own state. This would assure equal representation and more efficient government, for the reason that each representative would know the sentiment of his constituents, and would be answerable to them at the elections, for his conduct in office.

A convention would be held each year, and, with election of officers eliminated, could devote all of its time to constructive accomplishment, calling to the attention of the board the things wanted done. Two hundred fifty thousand dollars would have to be raised immediately to carry on organization work.

"Changing Husbands" at the Box Office

CHANGING HUSBANDS, the FAMOUS FORTY release for August 11th, is being given pre-release showings this week at the Rivoli, New York, and the Metropolitan, Los Angeles. Exhibitors who have booked THE FAMOUS FORTY will be as pleased as we are at the excellent business the picture is doing at both houses and the enthusiastic way it is being received by public and critics alike.

"CHANGING HUSBANDS has the whole town laughing and crowds are storming the Metropolitan Theatre to get in on the fun," says a wire from Los Angeles. And here are some reviews:

"'Changing Husbands' is in six reels, a hundred laughs, and about nineteen gasps. Leatrice Joy is marvelous in the dual role. Miss Joy is gorgeously beautiful in this picture as well as gorgeously artistic. Victor Varconi is wonderfully attractive and gives a flawless characterization. What a wonderful kid that Raymond Griffith is. And what a great comedienne Zasu Pitts has become." —Los Angeles Times.

"Leatrice Joy gives every promise of becoming one of the foremost cinema stars. Her dual characterization and work in 'Changing Husbands' is far superior to anything she has done before on the screen. Raymond Griffith improves with each new role. When his name is listed in a cast one may look forward to enjoying every moment he is shown cavorting on the screen." —Los Angeles Daily News.

CHANGING HUSBANDS has the disadvantage in New York of opening in the first real hot week of the summer. In spite of this, business has been great and the crowds have not been slow in showing that here is exactly the type of picture they want. The reviewers say:

"It is one of Paramount's Famous Forty and bids fair to be one of those rare cinema pieces which lives up to its advance notices. Yesterday's audience was amused and entertained and showed no hesitancy in expressing its feelings. The laughter was practically continuous." —N. Y. Evening Bulletin.

"You really ought to like 'Changing Husbands.' It is good entertainment. All very amusing." —N. Y. Daily News.

"There is so much packed into this picture that one leaves with the feeling of having witnessed a comedy and the circus all in one afternoon." —N. Y. Times.

Here is just a taste of what THE FAMOUS FORTY can do in actual performance. Are YOU going to play them?

Newspaper Opinions

New York

"The Perfect Flapper"—First Nat'l Strand

AMERICAN—Colleen Moore is one of the best comedians on the screen. She never misses a chance to put over a scene and she seems to have a natural affinity for getting the best out of every comedy situation.

BULLETIN—* * * reflects the feeling that the players enjoyed making "The Perfect Flapper." Certainly every girl and woman in New York will enjoy seeing it.

DAILY NEWS—You're going to love her work in this picture. She isn't afraid to laugh and she isn't afraid to cry. Her sense of comedy in the scene where she innocently gets ginney is beyond criticism.

EVENING JOURNAL—Miss Moore is vivaciously attractive, and although the story is not as well balanced, * * * as "Flaming Youth," there are several snappy situations, and an entertaining plot.

EVENING WORLD—* * * is not perfect, by a long shot. However, it is certain that the modern generation will get a great deal of pleasure from seeing their own antics and doings depicted on the screen.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—Colleen Moore's cleverness and her dexterity in this type of role, together with good work in the emotional scenes, relieves the monotony of the story.

POST—There isn't anything very startling about it, pro or con, but it provides fairly pleasant entertainment, and Colleen Moore is very huggable, what time she isn't acting in such silly fashion that you'd like to spank her.

SUN—When our heroine is on the screen this photoplay entertains. It does so, however, without much aid from the scenario * * *

"The Perfect Flapper" is Colleen Moore at her best.

TELEGRAM—They made no mistake in naming the new film at the Mark Strand Theater this week, for Miss Moore is indeed "The Perfect Flapper." John Francis Dillon directed the picture, which is an admirable lead in the big program.

TIMES—Colleen Moore * * * is entirely satisfactory in her portrayal of the unsophisticated girl who subsequently imbibes too much knowledge.

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—While going to great lengths for the purpose of amplifying the feminine lightweights the picture looks a certainty as a program leader in the upper class houses.

"Revelation"—Metro-Gwyn. Capitol

AMERICAN—"Revelation," I should say, is a picture that reviewers try to forget. But I have to say in all fairness that when I peeped in at the Capitol yesterday, the audience seemed to be enjoying it.

BULLETIN—Miss Dana's performance is a creditable one * * *. It is far too long and this detracts considerably from its entertainment value.

EVENING WORLD—* * * fails to reveal very much to us * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—* * * Reflects great credit upon its producers, and upon everyone concerned in its making. It tells a fine, serious story, finely and seriously. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—* * * suitable for all theaters except those where the patrons demand violence and the strong arm.

POST—A lovely story, poorly done * * * Viola Dana and Monte Blue * * * fail to get out of their parts any more than a small segment of the dramatic flavor in them.

TELEGRAM—There is colorful and vivid screen in the story of Joline, a model of the Paris Montmartre * * *

TIMES—* * * Possesses a fair quota of entertainment. The scenic effects are emphatically impressive. * * * Most of the interior settings are decidedly pleasing.

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—The picture is decidedly draggy in spots and as it now runs an hour and a quarter, could easily stand further cutting, which might speed it up somewhat.

WORLD—The audience yesterday seemed to think it was magnificent, while we allowed it was pretty terrible.

"Unguarded Women"—F. P.-L. Rialto

AMERICAN—Whoever had the bright idea that Miss Daniels could play something more than a bread and butter miss had more than a mere hunch. He had an inspiration. Her performance * * * by far the best thing she has ever done.

BULLETIN—One might well quarrel with the solution * * * as provided by the author. The idea of a widow killing herself to be with her dead husband, and incidentally to evolve a "happy" ending for another pair of lovers * * *

But that does not keep the picture from being engrossing throughout.

DAILY MIRROR—* * * Characterizations are distinct and dextrous, and if at times you have difficulty in following the plot all you have to do is to watch Leatrice Joy's facial expression and she will give the keynote to the proceedings.

HERALD-TRIBUNE—Alan Crosland's direction has made this story something better than the usual screen regeneration. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—The lighting and photography are also worthy of note, and whether the story appeals to you, there will always be something pleasing on the screen to meet the eye.

POST—* * * is notable for its all round excellence * * * is mighty interesting and way above the summer season average.

SUN—* * * it must be admitted without reserve that Bebe Daniels, Richard Dix, Mary Astor, Walter McGrail and the highly theatrical crises in which they entangled themselves are thoroughly entertaining. * * * "Unguarded Women" is sometimes preposterous but never boring.

TELEGRAM—* * * picture has the assistance of those star players, Bebe Daniels, Richard Dix and Mary Astor. * * * excellent adaptation * * *

TIMES—There are some good scenes in China, and the acting of Walter McGrail, who impersonates Trent, is especially compelling. The subtitles of this picture are too lofty and verbose.

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—As the feature for any house, "Unguarded Women" is okay. This is largely due to the splendid work of Dix and Miss Astor, as Miss Daniels has an unattractive role which is not relieved by her playing.

Out-of-Town

"The Bedroom Window"—F. P.-L. Century, Baltimore

AMERICAN—It is a pleasure to see Ethel Wales walk away with the photoplay * * * "The Bedroom Window" is a good picture as murder-mystery pictures go, and Miss Wales is the best thing about it.

SUN—* * * strikes us as being about the best of the murder-mystery movies to which we have laid an eye for many moons. * * * The picture, among other things, gives Ethel Wales her biggest part to date. * * * De Mille's direction, * * * is excellent and among the best he has ever given us.

Fenway, Boston

TRANSCRIPT—Makes the spectator go home wondering * * * how the producer managed to spend all the time he did on incidents which * * * appear to flit themselves by without the passage of time at all * * * how so many good actors can possibly have given him the impression of having accomplished absolutely nothing in the delights of their profession.

Capitol, Cincinnati

COMMERCIAL TRIBUNE—* * * full of suspense of a particularly breath-taking nature.

POST—* * * we are bound to say that this is a good mystery photoplay.

Granada, San Francisco

(Week Ending June 14)

BULLETIN—* * * is a mystery comedy of the highest order, with a wealth of dramatic episodes that work to a smashing climax * * *

CALL and POST—It's theme is unique. It is a mystery comedy drama in which both the principals, the heroine and the villain, are unknown almost until the last scenes of the picture.

CHRONICLE—A fascinating and absorbing tale, this, with murder as its foundation and the working out of the problem as to who committed it for the superstructure.

DAILY HERALD—It is a capital comedy mystery picture.

DAILY NEWS—* * * has the merit of being good fun, or telling its yarn for the yarn's sake, and of being more than fairly probable.

EXAMINER—The story works up to a thrilling climax after a series of scenes of a highly dramatic nature.

JOURNAL—So absorbing is the theme of the story and the excellent characterization of this actress that it is easy to accept the minor flaws in the rest of the picture.

"Broadway After Dark"—Warners Regent, Rochester

JOURNAL—* * * it is all set forth by an excellent cast and the result is a sophisticated, amusing drama. Adolph Menjou has the leading role, and the others apparently have taken their cue from the beautiful restraint and finish of his acting.

HERALD—* * * is making brilliant the Regent Screen for the week. * * *

TIMES-UNION—Monta Bell, the director, has done a very clever piece of work with Owen Davis' old stage play, on the whole, though the result of his work is nothing to deserve very serious consideration and, here and there, merits criticism for lapses to unpardonable cheapness.

"The Broken Wing"—Preferred Hipp, Cleveland

NEWS—There is plenty of action in the picture, but somehow it doesn't seem to register. There are a few comedy touches that will bring laughter from the audience. * * *

PLAIN DEALER—* * * pretty interesting and well done. It hasn't much action but an undercurrent of genial humor saves it from tediousness. Miriam Cooper, as the heroine, looks more attractive and alluring than we have ever seen her. * * * Walter Long plays the Mexican bandit excellently—

PRESS—A rather interesting picture * * *

"Cytherea"—1st Nat'l Garrick, Minneapolis

TRIBUNE—Lewis Stone gives a finished characterization as the middle aged man * * * elopes with a society woman. Alma Rubens, * * * is at all times good and displays a gorgeous array of costumes. Irene Rich gives an excellent portrayal of the wife.

"The Dancing Cheat"—Universal Rivoli, St. Louis

POST DISPATCH—The locale of "The Dancing Cheat" makes it unusually interesting.

STAR—"The Dancing Cheat," * * * is third rate. Alice Lake and Herbert Rawlinson are the stars. * * * And the plot is ridiculous.

TIMES—"The Dancing Cheat," * * * lives up to all promises of entertaining potentialities.

"Daring Youth"—Principal Alhambra, Milwaukee

JOURNAL—William Beaudine directed the picture. He has made it better than average entertainment and has even given bits of inspiration to some scenes. * * *

Bebe Daniels is nice to look upon and wears stunning clothes * * * However, she has done much, much better work.

"The Fighting American"—Universal Randolph, Chicago

TRIBUNE—* * * while not one to wring your hearts one way or the other, is a pleasant enough program production. Not a great deal of sense to it—but enough.

Bway, Strand, Detroit

FREE PRESS—* * * a rousing good adventure story. * * * it is typical of red-blooded young America from the very start.

NEWS—* * * and it must greatly redound to the credit of William Elwell Oliver, who wrote "The Fighting American," that he has splendidly realized on a big chance. Credit is likewise due Tom Forman, the director, whose sense of satire seems to be as highly developed as that of Mr. Oliver.

TIMES—The picture is melodramatic and, naturally, full of thrills. Pat O'Malley, in the leading role, does everything that Frank Merriwell could have done in his Merriwellist days.

"The Galloping Fish"—1st Nat'l Circle, Indianapolis

STAR—* * * a gay farce, with a cast of experts who have graduated from the two-reelers. * * * There are plenty of laughs in this new Ince film, and the flood sequence, with a circus menagerie floating about provides some good comedy thrills.

"How To Educate a Wife"—Warners Rialto, Washington

HERALD—The direction of Monta Bell deserves high praise. * * * The acting of Marie Prevost and Monte Blue in the leading roles is a thing worth seeing.

The action moves zippily, amusingly with good tempo. The comedy element, while not overemphasized, is fine.

STAR—* * * a delightful satire on conditions in the modern home, * * * well directed by L. Monta Bell.

TIMES—* * * merry entertainment for both men and women, aided chiefly by Marie Prevost, Monta Bell, Claude Gillingwater and Creighton Hale.

BULLETIN—*** without doubt, Rex, the equine actor, has never had an equal in his particular line.

CALL and POST—The performance of this horse is nothing short of wonderful. There is not a scene in which Rex does not fulfill every demand made of him ***

CHRONICLE—Hal Roach deserves credit for the fine way in which he produced this picture.

"The Love Prisoner" California, San Francisco

(Week Ending June 14)
BULLETIN—Miss Novak has a dual role *** Her work upon the whole is convincing, although there are some lapses.

CALL and POST—*** not only touches the heart but unfolds a well told story. The situations are dramatic *** and hold the interest as few pictures ever do.

CHRONICLE—Starting with an unpleasant theme, Director Whitman Bennett has made of it a picture that shows honesty and a great deal of technical skill.

DAILY HERALD—It is an interesting production *** the star creditably acquits herself in the double role, leading to a gripping climax.

DAILY NEWS—Its honesty of telling *** and power place it wholly out of the common run of films. It belongs to the rarely seen *** pictures that adults may take seriously.

EXAMINER—The dramatic fervor of the picture is very intense, allowing Miss Novak wide scope of interpretation.

JOURNAL—"The Love Prisoner" may possibly possess the germ of a great idea, but nobody wants to look at a motion picture through a microscope.

"A Man's Mate"—Fox Strand, Washington

HERALD—John Gilbert gives a pleasing performance, *** picture holds the attention throughout. Mr. Gilbert is ably supported by Renee Adoree.

“Metropolitan Way in Front Last Week at $26,000 for ‘Wanderer of the Wasteland’”

—Variety

A few days ago I disclosed on this page the fact that Paramount, following the special midnight showing at the Rialto, had received a flattering offer from a theatrical organization to roadshow Irvin Willat's Technicolor production of Zane Grey's WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. I said then that I believed WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND was a $2 show if there ever was one. After learning of the business done by this FAMOUS FORTY super-picture at the Metropolitan, Los Angeles, and after reading what the critics have to say about it, I am convinced that in releasing WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND direct to exhibitors on August 11th Paramount is offering you the greatest bargain you will meet with this Fall.

How often do you find critics saying things like these about a picture:

“‘Wanderer of the Wasteland’ is the first thoroughly satisfactory all-color film I have ever seen. A joy to the eye. The plot is so good and the acting so excellent, the picture would be well worth seeing even in black and white. It has much of the appeal of ‘The Covered Wagon.’ Contains one of the biggest thrills of the season. Going to be remembered a long time. If you are careless enough to miss ‘Wanderer of the Wasteland,’ don't blame me.”
—Pictureplay Magazine.

“The result is amazing. A marvelous improvement. The play itself is filled with incident. The story is intriguing and wistful, despite its moment of thrills.”
—Los Angeles Examiner.

“The story is unusually attractive and quite a relief.” —Los Angeles Daily News.

“When you view ‘Wanderer of the Wasteland’ you will witness a treat for the eyes. We unhesitatingly aver it is our most enjoyable screen entertainment in many moons.”
—Los Angeles Herald.

“With this perfected color process a new door has been unlocked in filmdom.”
—Los Angeles Express.

“It is like looking from a window at a beautiful changing panorama of color and watching a play at the same time to view ‘Wanderer of the Wasteland.’ Pray for the day when color photography will be the rule. Adds ten-fold to the vividness. The picture is a thing of beauty and joy.”
—Los Angeles Times.

End To "Blue" Laws

The principal development yesterday was the banquet at the New Monterey at which addresses were made by M. J. O'Toole, Harry Davis, Sydney S. Cohen, Peter J. Brady, Judge David, of Union County; M. E. Comerford, Joseph W. Walsh, the Rev. Steinmetz, of Trenton and Miss May Carty, a member of the State Assembly. The entertainment was supplied by Jack Linder.

At the banquet, a number of gifts were presented. Herman F. Jans was presented with a wrist watch; Mrs. Joseph Seider, a traveling bag; Mrs. Woodhull, a wrist watch; Harry P. Nelson, a diamond stick-pin and Treasurer Keegan, a traveling bag.

The election of officers will be held today. Woodhull is still firm in his intention not to run again for the presidency.

A probable change in the present constitution concerns the directors' terms. It is planned to place them on a rotating basis; three to serve three years; three to serve two years and three to serve one year each.

Anthony Ricci of the Apollo exchange, New York, put over an effective exploitation stunt, when he managed to get into each exhibitor's room, a pillow case on which appeared the new Warner line-up for the fall. Most of the exhibitors spent yesterday morning in the surf.

American distributors are asking exorbitant prices for the class of pictures available, according to Sydney Friedman, joint managing director of F. B. O., Ltd., of England who sailed for home yesterday afternoon.

Newspaper Opinions

"Changing Husbands"—F. P.-L. Rivoli

AMERICAN—The cast is fine, also are the sets and photography, but the story just is not there.

BULLETIN—* * * bids fair to be one of those rare cinema pieces which lives up to its advance notices. * * * audience was considerably amused and entertained and showed no hesitancy in expressing its feelings. * * *

DAILY NEWS—You really ought to like "Changing Husbands." It's an answer to the mourners who are continually saying, "It isn't a bit like life, not a bit."

"Changing Husbands" isn't like life. But it is good entertainment.

EVENING JOURNAL—* * * keeps the entire cast busy, with Leatrice Joy enacting a double role, and seeming to enjoy herself in proportion to her appearances. * * *

The picture starts out cleverly with extremely well written titles, but ends up in a free-for-all comedy. * * *

EVENING WORLD—* * * presents quite a number of more or less amusing situations in the development of the so-called plot. Miss Joy plays a dual role and does her best, which, as usual, is "going some" * * *

HERALD-TRIBUNE—Miss Joy has scored personally in a pleasing portrayal, while the rest of the picture heaves and struggles in deadly earnest to be funny. At times it is amusing. * * *

MORNING TELEGRAPH—Leatrice Joy is pretty much the whole picture. She has a dual role calling for two distinct characterizations, and measures up to the demands admirably. Despite the weakness of the story, it will doubtless prove popular. * * *

POST—* * * one of the blabest films we've seen in some time.

SUN—* * * it is not easy to see why "Changing Husbands" is at all funny. It is a labored and clumsy attempt, and were it not for the presence of Miss Joy's leavening beauty it would be beyond the well known pale.

TIMES—* * * so much packed into the picture that leaves one with the feeling of having witnessed a comedy and a circus. * * * Some parts * * * are fairly well produced, but the profusion of slapstick scenes cause one to groan. * * *

TIMES SQUARE DAILY—It is a light waisted feature as it now stands, measuring up to the average program production and is mildly entertaining.

"Sherlock, Jr."—Metro-Goldwyn Warfield, San Francisco

(Week ending June 14)

BULLETIN—There are touches of originality * * * which make this one entertaining.

CALL and POST—There are plenty of good gags in "Sherlock, Jr."

CHRONICLE—* * * it is a laugh from start to finish.

DAILY HERALD—* * * told in a rapid series of convulsively funny scenes and situations that never permit the interest to lag.

DAILY NEWS—* * * first rate fun in Keaton's best manner. * * *

EXAMINER—* * * the whole comedy is one continuous series of laughs.

JOURNAL—The picture can be classed as Keaton's best.

"A Society Scandal"—F. P.-L. New Mission, San Francisco

(Week Ending June 14)

BULLETIN—The picture is both a dramatic achievement and a dazzling fashion show.

CALL and POST—Gloria Swanson never offered more marvelous acting nor wore a more gorgeous array of gowns. * * *

CHRONICLE—Gloria Swanson shines forth again in shimmering gowns. * * *

EXAMINER—Gloria Swanson never offered such acting nor wore such an array of marvelous gowns as she does in * * * "A Society Scandal."

AUDIENCES

By DANNY

How to build them. How to develop them. How to get new faces at your box office line-up. And how to keep them coming. One of the real problems faced by any and every exhibitor. (No, I'm not so keen on calling them showmen or even theater owners, as per Sydney Cohen. Because a lot of them aren't showmen and don't own their theaters. And some that do shouldn't. And if you don't believe that ask Joe Brandt.)

Here is one way to develop new audiences: Try to interest them with miniature opera as "Roxy" is doing at the Capitol. They've been working mighty well at the big house. No sign of diminishing interest. And many of the music loving crowd that never bother with "movies" like to drop in. To hear the old favorites. And they get the picture going habit. And then you have more regulars.

Joe Schenck says going to pictures is nothing but a habit. And proves his point by declaring that when the poor picture cycle arrives the crowd loses the habit. And it's tough to get them coming again—in other words it's hard to renew the habit. And he's right.

The Capitol idea isn't new. Tom Sorriero, who operates the Whitehurst houses in Baltimore, says it was a big hit when they worked it at the New Theater. "We ran the condensed operettas for 35 weeks in a row," says Tom, "and we built a lot of new fans, as well as pleasing our regulars." At the New they worked in the popular Gilbert & Sullivan shows and had Milton Aborn directing. It cost a bit but according to Sorriero it was well worth it.

The idea seems particularly good for the hot weather season. When it's difficult to get good pictures. You can put over almost any kind of a bill if you have it toned up right. So if you can't land some deserving sort of pictures bolster the bill with one of these

Sievers Testifies

Exhibitors Entered Distribution Before Famous Started Theater Buying Campaign
(Special to THE FILM DAILY)

St. Louis—Cross-examination of William Sievers on behalf of Famous Players brought forth the assertion here at the Federal Trade Commission hearing that important exhibitors entered distribution before Famous had launched its theater acquisition campaign.

Sievers, former owner of the New Grand Central and the original Missouri franchise holder in First National told of the formation of First National in New York. Sievers said that the original twenty-two members of First National owned what was then regarded as the best picture theaters in the country and that the exhibitors formed the company to acquire and control pictures for exhibition in their own theaters and for later distribution to other showmen. Harry Graham of Pathe, Jack Weil of Selznick, and Jack Underwood of Enterprise Distributing all testified that the local market was free and that competition among distributors was active.

not, if possible, give aid to producers who are crushing exhibitors.

Sole credit was given to the M. P. T. O. A. for the repeal of the admission and seating taxes by O'Toole, who dwelt in lengthy fashion on this matter.

Fights are being waged in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Maryland, said O'Toole, for the abolition of the "blue" laws. He also reported that New York exhibitors had pledged $20,000 to the M. P. T. O. A. for the national working funds, and that New Jersey exhibitors had promised $2,000 for the same purpose.

Abe Fabian urged O'Toole to do all in his power to have the daylight saving ordinance repealed in New York State, declaring that it was a real menace to exhibitors, and that unless New York does something along these lines, New Jersey is powerless, because the proximity of the two states compels them to work on the same time.

"The Enemy Sex" Opens Sunday

If you can possibly arrange it, go to the Rivoli Theatre, New York, next week and see THE ENEMY SEX. Whether you've booked or will book this production or not, you'll be very pleasantly entertained. And you'll have the opportunity of looking over in advance a picture that is going to make a ton of money for a big army of exhibitors when it's released as one of THE FAMOUS FORTY on August 25th.

I don't know how James Cruze does it. He produces a monumental epic of the past like THE COVERED WAGON, and then he turns right around and rings the bell again with THE ENEMY SEX, which is a behind-the-scenes story of Broadway as ultra-modern as the new Follies. No wonder that in the recent contest Photoplay Magazine conducted among its 500,000 readers to determine the best directors in the motion picture business James Cruze ranked very near the top.

There are generous slabs of typical Cruze humor in THE ENEMY SEX. But it is much more than a comedy-drama in a flashy setting. Cruze has taken a Broadway butterfly heroine and shown not only the colorful tinsel life she leads but shown also the pure gold there is in this girl, her real feelings, struggles and ambitions. And he has done it without mawkish sentiment or bunkum. THE ENEMY SEX is far and away above other pictures of its type because it is entertainment for the heart as well as for the eye.

Betty Compson plays the heroine. I honestly believe she equals the performance she gave in "The Miracle Man," but see the picture and decide that for yourself. Percy Marmont, Huntly Gordon, Kathlyn Williams, and Sheldon Lewis are members of the cast too and do exceptionally.

If I know anything about pictures, Broadway won't see enough of THE ENEMY SEX in a week at the Rivoli. I predict the crowds and the business will force its being held over another week or so on Broadway and that the intake will be larger the second week than it was the first. For THE ENEMY SEX is the kind of a picture that builds business for itself by word of mouth, something which is true of the rest of THE FAMOUS FORTY also.

No. 392 Straight from the Shoulder Talks

by Carl Laemmle

President of the Universal Pictures Corporation

I am about to go abroad for a rest.

I am dog tired from the neck up!

The only reason on earth why I dare to take a rest is because I've completed the biggest, hardest, fastest job I ever tackled in all my picture career. I've got eleven out of the first twelve of the 1924-1925 pictures actually ready for you to see. And, if I do say it myself, they're great!

Every week while I am away I will receive a cablegram telling me the total amount of new contracts taken on during my absence. Also every week I will receive by mail A COPY OF EVERY CONTRACT, GREAT OR SMALL, so that no matter where I may be I will see your contract within two or three weeks after you have signed it.

That is my favorite indoor or outdoor sport—studying your contract to see whether I have rung the bell, whether I have guessed right as to the kind of pictures you want, whether the terrific work of the past few months has been well done.

The only possible way you can repay me for the extra effort I have made to get pictures completed so that

Message

Carl Laemmle

I could sell you finished pictures instead of mere advertising promises is to DO YOUR UNIVERSAL BOOKING IMMEDIATELY.

I've got to know that the millions of dollars which I have tied up in advance negatives—some of them finished months and months before I can possibly release them—are coming back to me with a reasonable degree of speed. Your contracts will give me the facts.

I've fixed it so you can look before you book. I've taken all the money I received from you and I've put it into completed pictures. I've scraped the bottom of the old money barrel to give you picture insurance, to wring every drop of guesswork out of this booking business.

Now it's your turn to pile up the contracts quick and fast—as fast as you see these new pictures of ours.

You've not a thing to lose by signing up instantly, not a blessed thing in the world. The pictures are done. You can judge whether you want them or not. The prices are the fairest on earth. And on top of all that, I'll guarantee you'll be satisfied.

So I'm leaving the whole thing up to you and my parting request is that you pile your contracts in so fast that the boats which bring 'em over to Europe will stagger under the load!

Goodbye and good luck!

Competition Nil

about 900 theaters are served out of St. Louis exchanges; that of the total, ninety-five per cent are owned by one individual or by one company and that competition is nil or practically nil for that reason.

As noted, Hill testified that he had experienced no difficulty in obtaining first runs in St. Louis and other key cities. In but one city, Springfield, Ill., had he been unable to dispose of all of his first-runs, and there he stated a combination of the exhibitors dictated prices. Paramount had to meet this situation as all other exchanges he said. He defended block system as a matter of economics, pointing out that it costs $15 or more every time a film salesman makes a town, and that if a company could sell twenty pictures at once, its expenses would be lower and it could afford to sell for less.

Famous was forced in self-defense to build a first-run in St. Louis to obtain an outlet for its product. That was the substance of the testimony of Fred L. Cornwell, owner of the Delmonte and formerly president of the Famous Players Missouri Corp., owner of the Missouri and which, during Cornwell's regime also owned the Delmonte and fourteen neighborhood theaters operated by the Koplars Bros.

Cornwell reviewed the history of first-runs, his testimony being intended to show that Famous had not been guilty of unfair methods of competition and that they had "endeavored to open up a closed market rather than to close an open one." However, Bruce Bromley, counsel for Famous was handicapped in getting the desired testimony from Cornwell into the record, Examiner Alvord sustaining many objections.

Efforts of Bromley to bring out that previous efforts had been made by other companies to obtain control of the Koplars chain were not permitted by Examiner Alvord.

Fuller also successfully resisted efforts to have Cornwell testify that Marcus Loew is completing a vaudeville and picture house at Eighth and Washington, and that Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan interests were financially assisting erection of a first-run at Grand and Morgan Street in which Famous would have no interest.

New Color Process

The color work being done for Lee-Bradford on their "Red Head" comedies and for "The World in Color," is being made by a new system worked out at the Kelley Laboratory at Palisades. Ordinary single coated stock is used. It is joined, polished and handled the same way all films are. The colors are in the single emulsion. It is said to be the least expensive film ever made from color selection negatives.
